And I am infatuated with the streets of Flatbush. Having lost the captive audience I enjoyed as teacher, I would like to share that enthusiasm nonetheless. Some streets are residential, some commercial, many a mixture. Each abdominably ugly house, of no discernible style or even shape, is fronted by a yard about the size of a card table which is usually taken very seriously by its owner. Here, hideous pastel plastic and plaster ducks, swans, rabbits, and saints vie for attention with one or two gracefully tended rose bushes, blooming oblivious to their lovely irony. Where there are stores, fully half sell strange foods undreamed of and audaciously un-American and more sophisticated delis, air-conditioned and promising to deliver, where the rough, warm kosher dialect simmers in a sauce of gentility. And rare is the corner without a candy store, a "Sweet Shoppe" as in Archie and Jughead comic books. Hunger in Flatbush is simply unthinkable. These minority groups, having just made it in the world, gorge themselves on assurance. Middleclassness takes concrete form; they inhale food. In a block one runs the gamut from vast, efficiently unfriendly supermarkets to one-man butcher shops (presided over by heavy, curly-haired fellows surreptitiously tattooed) to fruit stands (whose open, bright display spills sweetly onto the sidewalk) to pizza walk-ins (where you grab a slice on the run to be sure of reaching the next store before hunger strikes to the epitome of Flatbush, the delicatessen--a proud profusion, countless as the children of Israel. There are small delis where dusty salami dangles against the fly-specked window; exotic delis festooned in Hebrew and ritual, stocked with

The HAPPENINGS concert (Thanks Mo-T!)

It's a Grand Night for Singing—Mottee out of breath—half hour late, purple velvet bells, comedians, impersonators, singers? falsetto, carpet man, sweaty palms, shorter than average hair, Johnny Mathis? Dean Martin? Bob Dylan? Questioning glances--on stage and off, alumni covering their ears, and minds, a phony mustache, a tambourine well in tune, everyone bent out of shape, audience manipulation?

--Intermission--

El Paso County Jail, Dancing in the Aisles, Dancing in the Streets, Everyone Jammin', clapping hands, grooving to some great sounds. Exodus and the End. Silence.

Rumor has it that there was some dancing going on in the Chapel Saturday night; it could have really happened--and then again it just could be rumor. Ask someone that was there. If you weren't, you missed The Happenings!

Thanks Mottee!

editorial

In the Maryville College Bulletin is a section called "Purpose and Objectives." It starts off describing the alienation and frustration of 20th century man, and then in a huge leap of faith solves modern man's problems through dedication to the Christian faith. In the second paragraph, Maryville College urges us to love Jesus. And in the next paragraph we read that the M.C. faculty is dedicated to the Christian commitment. A prospective student would feel as if he were binding himself to an institution of Presbyterian zealots. What a trauma the new student experiences when he gets to M.C. and discovers that his colleagues are not religious ascetics but actually indulge in all sorts of Christian - labeled vices, such as drinking, sex, and now even dope, with some relish; and that religious feelings are left mainly in the catalogue. I wonder if it would behoove the administration to rewrite the Bulletin and put it in perspective with the people presently on campus; or are they in sympathy with the secular and only keep this religiosity to hoodwink parents into thinking their daughter is safer at M. C. than at a state school?

LETTERS

Dear Editor:

The purpose of this letter is to have published several criticisms of some conditions presently existing on Maryville campus. They are problems now confronting all freshmen taking the Science Thought and Philosophy 101 courses.

The most serious of the two is the one of the grading system now in use for major research papers in the Science Thought course. Six professors teach the course and the six individual teachers grade these papers, one teacher for one set of papers. This system leads to a conflicting grading scale and style of correcting, and allows for personal prejudices (although I won't claim any at this time). Maryville is a more progressive education system than this shows. I would like to submit that, for at least major papers, grading should be done on a collective basis. Two or more teachers should read each paper, writing notes on a separate paper, and then averaging the grades thereby benefitting the student with more than one viewpoint. This is more time-consuming, but it creates an equal basis for class competition, which is very important in the existing system.

These are my criticisms. The situation could have been handled in an adult manner in the first place, had the parties involved been asked, from the posium, to leave. Granting human fallacy on one side, and immaturity on the other, it, nevertheless, seems that there is a solution which would not visibly denote group "punishment." The use of this term will probably be argued by the faculty involved, but the action taken was and is a direct result of an earlier violation or, at least, appears to be (and has not been denied), and therefore, agrees with Webster's definition. It has been explained to me that the action taken is a measure incorporated so that the students desiring to hear the lecture may do so in peace, and the lecturer will not be disturbed.

NOVEMBER 14-15 MORATORIUM ORGANIZED

The New Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam is mounting a Fall Offensive to stop the war. It will culminate on November 15 in Washington and San Francisco in what may be the most significant anti-war demonstration in American history.

Maryville students must organize now if we are to participate. We can charter a bus on our own if enough are interested. Or we can coordinate with UT. The March Against Death begins Thursday Nov. 13 at midnight at Arlington Cemetery. Because of end-of-term complications, we would have to leave Friday afternoon Nov. 14 and would arrive in time for the massive march on Saturday. The schedule for that day is:

9:00 am - Assemble for Mass March at Mall between 3rd and 6th Streets
10:00 am - March Against Death ends with brief Memorial Service
11:00 am - Mass March to White House led by GI's. Delegation will present political demands and caskets containing names of dead.
2:00 pm - Rally at Ellipse, speakers and entertainment
8:00 pm - Meetings organized by various groups to discuss possible continuing activities.

If you are interested in going tell Jim Spotts (Box 2607) and we will organize a meeting soon.

CUES FOR BOREDOM

My next criticism involves the manner in which the recent "insurrection" during a Philosophy lecture was and is being handled. The disruption occurred when four or five pupils were talking in the rear of the auditorium, and one pupil, in another situation, refused to return his feet to the floor, and was finally asked, by a class assistant, to leave. Yours truly was at this lecture, and did not even have any notion that said "insurrection" had occurred. Due to this unhappy situation, freshmen at future lectures are forced to sit in rows, according to class, and, in some cases, are separated by a seat; but in most cases, urged on by one faculty member, has not been strictly enforced. The disturbance occurred in only one of the two lectures, but both classes must abide by the new rule. Another justification for this action was given that approximately sixty students were missing from the lectures, but our right to skip class and to flunk was explained to us at the beginning of the term. I have confronted the involved faculty members with the following criticisms, and, in two out of three cases, received something of a compromising attitude in that an intelligent discussion took place, but in one case, and a rather important one in this situation, the argument received was rhetorical, sarcastic, disrespectful, and very typical of a type used in grade school. This is all well and good, but the same result can be brought about in a much more adult manner, unless the faculty does not deny, as it already has, that this measure is meant to point out lack of maturity in the freshman class and embarrass the violators. Be assured that the action perpetrated against the freshman class is indeed an insult to our pride, but even more ironically, to the very ideal of coping with one's problems in a mature manner.

I appeal to the freshman class not to take these obvious deficiencies in your education with the complacency so far exhibited. We are college students now, and we do have the right to be treated with equal fairness and respect. There will be two petitions, one for each of these cases, in the post office today. Voice your opinion and sign them!

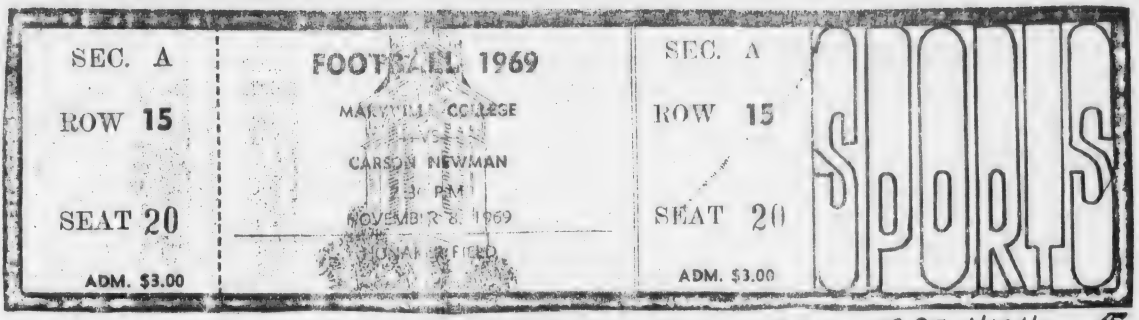
DORM FURNISHINGS INADEQUATE



A student living on campus pays $400.00 for a room. This is, of course, much cheaper than living in a motel, maybe even cheaper than living, communal fashion, in an apartment. Still, I would like to raise this question: What are we getting for $400? I shouldn't gripe this year, since I live in one of those citadels of luxury--a new dorm. But the memories of my room last year still haunt me, so I'll take you on a tour of it as it was when I arrived in September, 1968.

After fitting the key in the lock (I found out later that two turns on the door-knob would unlock it faster), I opened the door of my future abode, and great feelings overcame me--nausea! The catalog is technically right when it states that "All residence hall rooms contain wardrobes, single beds and mattresses, desks with built-in bookcases, chairs, and dressers." By wardrobes, I presume they mean the two rudimentary closets in the wall. My bed was unique. It was swayback! I slept for half the year on that unpleasant machine before a better bed was free. No amount of cardboard under the mattress (stuffed with what? I've always wondered, but been afraid to look) could straighten it, or make the mattress firm. The desk is one of those things with book-case ends, and only one drawer. The ends can just about hold one term's books and maybe some extra paper. The drawer is in the center, and is not deep enough to be of much use. My desk also had a warped top, meaning it could not very easily be written upon, which is an essential duty of such a contrivance. The chair was a refugee from the library with one of the rubber leg-cups missing, making it rather tipsy. I cured it with a pad of electrician's tape. My dresser was small but ok, after I borrowed a drawer to replace the one that was missing. Lighting is basic, just as the rest of the room. It consists of one bare bright bulb with no shade or diffuser under it, in a ceiling plug. This last is what really got me mad. This room was supposedly the place where a student would spend up to 45 hours a week studying, but the lighting was so poor that he gets eyestrain after the first hour.

Now that I have all that off my chest, let me recommend some things that ought to be done. First, provide better lighting; a desk lamp or floor lamp would be fine. Second, get better chairs, ones that are comfortable, such as the ones in the new dorms. Third, provide desks with drawers for those that would prefer them. Fourth, provide free-standing bookcases for students who request them. Fifth, get rid of all those beds which date from Isaac Anderson's era and replace them with ones which are at least Spartanly comfortable.

Many more things could probably be said, but the above should be enough to keep people busy for awhile. I think it is only fair to raise the quality of the room-furnishings up to the minimal standards of a civilized man, or else mention in the catalog, "We recommend that a student bring along approximately $50 to make these rooms livable."

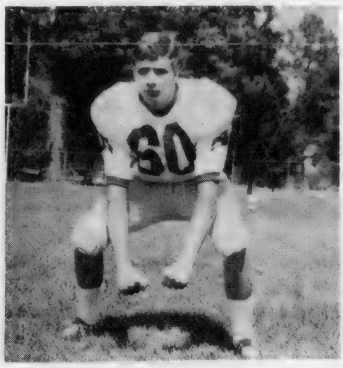
SCOTS FALL TO RANDOLPH-MACON



A late surge by the Scots failed to take back the lead from the strong Randolph-Macon Yellow Jackets here Saturday as the Jackets took the game 17-14. It was the Jackets 16th straight victory.

In the fourth quarter Bob Macy deflected a pass into the hands of W. N. Osborne who ran the ball 43 yards for a TD. Joe Costner ran 10 yards for the second Scot score. Jim Cannon booted both extra points. Late in the fourth quarter a penalty foiled the Scots' hopes of winning the game as the Scots pushed to the R-M 20 yard line.

Early in the game the Jackets recovered a fumble and capitalized on it with a 21 yard field goal. In the second quarter Howard Stevens--Little All-American choice last year--ran 53 yards for a touchdown, and Wayne Duncan plunged three yards after an intercepted pass set up the touchdown situation.

Commenting on Saturday's game Coach Tomlinson said that he thought the defense was the best he had seen here in 11 years. The Scot defense held Howard Stevens to only 13 yards rushing, with the exception of the one 53 yard touchdown run. Last year Stevens led the conference in rushing. "Student body support in the second half was great," said Tomlinson. It was "really appreciated" by the team, especially because they were down and had to come back. This week the Scots will need more of that support, so let's get out there and cheer!

Coach Tomlinson also has a request for the Student Body. If you know of any football player at your high school who is outstanding and that you feel would like to play college football, contact Coach Tomlinson's office. You will be doing the player and the Scots a big favor. Thanks!

PLAYER OF THE WEEK: MIKE PARKS

Mike Parks is a sophomore linebacker from Lawrenceville, Georgia. He is a letterman and a political science major. Mike is one of the toughest players on the squad, and is very aggressive. He improves with each game, and will be concentrating on reading the pass plays in order to improve his capabilities. He is a very strong defender against run plays. Mike is a hustler and a leader, and will be counted on heavily in the future. Along with Tom Ickes, Mike makes the Scots' linebacking a strong promise for squad. Coach Tomlinson cited Mike for his play in the Homecoming game, and we look forward to seeing Mike in plenty more exciting action during the second half of the season.

SCOTS SPORT HIGH HOPES AGAINST CENTER

This Saturday the Scots face Centre College at Honaker Field at 2 p.m. Head Coach Steele Harmon's Colonels have already won their conference (College Athletic Conference) championship with a 4-1 record for this season. Last year they were co-champions with Southwestern, and had a 5-3-1 season record. Centre will have 23 lettermen, including 12 seniors and 18 starters from the 1968 team. In 1968 the Colonels led the CAC in total offense with an average of 331.9 yards per game.

Coach Harmon expects "lack of depth and experience on defense," and is looking for "a good passing game led by returning quarterback Paul Ethridge." Ethridge was second last year in CAC passing with 1,029 yards on 87 completions of 170 attempts for 51%. Among offensive players to watch are pass receivers Doug Eaton and Marty Takacs. Defensively Stan Peskoe, end, and Mike Easley, back, will be leading the Colonels.

Coed Volleyball--There must be 4 boys and 4 girls on each team or the team will be invalid.

Make up your own roster and submit it to Box 2356 between October 17 and 29. The schedule will then be posted in the Intramural Gym.

TOUCH-DOWN IN RANDY-MACON GAME ←

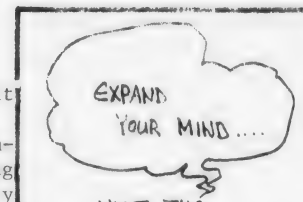
it, each block a banquet. No wonder everyone seems just a bit fat.



These people are comforted and made secure by signs and symbols. Nearly every window of every car is tattooed with flag decals. Approximately half the dashboards shelve a saintly line of madonnas and travel patrons, tilting a plastic arm in blessing towards the steering wheel. The car owners, by the way, drive as if heaven-bent for oblivion. Many auto and house windows bear the Star of David and an American flag closeby—may no one take offense! Bumper stickers are also talismans; one earnestly petitions the Pope to re-invest St. Patrick with Sainthood; others, less mystical, affirm the owners' reverence for the police department. A car boldly certain of its place in the scheme of things snarls "America: Love it or Leave it!" while four feet away the same owner has erected a yard-high St. Francis, eveing the sky in plaster piety. His bemused expression makes me wonder if he's quite decided which course of action would be most in character.

By such signs and symbols, the adults of Flatbush order the world. The children, even the very youngest, have a different code. Wherever young people gather, and as in all villages, they gather often, they have drawn the circular peace symbol in chalk, spray paint, the rust on girders-- everywhere, especially on the filmy cataract of vacant shop windows. Do these innocents so burn in agony over the fact of war that they feel compelled to take a stand on every smooth, accessible surface? I doubt it. (Some convert the symbol to a conventional heart and fill it with pairs of friendly initials.) It's simply their way of marking the territory of youth. The circled, stylized dove ascending has apparently replaced the traditional four letter word (one sees it so rarely; Holden Caufield would be relieved) as the graffito of initiation. I am aesthetically pleased by this transference and philosophically flattered, but I do not delude myself that it signals the age of Aquarius.

School has just begun here. Most children attend a vast Catholic school nearby, determinedly rumpling their stiff, new uniforms on the short walk, while an army of nuns, determinedly neat, determinedly tolerant of the assertively kosher delis in their path, march from the convent to the school. After school, the boys play football; after school, the girls play school. One girl, the assured arrogance of a future teacher peeking through the baby fat, conducts her friends in re-enacting today's class with Sister Cecilia. Tongue between her teeth, she scrawls on a small blackboard a catechism: 1) What is God? 2) Who does he ask of us? 3) How do we get knowledge of Him? Awed and irritated by how easily a seven-year-old can write the questions, I wonder if she shall ever realize the difficulty of answers. With a burst of fellow-feeling, fitting for a village, I hope she never does and flash my best smile. They smile back; they always do. These are the most vivid, vital, at east and unencumbered children I've ever seen.

Two blocks away is the subway, across a high pedestrian bridge literate with peace symbols, weathered tributes to eternal love (one can trace the romantic evolution of a certain Rory through several girlfriends), admonitions to dump Lindsay (the most vehement of which always leave the "a" out of his name) and claims that this is "Testor's Turf" and "Property of the East 4th St. Boys." Having read about New York gangwars, I shivered in my bellbottoms (regulation New York attire--I'm sure there are babies here in bellbottom diapers) but soon learned the labels refer only to the noisy mobs who play ball from dinner to dusk on my street. They do so, by the way, with a cleanliness of language that is amazing, largely because any vocal indiscretion brings an angry assortment of mothers to the open windows.

Anyhow, two blocks away is the subway which rumbles, roars, and shortly surfaces in one of Brooklyn's ugliest areas. A hundred feet above the street, the train literally slows--the great Manhattan skyline shimmers in view. Flatbush and THE CITY pause in confrontation. This noisy tasteless tangle of life for which I feel such early and surprising affection weighs against the twilight skyline where the late, harbor-dipping sun whitens the gray towers and gilds every distant window like a dream of diamonds. And I am very happy to be here--in my neighborhood. Drop in sometime. 42 East 4th Street.

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to say "thank you" to two deserving groups of people. The first group consists of all the planners, workers, administrators, and everyone else that made possible the completion of the new student center. This is probably the best thing that has happened to Maryville since, well, would you believe Isaac Anderson!?!

The second group that needs to be mentioned are the hard-working people who took the time-consuming job of planning the successful Homecoming weekend.

We once again say a hearty thanks to these deserving people.

Gratefully,
Bob Eickelberg

BALI-JAVA-SUNDR TO PREFORM AT M.C. THURS.

The Budaya Troupe from Indonesia, consisting of 16 dancers, musicians, and a puppeteer from Bali, Java and Sunda, will perform Thursday, Nov. 20, at 8:15 p.m. in Wilson Chapel on the Maryville College campus.

Asia has no richer cultural tradition than Indonesia's. The grace and intricacy of Javanese dance, the spellbinding music of the gamelan orchestra, the rich and exotic tradition of shadow puppets and live actors with masks and painted faces are distinctly Indonesian–and fantastically appealing to both those who already know Indonesia's performing arts and to those who have never seen them before.

For many years Indonesia did not allow her best performers to travel to the West. Now the international situation has changed and the Indonesian government is bringing a troupe of 15 performers to the United States. The troupe will present a broad cross-section of Indonesian performing arts by relating the story of the great Hindu epic, the Ramayana, through different art forms. For example a comic scene will be depicted through wayang orang (live actors), a scene from the love story of Rama and Sita through Javanese dance, and a battle scene through wayang kulit (shadow puppets).

MESSIAH

Fourteen soloists have been selected to perform in the thirty-seventh annual presentation of Handel's Messiah at Maryville College. Featuring a 175 voice chorus and 40 piece orchestra composed of college and community musicians, the oratorio is an inspiring religious experience, drawing a capacity audience each year. Over 1200 persons are expected to hear this year's presentation scheduled for Sunday afternoon, November 9, at 3 p.m. in the Wilson Chapel.

Dan Kinsinger, tenor and assistant professor of music at the College, is slated to perform the recitative, "Comfort Ye My People," and the air "Every Valley." Mel Wilhite, a tenor and director of music at the First United Methodist Church of Maryville, will sing the recitative, "Thy Rebuke," and the air, "Behold and See."
"Then Shall the Eyes," and the air, "He Shall Feed His Flock."

Scheduled to sing soprano solos are: Carolie Fisher, senior music major from Wilmington, Del., with two ariosos, "And Lo the Angel" and "And Suddenly," and two recitatives, "There Were Shepherds" and "And the Angel Said"; Jean Fleming, junior music major from Erie, Pa., performing the air "Come Unto Him"; and Sue Yehl, junior music major from Hammonton, N.J., singing the air "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth."

The trumpet solo for the air, "The Trumpet Shall Sound," will be performed by James Buxton, sophomore music major from Englewood, Ohio.

Bass soloists are: Charles Ball, sophomore music major from Alcoa, who will sing the recitative, "For Behold, Darkness"; Doug Barber, junior music major from Knoxville, singing the recitative, "Behold I Tell You A Mystery," and the air, "The Trumpet Shall Sound"; Mike Bullard, senior psychology major from Knoxville, performing the recitative, "Thus Saith the Lord"; James Daugherty, senior music major from Staunton, Va., who will sing the air,

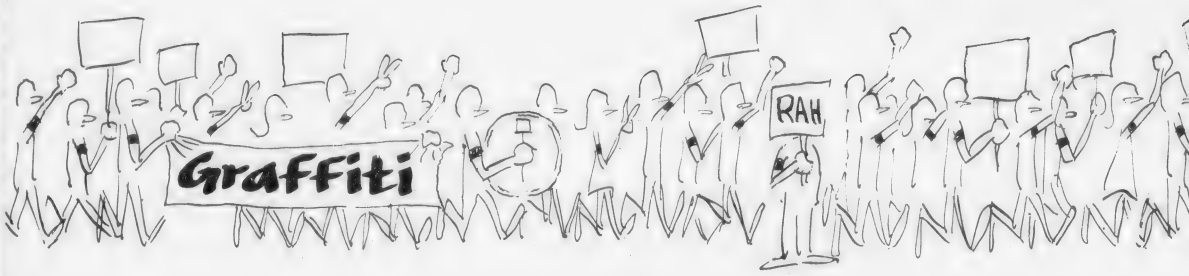
M. HARRINGTON • Tonight 8:30



Hunger, despair, loneliness–this is poverty, this and so much more. America is beginning to understand this problem of poverty, but how to abolish it is still as complexing and absorbing as it was in the past. One man has said he has the answer, so we sit on the edge of our chairs and marvel–an answer? Mr. Michael Harrington says that he can abolish poverty, but wonders if America can lift her mighty hand and help the poor in our rich, fat country.

Born in St. Louis in 1928, Mr. Harrington first became involved with this problem when he helped feed and clothe Bowery derelicts at the Catholic Worker House in New York. Later involvement came in working with Arkansas Sharecroppers, with Mexican-American migrant workers in Southern California, and coal miners in Appalachia. These experiences led to extensive research and study on American industry, social alienation, and institutionalized poverty.

Mr. Harrington has written three books, resulting from his involvement and research on "The invisible poor" in America. The Other America is his first book, followed by The Accidental Century, a commentary on the poverty program. In his latest book, Toward A Democratic Left, Mr. Harrington reveals his program designed to produce social gains.

Michael Harrington is concerned–enough so to come to Maryville College Friday evening, 8:30 p.m. to speak to the community. His brilliant perceptions demonstrate the new thinking that can help America tackle this urgent social crisis. Wouldn't you like to listen to someone who cares, and then care a little yourself?

FROM THE Editors: HOBBINS and FANG

Two weeks ago in Medieval History, Dr. Walker began the lecture, not with the usual unfolding of historical facts, but by reading an article which appeared in this month's Saturday Review. Whether the entire class was attentive is debatable; however, a few members of the class managed to participate in the ensuing discussion of the article, which concerned one man's views of the pitfalls of our society. There was one particular idea that Dr. Walker mentioned in the discussion: there are very few students who actually enjoy the process of learning. This is a very important point that each student should think about. How many students at Maryville College, and all colleges throughout the world for that matter, revel in the learning of information? The numbers would be quite few, since today's students are trapped in a process, not an experience of discovery.

Although difficult to realize or admit, students attend college to acquire that little piece of paper, which they incorrectly envision as their passport to a job in the outside world. Consequently, students are being trained, not educated, and there is a big difference in the two.

But there is another side to this lack of joy in learning, which can only result when the educational complex decides to reform itself. Let's face it, the student must have the grades in order to graduate so that he can go out into the world and get a decent job. Students become pre-occupied with this process because the futility of the "educational"-assembly line and the pressures from educators and from society do not give the students time to learn; therefore all the new curricula in the world are not going to be effective until the educators, as well as the students, revalue themselves. A little bit of idealistic thinking, and a little less materialistic thought needs to occur on the campuses and in society.

What is the answer to this battle of idealistic learning versus realistic training? I am no Wizard of Oz, haying the answer to this difficult question, but what I would like to see is a student thinking about his education. I would also like to see a radical educational revolution in which the teachers will be a guide to the student, and not a Big Brother figure, putting those five letters of the alphabet in his gradebook.

I urge each student, and this includes myself because I am unfortunately just as guilty, to heed the words of Isidore, Archbishop of Seville during the first part of the seventh century:

Learn as if you were to live forever.
Live as if you were to die tomorrow.

VIEWPOINT: WORTH OF NAM MORATORIUM?

After much prodding by my favorite editor i.e. Fang, I have conceded to write a somewhat "controversial" article to stimulate otherwise drab and downright boring pseudo-political discussions that take place in or around the campus. I'm sure we don't have any close-minded liberals here on campus, but just in case we do I would like to say to you that I hope I entertain you and that you go away with the feeling that I am a lost cause. But I am sure the majority of the "left" will be more than willing to respect my opinion and my right to hold it. Won't you?

Vietnam Arithmetic

I suppose that maybe I should start with a comment about October 15. As we all know President Nixon has already brought home over 60,000 troops from Vietnam--11 percent of the authorized total. My peace-at-any-price friends would term this "insignificant." On the above mentioned Wednesday about one million citizens protested our government's policy. As we also this makes up about one-half of one percent of the U.S. population. I fail to see how this qualifies one to call it a "success."

When our President said he would not be influenced by street demonstrations the participants cried out unfair. But what if the President DID listen and was influenced by them...might we expect a PROPORTIONAL withdrawal of troops? Our next big cutback might then be only 2,000 men of those remaining. As Mr. Steven Philo has said, "Actions speak louder than words. Maybe President Nixon wants our boys home more than the demonstrators."

Who Really Wants Peace?

On numerous occasions both President Johnson and President Nixon have gone before both this nation and the world to say in no uncertain terms that the United States wants peace. They have demonstrated this by bombing slowdowns, bombing halts, and most recently troop withdrawals. But how has the Viet Cong responded? They have done nothing until recently except accelerate the combat. Within the last month or so the Viet Cong attacks have been more infrequent than at any other time. You say this is favorable, but the November 3 issue of Newsweek points out:

M.C. needs visitation! Copeland's moral implications must go! M.C. must initiate a new policy that is unique and workable for this campus, not explore what is suitable at Harvard or Macalester. Healthy sex relations are taboo here on Isaac's sacred mound. Parlor dating makes a travesty of human dignity. Our administration must come to realize that visitation does not mean uninhibited pursuits of what they must consider, the NASTY. Likewise our student population needs to mature in the area of social relations, and this very well could be the only satisfactory answer on our campus of limited social activity. If something cannot be worked out in our dorms, then students, who desire more personal freedom, should have the option to live off-campus. And at that point if there are any moral implications they should not be burdened on our administration, but rather on the students, and possibly their enlightened druggist.

LETTERS

Dear Editor:

I am writing concerning a meeting held Wednesday night, October 29th, by some of the science faculty for interested students of the Science Thought course to discuss with us the course, in particular the grading of research papers. Although not all differences of opinion between students and faculty, faculty and faculty, and students and students were resolved, the important thing, as I see it, is that these differences were brought out into the open and discussed with the intent of understanding one another and learning from one another. Perhaps, were I an upperclassman I would know that the open-mindedness of the science faculty is nothing unusual but rather is typical of the entire faculty (or perhaps I would know otherwise). However, being a freshman, this experience of meaningful dialogue with professors as such is completely new to me. Therefore, I cannot take it for granted. My enthusiasm must be expressed; hence, this letter.

I wish to express my appreciation to the science faculty and students involved in the discussion that occurred Wednesday night. To the faculty I would say that the situation during this confrontation was perhaps the most successful of your attempts to teach me to learn. (What really gets me is that this was not an attempt to force a situation from which learning "automatically" would result.) To my fellow students I would say thank you for your vital part in this learning experience. Let's do what we can to keep it alive and growing.

Sincerely,
Chris E. Howze

BLIZZARD STRIKES

Dr. Samuel W. Blizzard, professor of Christianity and society and chairman of the Department of History at Princeton Theological Seminary, will be the guest speaker for the Community Issues and Values program at Maryville College, Nov. 7, 1969. Dr. Blizzard will speak on the topic of "Man's Search for Patterns in Urban Living" at 9:20 a.m. in Wilson Chapel.

Dr. Blizzard is a 1936 graduate of Maryville College and holds the Th.B. and Th.M. degrees from Princeton Seminary. He also earned the Ph.D. in sociology from Cornell University in 1946 and did further study at Mansfield College, University of Oxford in England.

FORUM

Brad Sheafnocker opened the Forum of November 4 and introduced the subject as curfews in girls' dorms especially the freshman dorms.

Nancy Heatwole presented a critique of the present system. Restricted hours for women are discriminatory when men have no hours. This rule as such allows men much more freedom. The attitude taken toward freshmen girls by the college is a parent image: the home away from home. A person in such a situation, especially women, are segregated from society and will not have the opportunity to grow. The College must allow the self to live and grow and not just prepare to live.

Emily Hagar set forth the second part of the critique. She suggested a committee of girls and administrators to study the curfew system. Popular opinion is that the curfew is inconsistent with the ideal of individual responsibility. The girls who feel strongly on this subject should do something and not waste time talking.

Brad Sheafnocker presented ideas from the other point of view. The educational environment is a controlled environment. Also the biggest reason the rules and curfew were instituted was to protect the girls. It is the expectation of the majority of the parents who send girls to the college that the college will offer some protection. Most parents feel that freshmen girls still need some protection and sheltering. A college freshman is under legal age, and therefore still under the jurisdiction of parents. The college is a legitimate extension of this control. Brad then reiterated the need for protection due to the recent harassment of college girls in the community. He stated that the home-away-from-home idea was based on the real need for protection.

Steve Horning, proclaiming himself a "devil's advocate" added to Brad's statement. In changing the curfew there is no need to change dorm hours. Extending hours would not be necessary because this system has worked in the past. The rule on curfew is flexible enough for adjustments and infractions. This system does satisfy the need for protection. An extension of dorm hours would make the job of the campus police more difficult. A looser system would be impossible to enforce if the present one is difficult to maintain. With girls coming in at all hours of the night there would be more disturbances for other residents in the dorm.

Nancy Heatwole disputed Brad's statement about college as a controlled environment. When an individual submits to this type of control he loses the basic freedom of defining his own goals and ideals. Brad replied that he did not think an individual was going to find his ideal after hours.

One suggestion as an alternative to the present ruling would be the curfew system as such for freshmen men and women for the first term, thereafter replaced by a key system.

One girl asked for boys' opinions from the audience.

Among the replies were: the idea of a permission slip from parents to allow their daughters to have keys. Another was that all girls should have keys. The bell was then rung, announcing the end of the session.

FROM OUTSIDE THE WOMB:

S. MATTI ON The ☮ vs. 🐎 Moratoriam

My first chance at Big City anti-war demonstration and I was determined not to miss a thing. A real experience. I give you a collage of situations and responses. A tattered American flag draped as noose or tie around the neck of Washington's statue in Washington Square. The reek of pot (not a value judgment, just a fact) before and behind me as thousands sit in the damp, unsmokable grass of Bryant Park. A parade of sparklies affirming their bias for peace in a cheerful curtain of fame across the stage--Rod McKuen, Woody Allen, Helen Hayes, Lauren Bacall--more, too many to seem real. An opening night in the street, they fling peace signs and kisses to the crowd.

Such social eclecticism--Shirley McLain, flustered and cute in a big pink beret, introduced a prickly black lady from the hospital worker's union, followed by the leader, Eugene McCarthy, "The Man who Started It All." Difficult to surge to our feet--they'd been numbly creased in impossible postures for an hour--we nonetheless struggle up, shouting, our hands blooming a palsied field of peace signs. Cheered for five minutes, McCarthy speaks for three and says nothing, but we are not disappointed. We have his blessing. As does Mayor Lindsay; McCarthy's last words propose his re-election as a right step. Judy Collins signs but no one knows the song and the sound system

Sunshine Superman!

Is it Superman? Well, it might look like it, but really it is C. F. Smith, guard for the Maryville College Scots. C. F. is a junior from Loudon, Tennessee, and is majoring in chemistry. He was the Scots' starting noseman during his freshman and the beginning of his sophomore year, but a knee injury forced him out of play temporarily. Surgery on the knee seems to have been successful, and C. F. has been doing well this year. His performance in the past has been good, and his conduct on the field will determine what kind of player he becomes in the future. In Friday's game against Millsaps, Smith proved his worth by running an intercepted pass 48 yards for a touchdown. We hope that his knee will cause him no more trouble, and look forward to seeing him in plenty of action in future ball game.

Review & Forecast: SCOTS

The Scots play the big one this week at Honaker Field. The Carson-Newman Eagles will be trying to improve their 4-2-1 record, and the Scots will try to even out their 3-4 record. Last year the two arch-rivals fought a wet and cold battle in the snow, and the Eagles won 8-7. This year, whatever the weather, the game promises to have plenty of action.

Head Coach Richie Gaskell's Eagles are a young but tough team this year. The Eagles went 8-2-0 for the 1968 season and their record is not bad this year either. With only two starters returning on offense, the newer men have had to work hard. But such men as All-American Tommy Jones and Charlie Gregory, both great pass receivers, are still around to lead the way. Two defensive men to watch are Billy Wilson and Charlie Phillips. They are the backbone of a strong defensive unit.

The Scots will not be favored pointwise, but the spirit of the team and the fans should counteract that quite well. The Scots look forward to seeing you at the game Saturday at 2:30 p.m.

Inability to convert extra points was the downfall of the Scots at Millsaps last Friday afternoon. Coming from behind twice, Millsaps defeated Maryville 14-12, leaving the Scots with a 3-4 record to carry into their annual clash with arch-rival Carson-Newman.

Scoring from the one-yard line, John Klein put the Scots in front in the first quarter, but Leonard McWhorter's kick missed. The Majors took the lead in the second quarter with a 72-yard touchdown pass and an extra point. The Scots again took the lead in the third quarter with a great effort by C. F. Smith, who intercepted a deflected pass and ran 48 yards for a touchdown. The Scots tried for two, but the attempt failed. The Scots were ahead, but with 4:50 remaining in the game, Millsaps scored again with a TD and extra point, winning the game for them with a two-point margin.

The Majors held the Scots for only 8 first downs and 154 offensive yards, while they piled up 21 first downs and 281 offensive yards.

By treading softly, Hanoi may be hoping to persuade the U.S. to withdraw its troops quickly, thus giving the South Vietnamese Government and army less time in which to get ready to stand alone. "We have some evidence," says one Washington official, "that the Communists have decided to stand down for eight or nine months, betting that American enthusiasm for withdrawal will outpace progress in Saigon."

So let's not deceive ourselves and think that the North wants peace, for they have repeatedly stated emphatically that their goal is victory, and that they won't stop fighting till they have achieved it.

Brotherly Concern

A large number of people seem to oppose U. S.involvement because of their moral concern for the numerous innocent women and children who are being burned and killed by U. S. dropped bombs. Well, to these people I say two things. One is to wake up, we haven't been bombing your so-called "population centers" for a long time. Second, I would ask where is your concern for the people who were found in mass graves after the occupation by the Viet Cong of the city of Hue? Where is your concern for those people in the South whose names are on liquidation lists and who are to be exterminated as soon as the North is triumphant? Don't you care about the fate of your brothers? Or do you only consider those who live within our national Boundaries your brothers?

Fear

With all of this in mind, I admit that I am afraid. I am afraid of withdrawal and "peace" when the price that has to be paid is the freedom of any nation, whether it be the United States or South Vietnam. I am afraid of a totalitarian system that has vowed it will not be content until it has achieved world domination and control.

So, here is the one avowed Hawk who will be able to say, and I sadly admit it, "I told you so, I tried to warn you, but you wouldn't listen.

ΘE HAPPENS

Theta Epsilon has been quite bus, lately. After its successful rummage sale, the Theta girls made Halloween treats fo treats for children at Blount County Hospital. The Theta retreat took place last Friday night in the mountains and much of the night was taken up by telling ghost stories and the pledges working on preparations for Pledge Day, which took place November 4.

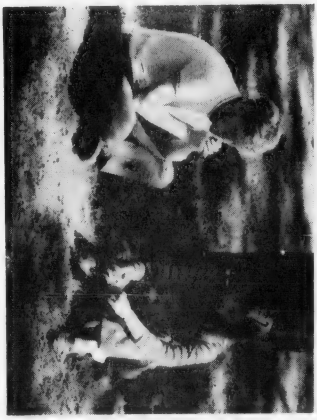
On Tuesday, the Maryville campus was again in chaos when all four societies initiated the pledges. All day, as well as way into the night, the pledges received the traditional treatment. All Thetas would like to give a warm welcome to its new members.

Barr Speaks Out:

Due to the courtesies extended to myself and members of the freshman class, I find it necessary to write this followup article. The subject matter remains the Science Thought course and the Philosophy 101 course on the surface, but this time must be extended to include some of the reactions brought forth, not only by the previous article, but also college life in general. My research is not complete and includes mainly those opinions that have been voiced to me and my own personal opinions.



First of all, I must thank the staff members of the Philosophy 101 course for spending over an hour discussing with me the situation of the philosophy lectures along with many other problems confronting the incoming freshmen and the staff that is set to teach us. Following this discussion, my observation to this day seems to point more and more strongly to one conclusion. The staff is showing much more understanding and courtesy toward us than is being shown to them. My fellow class members might want to disagree with me, but I ask that they think back to the last lecture and think of the talking that was going on that was out of place. Some might feel that their time is being wasted by coming to these lectures. Considering the intellectual superiority of our teachers in relation to ourselves, it seems more logical an approach to think that they might just be wasting their time preparing for these lectures when so much disinterest exists. Everyone has his own pride, and this does not disclude ahcievements and their life work. Much has been done, much to my chagrin as a freshman, to hurt this pride. A stereotype image of lost, but nevertheless, egotistical underclassmen in general has been produced. It would be hard in light of this sort of perverted egotism for the faculty not to revert to and maintain their pride with one of the most basic differences of teaching high school as compared to college. No longer does the teacher have the responsibility of seeing to it that we pass his course. In other words, and a little more pointed, he is saying, "If you don't give a damn about yourself, I don't give a damn about you." I sometimes wonder how many freshmen there are going to be next year, or even next term!

Next in line is the Science Thought course. Again, my criticism falls on students. The faculty, in light of the previous article, approached me with the idea of an open discussion on the general subject of grading, but with the obvious option of discussing the entire course curriculum. About twenty people were interested enough to try to find out what the course involves, considering the unfortunate fact that the course has not been well-defined and is vague in many of its fundamentals. Too many students aren't taking advantage of the education that is available to them. A new suggestion for a grading system for major papers, which is extremely fair and sensible, did come out of this meeting. Where is the concern? We have already lost about a dozen students this year! How many more won't be coming back after the Christmas Break?

I have been very pointedly one-sided throughout this article, and all the argument is not all this one-sided, but the core of the problem is here and must be eliminated. The transformation from a high school system is not easy, but after more than two months to adjust, the overall picture is far too poor. Take responsibility for your education! Help our freshman class overcome its poor image! Help the professors to help us!

is faulty. Our attention wavers to a statuesque blond, long hair flashing like a thoroughbred's mane, dressed in a vaguely ratty fur coat in short, the prototype for all young Manhatten females--stalking deliberately through, over and down the middle of the crowd. Mary of P.,P., and Mary. Never was she more the bright madonna of our liberalism, one still standing from among the fallen and faded in the pantheon of those who learned early to feel that indignation was today's truest patriotism. Unconsciously symbolic, she touches the heads of the multitude and we are doubly blessed. Soon she and Peter sing "The Times, They Are A Changing," and we respond with the proud threat of the title line every time it comes around. Shirley MacLaine assures us that we are making history, so we cheer ourselves.

Senaror Javits, stuffily sympathetic, reminds us that liberal New York is not the voice of all America not is our sentiment the prevailing mood of the Senate; we can't hope for instant peace. The audience grumbles, growls "Peace NOW." Ours is a society of instant credit and consumption; its children, we won't be put off. BUT--Javits' voice a bit shrill now---he won't lessen his labors until...(The sound system fails, and we wait in surly silence...) "the war is over." The end sounds good; Javits exits the stage to cheer Javits exits the stage to cheers; Lindsay is next, the rally structured to allow him maximum political impact. Sparkling with the brightest of the stage properties, kissed by Shirley MacLaine, he appears. A Greek god cast an underdog. We are flattered to be on his side. He talks seriously, in a hesitant monotone incongruous with his visual presence. Referring only once to the upcoming election, he assures us that whatever the outcome, he will continue to work for peace --the key work, we decode it and vote him in with cheers. The rally is a real production; it closes with the full cast from Hair singing "The Flesh Failures" and leading us into "Let the Sunshine In." It is a Chilly, grey 6 p.m. and we've begun to shiver and squint towards the stage, but everyone enters the anthem in the spirit of instant community. The song soars above the drone of Times Square, and it seems as if the sun may really shine. When it fails to do so, we are silent. Shirley MacLaine hoarsely entreats us to meet her at a candlelight vigil uptown and we disperse, a sea of cold, cramped peacemakers heading for the subway. Impatient for an instant exit, we demolish the intervening bushes and hedges of the neatly landscaped park never really intended to be used by people.

I am excited by the day but nagged by something essentially unserious at its core. A few among our black arm-banded multitude wore a strip with the figure 40,000. I am ashamed that its significance for a time escaped me. The number refers to the war dead, American alone the cause of our day's communal anguish. We have cheered for Peace and booed War, but the fact of death is as unmentionable for us as for the euphemistic casualty counters at the Pentagon. At one point in the day, a group of boys bore through the crowd a replica of a coffin draped with a flag. The obscene sight silenced and shamed us--but we could not confront it long. So jokes were made about the narrowness of the box (Hey man, who's in there? The Vanishing American there?) about the lack of space to put it down (Dig a foxhole, buddy!) til even the pallbearers relaxed and the awful symbolism lifted. Earlier at Washington Square, a handsome black business man introduced a speaker. He said that they had served together in WWII where, as his commanding officer, the speaker had talked to the bomber pilots before each mission--when they were scared stiff, the black laughed--and made them feel that they were about to embark on the great adventure of all time. The incongruity of his words escaped him, and he had just spoken out against the war. The crowd rustled with resentment; I cannot be certain of its meaning, even in myself. Did we resent his insensitivity or the fact that his insensitivity pricked our acknowledgement of death?

It's Thursday; the Mets just won the World Series; the war to the best of my knowledge continues. The November moratorium will be two days long. Next month when the weather is not so obliging, when the sparklies have gone back into professional hibernation, and the mayor's contest is no longer an issue, when the moratorium intrudes upon our sacred weekend, when it will not be quite so easy to declare our integrity or so respectably pleasant to demand peace--next month, we'll see how serious we are.

IN DRY PLACES

This used to be a pretty good country.
Easy Rider

Eyes and eyes and eyes and eyes blow like sand off the flowers of your shoulders, drift their desert gaze down your body forming clouds of dust you kick up with your boots.
The eyes and eyes and eyes and eyes mostly settle a mantle of grit over your hair-- Flowing a defiant stream of liquid down your neck, cascading in rivulets over your ears, cutting channels in dry places.
Still the eyes leer
while the drought of their thought explodes over you with the swirling darkness of a sudden sandstorm.
They who lurk behind those abrasive eyes hurl the dry spittle of their hatred:
"queer"
"communist"
"damn hippie"
With shriveled mouths they form their withered labels laughing and nudging, but mostly staring.

Behind the eyes and the hate they are each speaking inaudible words.
Sounds are formed by the abscessed spaces lying behind their sneezing masks of indignance.
The words wheeze in the arid corridors of isolated minds
--age and youth collide like hurling bits of flint deep in the balckness masquerading as liquid, but the sparks choke in the settling dust-- (crackling and dry like the wind in a dead forest, they whisper inside themselves)
"You are young,
You are young.
And...
I am afraid."

Jan. Meetings: Christianity Questioned

The search for a meaningful Christian dialogue continues to be difficult for those of us who are either indifferent to Christianity or disgusted by its structures. But Maryville, with a history of committment to Christian perspective, is attempting to expand dialogue through new forms for the traditional religious meetings. The days of January 14th and 15th will be used to discuss "The Christian and the State" and "The Christian and the Church." The topics and theme will be discussed by all segments of the college community as the regularly scheduled classes will be altered to deal with these subjects. Four speakers are coming to the campus to participate with us in our efforts to understand the relation of the Christian to his church and larger society.

The essential characteristic of these topics is that nobody can explain exactly what it means to be a Christian. For every individual it must take different forms. Therefore, our speakers are coming not as men bearing the ultimate word of God, but as four men who have been deeply involved in aspects of our society and church which go far beyond what we have been able to experience at Maryville. Their value comes from the different perspectives which they have been able to develop. So they will become involved in the life of our campus as men with strong ideas who will help in our search.

Dr. George Weber, developer of the East Harlem Protestant Parish and President of New York Theological Seminary will speak Wednesday, January 14 at 9:20 a.m. on "The Christian and the State." Dr. Weber, who has written God's Colony in Man's World and The Congregation in Mission, is noted for his concept of the dynamic Christian faith rooted in biblical understanding and committed to urgent participation in rectifying fundamental problems of our society.

Dr. Bruce Rigdon, assistant professor of Church History at McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago, will speak during the same program. He will also discuss his view of the Christian's role in the state. Dr. Rigdon received his graduate degrees at Yale University and has participated extensively in student Christian groups throughout the world. The rest of the day will be filled with discussion in classes and other groups. Speakers will be available for individual conferences in the late afternoon and for panel discussions in the Lantern at night.

The meetings will continue with two addresses during CIV hour on Thursday morning. Dr. Edward Brubaker, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Wichita, Kansas, will speak on "The Christian and the Chruch." He has had much experience in suburban church life and has worked to encourage those groups to understand more completely the world of which they are a part. He presents the perspective of one working in the more traditional church structures.

The Reverend Raymond Nott, mobile minister to two hundred families scattered over fifteen thousand square miles of rattlesnake and cactus country in the Bighorn Basin of north central Wyoming, will also speak during the CIV hour on January 15. FURTHERING THEMSELVES, OUR FACULTY LEAVES

Six members of the Maryville College faculty are on leave this year under two special types of leave programs.

Mrs. Charlotte H. Beck, instructor in English, is at the University of Tennessee Graduate School where she is working toward her doctorate under the National Teaching Fellows program.

Dr. Carolyn Louise Blair, professor of English and Secretary of the Faculty, is on sabbatical and leave of absence for the entire year.

Mr. John William Nichols, instructor in mathematics, is at the University of Tennessee Graduate School where he is working toward his doctorate under the National Teaching Fellows program.

Mr. Robert Clinton Ramger, assistant professor of biology, is continuing his work at the University of Tennessee Graduate School under the National Teaching Fellows program.

Mr. William H. Swenson, assistant professor of art, is at Northwestern University while on sabbatical.

Dr. Arda Walker, professor and chairman of the department of history, will begin her sabbatical at the conclusion of the Interim Term.

Sabbatical leave is granted to faculty members who have served six consecutive years. This enables them to do advanced study and research in their particular discipline, which they could not do while teaching full time. The purpose of such leave is to prepare the individual for more effective teaching upon his or her return to the College.

Special leaves are granted to faculty to do advance study on their doctorate. These special leaves are made possible by a program of the National Teaching Fellows under Title III of the Higher Education Act. Grants made to Maryville College under this program pay the salaries of young instructors who are brought to the College for a period of one or two years as National Teaching Fellows to replace regular members of the faculty who are thus enabled to go on with doctoral work.

Ten members of the Maryville College faculty have been granted such leave in the past four years.

Dr. Bill Webber

Editorial

The question arises, as we near our second centennial, are we still a healthy nation? In a healthy society there is a balance of freedom and order and even during social change there is a measure of stability. Besides the universal problems of pollution, urban decay, and generation gap, in America is a confusing war and a decidedly touchy racial conflict. It seems none too likely that these baffling problems will be solved unless we manage to raise the level of political understanding and social sympathy. Here at MC we seem worlds away from these problems, and the general attitude appears apathetic to them. However, if we ignore these problems, we are choking our very humanity. And in this school where humanity is such an integral part of our education, we cannot let our interest in the rest of the world die without expecting the simultaneous death of our own education. It is at this point when we stop growing that our country stops, too, and then our freedom is in peril.

WINTER OF OUR DISRESPECT

Every year the Maryville College audience becomes more disrespectful, whether at a play, movie, or CIV program. The chatting, snickering, and sleeping have gone so far that they embarrass even high school students, who oftentimes are more mature and attentive than we collegiate scholars have proven to be. The Community Issues and Values Program is an exciting educational opportunity, and yet whenever CIV is mentioned, as just now, it receives a groan as though it were an oppressive yoke to be worn by all pitiful MC students.

Overly critical? Not at all! Although there are students disciplined enough to sit quietly through a lecture, sacrificing 70 minutes of their time to patient attention, they are in the minority. Look around you the next time you've settled into your seat when the speaker's introductory jokes are over. Don't ignore the magazines, text books, and "Dear Mom" letters; don't overlook the sleepers or those who are quite unashamed of talking all of the way through a CIV program without bothering once to catch a point the speaker may have been trying to drive.

I'd like to question what the hell is going on around here in this "academic community."

I'd like to question the values of us students. What are our values? What do we do with our time? We go to football games, sit in class cause if we're not there to brownie the teacher he won't give us a good grade, we go to the student center and play pool and ping-pong, we go out and play games with the opposite sex, we get smashed, we go to meals, and we sleep.

What do we do with our money? We decorate our rooms, stuff our faces with food (and drink), we go to dances, buy pretty clothes and make-up; so we can play the game, we give our money to the paper that writes up all this nothing.

Just think of the money this school puts into football! You read our paper sometimes and you'd think we're a football school. A football game is the only thing here.

Now think about what's going on in the world. Really, what are we doing? We spend our money on ourselves and complain about people not paying enough into poverty and putting too much in war. Then on campus, after complaining about war and hate:

Instead of wounding with weapons man pricks upon the mind with cruel lies and fallacies, and barbs of every kind
He wields the a[illegible]

he harbors only hu[illegible]

This is a Christian college and is supposed to have a fellowship and love that show more than other schools. It's this bad here--I mean we can't communicate on this small scale. How can we expect to do something about the world unless we wake up? God help us.

You help me wake up and I'll try to help you, if I can. But man just can't Together. Please.

has provided Mr. Nott with a different perspective of the Christian and the Church. The rest of this day will also be devoted to class discussions and forum groups with the speakers participating. The locations where different groups are to meet will be announced.

Dialogue and discussions are the foundations upon which effective Christian involvement must be built. The purpose of the meetings is not to convert everyone to a particular position or to demand that all of us be Christians. The purpose is to confront the college community with ideas and new perspectives on the Christian's relation to his nation and church. It is essential that as individuals we accept the confrontation and consider the implications of being human in a mass society.

things to get used to such as having a dozen eyes watch every move you made and getting up at 5 a.m. every morning for Hindu prayers, but everyone was very helpful, and we made some very good friends. We tried to answer their questions about America (race problems, family life, Vietnam, etc.) as honestly as possible.

The second month we lived in the campus guest house. Most of this period of time was spent in having lectures, collecting research for our independent study projects and field trips. We had the opportunity to talk with Mr. Morarji Desai, former deputy prime minister, and we visited hill resorts, palaces and even went on a picture taking "lion safari" in a forest where lions roam wild. There we witnessed a lion kill a wild cow. But the most fascinating places we have visited were the villages where most of the homes were built of cow dung and mud. One village didn't even have electricity and most of the cooking was done in clay ovens. But the people were fantastically friendly, and I suspect American visitors were rather rare! The whole village turned out to greet us, fed us, and then we had a mass meeting with them asking and answering questions through an interpreter. We had so much attention that we felt like movie stars! Before we left they gave us a camel ride through the village.

Since the beginning of December we have been living in Allahabad, a holy city on the Ganges, with families. My family is Hindu vegetarian, fairly well to do (the father is a lawyer) and lives in a huge, ancient house surrounded by gardens. They're really nice, speak excellent English, and are really much like an American family in many ways. For one, the kids are as crazy about cricket as American kids are crazy about baseball. In fact after school they would immediately begin a game in their good uniforms if the mother didn't make them change! They've taken me to several really big weddings, one of which Indira Gandhi also attended, and on a picnic at a nearby village where we took a boat ride on the Ganges. And tomorrow I'm going to Benares. So you can see I'm really having a great time....

Admit to yourself that towards the end of many programs the audience has become so noisy that it actually hinders many students from hearing what the speaker is saying, even though they may wish to hear him. We're a little too friendly community to actually turn on each other and say "shut up!", so instead we deny ourselves the right to hear the talk, and since it is as difficult to concentrate as it is, we relax into the murmur of the crowd. Do we forget so easily that we are actually paying to hear and see these programs? If nothing else will strike your conscience, at least consider how much of your time and money is lost in the CIV program, and remember who it was that lost it.

FORUM Explores the Campus Church

FORUM explored the arguments advocating a "Campus Church" in the first of this term's bi-weekly presentations on Tuesday at 6:15 p.m. in the Little Chapel. The moderator suggested that discussion of this campus issue might well put a pertinent edge on the broader-based dialogue of January Meetings and also observations comparing specific campus problems with deep social movements.

Dr. Stine was the "pro" speaker on this question, having advocated establishment of an ecumenical church here for over two years. He proposed that Maryville needs a core for its pluralism; that our worshipping and working communities should be reconciled into an ecclesiastical unity. Focusing on the Lord's Supper, this church would promote the development of spiritual life, involve itself in intellectual or sensitivity groups, and build an "action-ministry." They key to its activities would be vitality and spontaneous organization.

Then Jim Daugherty asserted that such a church organization would prove more an encumbrance than a liberation, since UCM and the Chaplain's Office now provide essentially the same opportunity without rigidity. He made it clear, however, that he shared the objective expressed by Dr. Stine and that their theological outlooks are identical. He averred that UCM attracts those students who are otherwise turned off by religiosity "floating around" Maryville. But whatever the organization, he added, the prophetic mission of Christianity must be recognized and evangelized through it.

The discussion was opened to a flurry of questions.

Because Maryville College officially affiliates itself with the United Presbyterian Church, reasoned Dr. Stine, a campus church must gain official sanction. Its organization, however, would be non-denominational, its structure loose and thus responsive to the changing campus. An ordained minister would head the church and offer guidance to the elected coordinating board. This plan must be fluid and offer plenty of latitude for experimentation, Dr. Stine stressed.

Some insisted that present alienation from UCM hampers its effectiveness to speak to the pluralism of Maryville. Jim answered that it would nevertheless defeat its purpose to form a church of worship that does not engage itself in problems of the National community.

The U.C.M. "review"

Maryville College saw in September of this past year the debut of our current University Christian Movement organization. Even before most of the college population arrived on campus, UCM was at work planning the freshman orientation program. The year's first official Retreat at Laurel Lake followed shortly thereafter. When a general meeting had been called, a division of responsibilities took shape to fulfill UCM's pledges of service to the campus and community. Now in 1970, UCM reviews its achievements and outlines its emphasis for the remainder of this college year.

Barnwarming, the Fall Retreat, and services provided by Nu Gamma and Key Men were less ambitious than they have been in past years. Instead, UCM stressed the importance of Christian outreach in its Project Invest Yourself programs. In three major areas, students devoted to Project Invest Yourself tallied outstanding accomplishments. Approximately forty Maryville College students tutored more than fifty local DORM III Breaks the Ice!

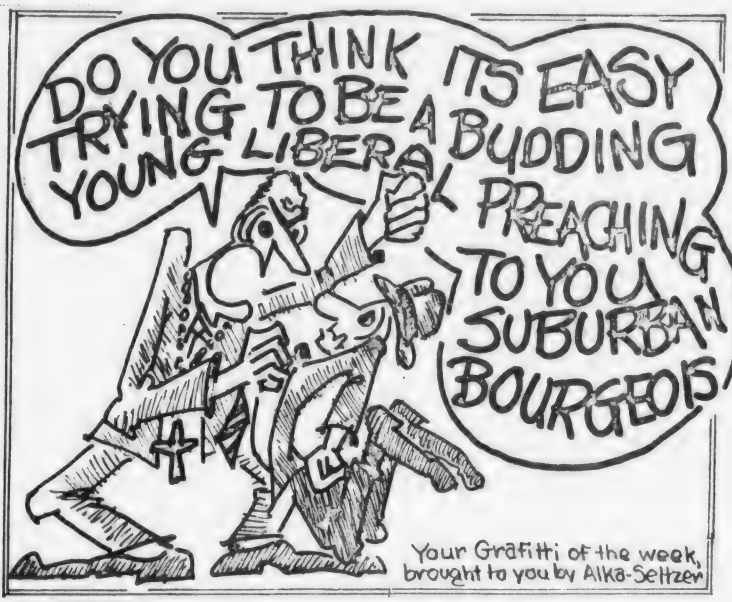
In the midst of seeming total social apathy on the Maryville College campus, the Freshman guys in Dorm III broke the ice (literally) and sponsored a dance on Saturday, January 10, for the girls in Davis and Dorm I.

The idea hatched in a R.A. bull session, and the dorm soon got the ball rolling.

Frank Holby made the publicity posters for the dorms, while Gary Childress concentrated his "art" work in the area of decorations.



Chris Magnuson ran the sound for the dance in the front lounge. For those who weren't quite as hyper as the others there was folk singing in the back lounge led by John Ballard, Duncan Randall, Bob Veile, and Doc. For those even less active, upstairs there was  led by ***.

It all amounted to quite a successful venture. And by the way freshmen, keep January 30 open on your calendar. More details will follow.

VOLUNTEERS step forward!

UCM needs volunteers to do work this Saturday, Jan. 17. We are working with the Blount County Community Action Center in helping needy families in the community. But we need YOUR help! If you are interested, there will be a sign-up poster in the Post Office or contact Jim Spotts or even Box 2364.

But..if you cannot make Saturday remember the clothes drive, (not unlike remembering the Maine!) Clothes boxes will be in the dorm lobbies awaiting you old (or new) clothes.

EDITORAL

The ECHO takes the stand that we should have a modified form of open dorms, particularly on the weekends. Lately, the weather has been so bad that it has been impossible to do much off campus. This has been a super hassle because there has been nothing to do on campus. Even the student center has run out of chairs for the crowds that have fled there for some measure of entertainment. It is about time that we consider our social dilemma here at Maryville. The ECHO would like to hear various opinions from other members of the community concerning this issue.

Maryville C. is a unique situation in our culture in that it is an educational institution provided with and given the opportunity to look on society critically. By its very situation, that of remaining in culture, yet also set apart due to its community organization, united under a general concern, Maryville has the chance to act in a critical manner to the society surrounding it. Maryville's residence halls are also important to the purpose in that the student who pursues his education while living in a unique situation–that of a part of society yet also separate–can define who he is and experience a freedom that the members of the larger society cannot. It could be described as a "breathing space" in which the student can participate in a genuine education situation–defining and searching for his values and goals while not being subjected to the influences and limited freedoms of our contemporary society.

Residence halls then become an integral part of two of the college's goals– that of becoming a community and of acting as a "gadfly" to society. To open the residence hall to visitation does not destroy the concept of members who relate in a manner different from that of the society structure. Due to the fact that the members are united under the general concept of searching for truth, the important factor does not lie in the structures that are set up to provide communication (unless they are acting to prevent communication) but what the people in the community are relating to (the search for truth or meaning). In this view, then, communication and dialogue are essential to a group dedicated to the purpose of academic and individual fulfillment. Visitation, in taking account of our ideal of community and remaining within it, will not destroy our unique situation but only enlarge it for the members living within our community. We are united–united under a general purpose which is searching–and this fact in itself sets up apart from members of society–who do not relate under a general purpose or direction. We are unique–but we need the freedom to use our uniqueness as a tool. In order for this to come about, for people to search honestly–communication and inter-relationships are essential.

A PRAYER FOR PEACE

Few men in history have done more to bring peace between warring classes and factions than St. Francis of Assisi. The prayer attributed to him deserves study, recitation and carrying into practice:

"Lord, make me an instrument of Your peace.
Where there is hatred, let me sow love;
Where there is injury, pardon;
Where there is doubt, faith;
Where there is despair, hope;
Where there is darkness, light;
And where there is sadness, joy.
O, Divine Master, grant that I may not so much
seek to be consoled as to console;
To be understood as to understand;
To be loved as to love;
For it is in giving that we receive;
It is in pardoning that we are pardoned;
And it is in dying that we are born to eternal life."

Poltical writer Jack Newfield has these suggestions of where to go from the Washington Moratorium: (1) Urge 1,000,000 taxpayers–too many to imprison–to put their taxes in escrow, (2) Support the swelling ranks of GI dissenters with marches to Army bases, and (3) Canvas strong for Senate doves facing conservatives and for candidates opposing super-hawks in next year's elections . . . Forum CONT.

Jim acknowledged that UCM's activism assumes a political tinge, but that this kind of service is worship in its purest sense. Dr. Stine agreed that in dissociating itself from political challenges, the Church destroys its own unity, its capacity to reconcile pluralism.

Bob Veile remarked on the requirement for success of either alternative, saying the religious leadership should achieve "unity and not uniformity." Throughout the discussion, the particular characteristics of Maryville were carefully considered. Although lively dialogue showed no sign of let-up, FORUM officially adjourned at seven o'clock so that those who had classes could go. In summation, Dr. Campbell recommended that these thoughts be followed up and interpreted carefully into action. Many remained in the Little Chapel, conversing in groups of three or four. The next regularly-scheduled FORUM will be on January 27.

high school students in one ongoing program. Secondly, many programs including a Halloween and Christmas party were given by MCers for youngsters at the Children's Home; finally, MC students engaged themselves in community work with the New Providence Church. Here, they helped a family move its household to a new location, and provided monthly entertainment and talk for the elderly at Asbury Acres. At least two students volunteer every day for the Church Day Care Center each student working several hours per week. Help is desperately needed to care for children whose mothers are working or training for work during the day.

A smaller program sponsored by UCM gained, because of similar solo ventures widely publicized throughout the nation, disproportionate attention; this is the Peace Move. On October 15, coordination with UT landed three CIV films for this campus, and Dr. George Edwards of the Louisville Seminary volunteered his time. UCM helped also to coordinate the independent groups of students who traveled to Washington on November 15. A Peace Vigil honored the Lamp of Truth for three days ending on December 15. During this time, clothes for needy families were collected, informational "No Christmas as Usual" leaflets were distributed, and several worship services and pray-ins marked the day with solemnity.

The Far Corner has become a popular feature in the College Library. Some fifteen films are available on topics such as pollution, religion and education, and liberation of the sexes. The Far Corner recommends various books for the College Library and itself circulates many books, most of them not to be found in the College Catalog. It maintains back copies of some ten different newspapers spanning the spectrum of political persuasions, and subscribes to four "underground" papers.

Dates and information on UCM's Winter and Spring Retreats will soon be posted. Other plans include a much stronger emphasis on encouraging worship services and more opportunities for fellowship. The Lantern will be open steadily, despite even its pending relocation to Fayerweather, and occasional programs (remember the Christmas reading?) will help set a high standard of campus spiritual maturity. In addition, just as UCM helped with January meetings, so will seminars on a smaller scale be offered in the course of the next months.

SCOTS say Thanks!

Coach Baird and the Scots Basketball team would like to express their sincere appreciation to the Maryville College Student Body for their support during their trip to the Sun Coast Classic in St. Petersburg, Fla. The telegram was appreciated by everyone far more than any ordinary telegram. Coach Baird stated that it was the best thing that has ever happened on a road trip and expressed his thanks to all for the nice gesture in thinking enough about their team. The continued support of the student body at all basketball games is also sincerely appreciated.

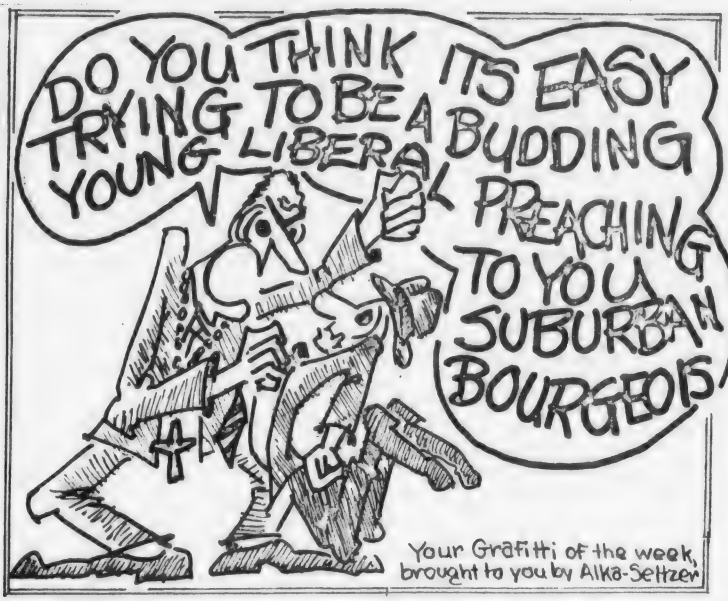
Basketball Games REVIEWED

After posting a 5-1 record before the Holidays, the Scots have dropped 3 straight. Two of these were near wins as Maryville lost to Florida Presbyterian 62-59 and UT at Chattanooga 74-72. The Chattanooga game was probably the Scots best effort of the season as they nearly upset a tough lower class university opponent.

In the Florida Presbyterian game, it was tight all the way. Shawn McElroy of the Tritons provided the difference. McElroy was playing his first game of the season due to a grade mix-up. Two of his grades had been marked wrong and thus he was declared ineligible. He appealed his situation and became eligible when a double-check proved two errors. His lay-off did not affect him as he scored 25 and was eventually named the tournament's most valuable player. For the Scots, Dan McKinstry scored 19, Warren Morgan and Mike Barrows scored 17 and 13, respectively.

On Saturday night the disheartened Scots found the going rough. They fell before North Central of Illinois 78-59. The Scots cut the lead several times, but could not muster a sustained effort. Mike Barrows scored 13 and Dan McKinstry, 10. Warren Morgan was voted to the All-Tournament team.



The Scots arrived back from Florida about noon on Sunday and were aware that they had their toughest opoonent of the season in Chattanooga.

The Mocs broke out of a 27-11 lead after 10 minutes of play. Then the Scots caught fire and by halftime were only down 5. The hustle of the Scots in the second half and it took a tremendous effort to subdue the poised Scots, who with four minutes to go led by five, but then a steal and two tip-ins put the Mocs back on top. After a Mocs free throw, John Weston tied it. The Mocs held for one shot and with two seconds left in a scramble under the basket a Moc was fouled, and sealed the verdict by making both shots. Warren Morgan who was outstanding on the boards scored 23. John Weston, making his first start as a Scot added 17 and Mike Barrows followed closely with 16.

The team appears to have jelled with this game and several players seem to be of first team calibre. Capt. Lynn Dildine leads the team with his hustle and his determination to make a winning effort. Dan McKinstry is the team's leading scorer, he was 34th in scoring and 8th in field goal percentage in national small college totals. Warren Morgan continues to amaze opponents with his jumping ability and deft shooting touch. Mike Barrows seems to have regained the scoring touch which gave him an 18 pt average last year. Lynn Mize has played ably at center and forward despite his lack of height. Since his switch to forward his scoring ability has increased constantly. Don Hickman is probably the top defensive player on the team and his 6'1" height and good spring make his scoring ability from the guard position valuable. He and John Weston both seem to be in the groove for basketball after football has worn off. Bob Fox the lone freshman on the squad is improving steadily and has performed well in his varsity stints. Doug Cox's strong rebounding is also a main factor as is Bill Arlington's defense to the team. Ondis Bible and Steve Boggs are trying to shake off the rustiness of a year's layoff from the hardwood and are both better than average shooters.

The Scots tangle with Clinch Valley here on Saturday night at 7:30. Then the Scots go to Milligan on Monday and LMU on Thursday before returning to [illegible] Emory and Henry next Saturday. The Scots appreciate the fine student body support and hope it continues. The Scots will continue to put forth their best effort, so come Back the Scots!!!

The ECHO takes the stand that we should have a modified form of open dorms, particularly on the weekends. Lately, the weather has been so bad that it has been impossible to do much off campus. This has been a super hassle because there has been nothing to do on campus. Even the student center has run out of chairs for the crowds that have fled there for some measure of entertainment. It is about time that we consider our social dilemma here at Maryville. The ECHO would like to hear various opinions from other members of the community concerning this issue.

Maryville C. is a unique situation in our culture in that it is an educational institution provided with and given the opportunity to look on society critically. By its very situation, that of remaining in culture, yet also set apart due to its community organization, united under a general concern, Maryville has the chance to act in a critical manner to the society surrounding it. Maryville's residence halls are also important to the purpose in that the student who pursues his education while living in a unique situation–that of a part of society yet also separate–can define who he is and experience a freedom that the members of the larger society cannot. It could be described as a "breathing space" in which the student can participate in a genuine education situation–defining and searching for his values and goals while not being subjected to the influences and limited freedoms of our contemporary society.

Residence halls then become an integral part of two of the college's goals–that of becoming a community and of acting as a "gadfly" to society. To open the residence hall to visitation does not destroy the concept of members who relate in a manner different from that of the society structure. Due to the fact that the members are united under the general concept of searching for truth, the important factor does not lie in the structures that are set up to provide communication (unless they are acting to prevent communication) but what the people in the community are relating to (the search for truth or meaning). In this view, then, communication and dialogue are essential to a group dedicated to the purpose of academic and individual fulfillment. Visitation, in taking account of our ideal of community and remaining within it, will not destroy our unique situation but only enlarge it for the members living within our community. We are united–united under a general purpose which is searching–and this fact in itself sets up apart from members of society–who do not relate under a general purpose or direction. We are unique–but we need the freedom to use our uniqueness as a tool. In order for this to come about, for people to search honestly–communication and inter-relationships are essential.

A PRAYER FOR PEACE

Few men in history have done more to bring peace between warring classes and factions than St. Francis of Assisi. The prayer attributed to him deserves study, recitation and carrying into practice:

"Lord, make me an instrument of Your peace.
Where there is hatred, let me sow love;
Where there is injury, pardon;
Where there is doubt, faith;
Where there is despair, hope;
Where there is darkness, light;
And where there is sadness, joy.
O, Divine Master, grant that I may not so much
seek to be consoled as to console;
To be understood as to understand;
To be loved as to love;
For it is in giving that we receive;
It is in pardoning that we are pardoned;
And it is in dying that we are born to eternal life."

Jim acknowledged that UCM's activism assumes a political tinge, but that this kind of service is worship in its purest sense. Dr. Stine agreed that in dissociating itself from political challenges, the Church destroys its own unity, its capacity to reconcile pluralism.

Bob Veile remarked on the requirement for success of either alternative, saying the religious leadership should achieve "unity and not uniformity." Throughout the discussion, the particular characteristics of Maryville were carefully considered. Although lively dialogue showed no sign of let-up, FORUM officially adjourned at seven o'clock so that those who had classes could go. In summation, Dr. Campbell recommended that these thoughts be followed up and interpreted carefully into action. Many remained in the Little Chapel, conversing in groups of three or four. The next regularly-scheduled FORUM will be on January 27.

In addition, just as UCM helped with January meetings, so will seminars on a smaller scale be offered in the course of the next months.

REY de la TORRE

VIVA CUBA!

Famous bull fighter from Cuba?! No! Senor Rey de la Torre, classical guitarist, a native of Havana, will be appearing on campus on Thursday January 29 at 8:15 p.m. for an enlightening and thrilling concert.

Mr. de la Torre has been a master of his instrument since he was ten years of age. At 14 he left his native Havana to continue his education in Spain, where he studied guitar under the brilliant virtuoso, Miguel Llobet. He made his debut in Bar elona at the age of 16 and scored a resounding success that immediately launched him on his concert career. In 1941, he made his Town Hall debut, and since that date has toured all over the globe.

He has appeared on many television shows, including the Jack Paar Show, the Today Show, Camera 3, and the telecast of Garcia Lorca ' s provocative drama "The House of Bernada Alba." He has also recorded extensively, and his current Epic recordings are among the country's best sellers in this field.

Through the years, Rey de la Torre has kept abreast with modern Spanish and Latin American Music. He premiered the Guitar Concerto of Joaquin Rodrigo with the Cleveland Orchestra and has since played this concerto with leading orchestras throughout the United States. He has had music written especially for him by such contemporary composers as Jul-

England again!

Plans for the 1970 Interim are already under way. The English Department is proposing a study tour based on the Arthurian legend.

This proposed tour would include visits to Cadbury (Camelot?); Glastonbury (Arthur's burial place?); Winchester (meeting place of the Knights of the Round Table); Canterbury; London and its environs, including Westminster Abbey, the Tower, the British Museum, art galleries, Oxford, and Cambridge. Possibly the group will also spend some time in France since some of the Arthurian legends are of French origin.

This exploration of the rich vein of Arthurian material would include a study of such literary works as T.H. White's The Once and Future King, Tennyson's Idylls of the King, and Spenser's Faerie Queene. It would also involve an acquaintance with American writers who have used this material--Edwin Arlington Ribonson, Mark Twain and others.

The project will provide an opportunity for many areas of study--literature,history,art, music, to name a few of them.

One of the major aims of this project is to develop an appreciation for the effects the Arthur stories have had on Anglo-American concepts and ideals. Out of this study should come an awareness of the ways the material has been used to promote religious thought, political needs,and social concepts. The shift of emphasis by the various authors gives much insight to the times in which they were writing.

The tour will require 21-25 days, depending upon whether the eastbound trip is by ship or plane. If the ship is chosen, part of the orientation will be done at sea.

Students interested in this interim project should talk with Mrs. Fowler, Anderson 317, or Mrs. Cate, Anderson 219.

Will all those who have not returned their CATALOG QUESTIONNAIRES please do so by Monday, January 26th. If you don't have, or lost your form, more are available in the bookstore or from Bob Trent.

Editorial

It is high time that this school make another entrance for the Carnegie parking lot. Preferably, the entrance should be through the chapel lot. Trying to drive a car up the ice past Dean Elia's door is almost impossible, and if one does make it it is a miracle that he does not run over a pedestrian. The road is a virtual sidewalk to the side door of the dorm. If a motorist makes it past the icy hill and the students walking back from classes, he then has a time edging his car ever so slowly out into Anderson Blvd, because there are always cars parked on either side of the drive, obscuring vision. Even driving with the utmost precaution, the trip from the parking space to the street is hazardous! For the little bit of effort a remedy would take, the results would at least make that part of the campus more safe....who knows? Maybe someone will run over the dean?

Dear Editor,

Now that UCM has effectively gained control of Vespers, the Lantern, the local War on Poverty, and the minds of a number of rebels looking for a cause, it seems they have also captured the Highland Echo???? Bravo for them. There wasn't much to capture, but the principle of the thing makes me wish I had a subscription so I could terminate it. Since I can't, I shall henceforth get my deep kneebends in other ways than in bending down to pick up a copy of the UCM newssheet. This is one sleek, overprivileged, Middle American horse who, having been led to the brink of the river, now flatly refuses to drink. But don't worry, all you True Christians who love me anyway and fear I might die of thirst ---I brought my own canteen.

Respectively,
Deuel Elam

Dear Editor,

I am having trouble understanding why many of the Maryville students bother to dress and come to the Basketball games just to sit on the bench as if nothing was happening on the floor. If people prefer to keep silent throughout a game, that is their privilege, but why suddenly jump up and obnoxiously BOO the referee during the game. If all the hecklers would use their energy throughout an entire game to support the team with cheers and chants, then our Basketball team would have no doubt as to whether or not they are the only ones wanting a victory! I just wish we could all come to the games ready to make a lot of noise in support of our team especially when we are ahead instead of waiting until we have a chance to show bad sportsmanship!!!

Martha McCoy

Dear Editor,

I wish to call to attention a deplorable situation which must be remedied immediately. I am of course referring to the shocking case of the false information printed in today's Echo.

There, in black and yellow and plain as the nose on my face (although there has been some controversy about whether my nose is plain or weird), it reads that today's date is (and I quote) "October 17, 1969." I do not immediately place the blame on you. Perhaps you have some inside information on the date that I do not know. Or perhaps you wish to operate on a different calendar system. This is, of course, your privilege.

But consider, Dear Editor, the consequences of such an outrageous and glaring error. What will happen to those people who believe that if it's in a newspaper, it has to be true? You have doomed them to perpetual confusion. For the rest of their lives, they will secretly wonder whether today is today or is three month s ago.

O, Editor! Where is your compassion? Your feeling of brotherhood? Your concern???? How can you subject these helpless people to such a horrible fate??? Have you, after all, no humanity? Editor, it is your moral obligation to correct this immoral and all but reactionary error!

If these pleas do not move you, then I offer a threat : If this erroneous report is not soon corrected, I'll throw you to the Christians.

Fanatically yours,
Janee Elmore

Dear Editor,

Does anyone remember the term "open speaker policy"? Much was said on this campus about "wanting to hear more of what the conservatives have to say." But this was last May, only two or three weeks before summer vacation and it seemed like a safe enough statement to make. After all, people were expected to forget about many things during the summer, and that was one of them. Or was it?

At the outset, congratulations are in order to those active in the Forum movement on campus who make a real effort to present varying views of campus issues. And we must not overlook the half a dozen CIV programs last year which expressed moderate or--in one or two cases, Heaven forbit--conservative ideas. It even seemed last spring that the CIV committee and its various subcommittees, not to mention the ACC, Religious Life Committee and other campus groups really meant to improve the situation this fall, and so, we have given them a chance. But through some of the "old guard" liberals and scholars, plus such people as Madalyn Murray and such groups as UCM and their activities concerning Vietnam Moratorium and other similar programs, the situation has indeed worsened this year. And then, the January meetings came along. Certainly in these groups of meetings dealing with the Christian's relationship to his nation and his Church, views would be presented with basic differences. But again, we were disappointed. The views were somewhat different, but only as to means and method and not, for the most part, as to purpose and direction.

Certainly, we do not intend to deny anyone's right to address this campus. But the exercise of academic freedom and freedom of speech is not a one-way affair. In a situation of a type such as Community Issues and Values, we are obligated to present views which are basically divergent so that the students and faculty and all other members of this community will be able to make intelligent decisions. As a rock song puts it, we have to look at "both sides now." This presents a challenge to those who cannot identify with the ideas as expressed in UCM and CIV programs to express themselves and work for a meaningful balance of speakers, and through the ACC framework and committee structure, this can hopefully be achieved. But a great deal of responsibility lies with those in charge of campus activities to open their minds. For there is no reason, no matter how valid it may seem, for our academic integrity to be sacrificed in this manner. We should not just listen to the liberals and theoreticians of the academic world, and neither should we be only exposed to the conservative ideals. We need to try and understand all viewpoints so that we can make up our own minds. But this is impossible unless we make some attempt to establish an "Open speaker" policy here. Doesn't this make sense to you? If it does let me know and let's do something about it--now!

...who's going to clean up that mess down there?!

"Noye's Fludde," the Chester Miracle play set to music by Benjamin Britten, will be presented through the combined efforts of the Department of Fine Arts, Maryville College, First Baptist Church and New Providence Presbyterian Church, in two area performances Wednesday evening, January 28, at 7:30 p.m. in the college chapel, and Sunday evening, February 1, at 7:00 p.m. at the First Baptist Church. Featuring a large cast of soloists, chorus, orchestra and bell ringers, the play depicts the estrangement and reconciliation of man as taken from the Biblical account of Noah and the ark. Children's choirs from the New Providence and First Baptist Churches will join the Maryville College Choir with the production by portraying various animals in the ark.

Noah and his Ark have been in our minds since childhood. The coming together of animals, water, and dry land, and a rainbow has been common to all our lives. It is a story which captures the heart in many ways--it is adventure and danger, and finally peace and happiness. Each and every student is cordially invited to help recreate this early covenant between God and man which is the crux of "Noye's Fludde."

DEARLY BELOVED...

I am extremely frustrated, and it's not due to the weather, grades, courses, etc. It's due to the lack of any kind of concrete action by the All College Council. That body has now been in operation for one year, and what, of major import, has it really done? Really, nothing. It did pass a drinking rule. We were told to take it through committee, and the ACC systematically butchered the committee's proposals, adopting something which was so out of touch with reality that I don't even think about it. Now, for almost a year, we've been talking about dorm visitation. What has come of it? A committee made a report, one which I could have supported and was entirely workable. The ACC threw out the report, told the committee to contact other schools about their programs (Why?) and send a letter to the parents (why?), and come back later with a new proposal. Nothing can be done about a co-ed dorm or, for that matter, buggy rooms, falling plaster, or sway-back beds, until all this mire can be cleared out of that committee on Dorm Life (one is tempted to ask if there is such a thing, or if it is possible under present conditions, but then the reader might la ugh, and it is really a crying matter!) What does it take to get the ACC moving?

What it takes is for a lot of students to get frustrated like hell, just like me, and start doing something, talking to people, asking some piercing questions. What directions do we see for our college? Where is it going? What relevance does our recently adopted statement of purpose have to today's conditions? How can the wishes of the students in regards to greater matters, such as teacher hiring, curriculem changes, administration hiring, etc., be expressed and brought to bear on these problems?

The answer that will be given to these questions is that we must look at things "Realistically," which in traditional Maryville vernacular means "with extreme caution and deliberation." I am thoroughly convinced that caution and deliberation are not what is needed around here. Why don't we try some good old-fashioned radicalism? We don't have much to lose that we wouldn't lose pretty soon anyway! How long did that professional educational advisor who was on campus this week say we had? "It's a shorter time than you would think!"

A REVIEW OF
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW
Blance Emless

Saturday night Maryville College was most fortunate to have Franco Zeffirelli's production of The Taming of the Shrew. This movie, although it has elements of the "cast of thousands" technique, is certainly well worth seeing. In the first place, the acting is superb. As one who had never seen the Burtons in action, I was tremendously impressed. Surely, there has never before been a more tyrannical Petruchio or a wilder, more shrewish Kate. Even the minor characters are well portrayed, especially the humorous schemer Hortensio.

Another remarkable feature of this film is its resemblance to Shakespeare's original drama. Although Zeffirelli has cut many lines and several scenes from the play and has added not a few of his own, his adherence to what we Shakespeare fanatics call "the spirit of Shakespeare" is commendable.

In fact, my only real criticism of the Saturday night presentation of this exceptional motion picture is of the equipment used for showing the film. Perhaps it is too expensive for a school of this size to purchase a projector with a scope sufficiently wide for showing more recent movies. This fact is regrettable, but understandable. I fail to understand, however, the continued use of the faulty sound equipment which can so tragically reduce Shakespeare ' s deathless poetry to a shrill squawk.

Let me plead for the purchase of new sound equipment as well as for the continued presentation of enjoyable motion pictures on our campus.

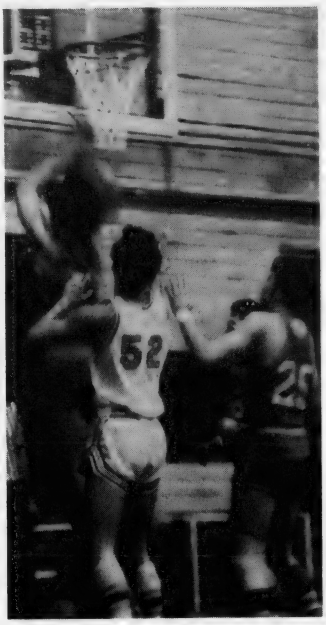
UCM reaches out

Like a gentle breeze, kindness blows upon the scenes of life,
Cooling overwrought selfishness and leaving a refreshing awareness of the greater joy in giving than in receiving.



Last Saturday a number of us experienced this awareness as we carried out a project initiated by the UCM People for Peace Committee. We devoted ourselves to a day of communication with some people of Maryville whom we helped. This had never been done before. The Community Action Center provided the names of people who needed a helping hand, and thirty of us broke up into four teams and headed for their homes. Some were sick, all were lonely. Somehow, tears of joy or hope in the eyes of a lonely, sick and embarrassed person made cleaning up a cold muddy garage the most rewarding work in the world. Their smiles of gratitude encouraged us to continue; perhaps we will come to adopt a family. Anyone can do it. Anyone can work for the joy that comes from giving, even if this is a selfish reason. Our engagement with these people brought us out of our isolated campus world into a more realistic world--a world of pain. Yet even the most despairing person can see hope through the eyes of you or me. If we only care...

Snowball to Cure Boredoomm!

Who says this is going to be another boring weekend at Maryville U.? They'd better not because all the arrangements for an entertaining evening are going to be provided. By who? Chi Beta and Kappa Phi. Is it going to be good? Yep! There's going to be a good band, "The Brotherhood," not a lot of psychedelic, just good dancing music. Now for atmosphere? Maybe snow scenes with an igloo to boot! The place is the ballroom of Lloyd TONIGHT from 9-12. So we'll see you all at the SNOW BALL.

WHOMP 'EM SCOTS

Basketball: REVIEW

The Scots maintained their winning streak on their home court Saturday, defeating Clinch Valley 77-72. Monday the team traveled to Milligan where they lost an overtime effort 90-85.

The game Saturday was close only because of Maryville ineptness at scoring. At times the Scots no doubt wished for a lid in the buckets as shots continued to rim out. With ten minutes left in the game the Maryville hoopsters were down ten. At this point the team began a concerted drive, climaxed by an unbelievable backhand driving layup by Warren Morgan. Foul shots provided the final margin. Scoring was as follows: Morgan 12, Barrows 12, Weston 11, Dildine 2, McKinstry 17, Hickman 6, Mize 8, Fox 9.

The Milligan game was close all the way, the biggest spread by either team being seven points. The inability to hit free throws proved to be the downfall of the Scots. The Scots saw a slim lead vanish as "Toonie" Cash hit a jumper which sent the game into overtime with the score being 76-76. Cash proved to be the hero in the overtime as he hit two quick buckets from which the Scots never recovered. Cash ended with 31 points. Warren Morgan who scored all nine points in the overtime, finished with 26 points and 20 rebounds. The rest of the scoring was: Barrows 16, Weston 13, McKinstry 22, Mize 2, Hickman 4, Dildine 2.

The Scots ventured to LMU on Thursday. Saturday, Emory and Henry pays a visit here. Next Tuesday the Scots go to Mars Hill and on Thursday, Johnson Bible College comes here.

MATMEN lose to Bulldogs...

The wrestling team went to U of Georgia Tuesday night. Harry Burnette won by decision. The final score was in favor of the Bulldogs, 35-3. Coming back to Maryville, Ray Nye was caught in a speed trap, doing 85 in a 70 mph zone. After Brain tried to cash his 50 dollar Christmas Club check and was turned down by several establishments, the sheriff obliged him and got someone to cash it. The Scots paid the 25 dollar fine and returned safely home. They go to Milligan College, outside Johnson City, Saturday, to meet those matmen there.

Bad your mintons!

An Elrodian Alpha eclipse of the moon will occur next week, Wednesday evening at 9:45. An Elrodian Alpha eclipse occurs when the sun comes between the earth and the moon (see illustration A). This is not to be confused with an Elrodian Beta eclipse, wherein the shadow of the sun obstructs the view of the earth from the moon.

To understand this phenomenon, try this simple experiment: place a glass full of room temperature water upon a room temperature table, in a room temperature room. Place beside it a glass full of boiling water(see illustration B). Mark the glasses so you will be able to distinguish between them. Let them stand overnight. The next morning (allowing at least 12½ hours to pass), test the water temperature with your finger. (You need not fear of burning yourself, for this law of physics is inviolable.) You will find that the boiling water has now dropped to room temperature, while the room temperature water has made no temperature rise or drop whatsoever!

Visitation PASSED

The A.C.C. met yesterday at 4 p.m. in Anderson 314, mainly to discuss visitation. Chris Lamm, co-chairman of the Residence Hall Committee, read the proposal for visitation. The Council discussed the 6 points concerning the philosophy of the issue: (1) Students should have some measure of responsibility in running their own affairs within their own living structures. (2) A new dorm policy would break down artificial separation that now exists on campus, and help establish an atmosphere more akin to a Christian community. (3) Visitation would better room upkeep. (4) Visitation would stimulate intellectual and interpersonal relationships. (5) Insufficient social activities on and near campus warrant visitation. (6) Surveys from other schools show that visitation increases academic achievement.

Rather than agree to the principle by consensus, the usual method of A.C.C. approval of new legislation, a vote was taken. The philosophy was approved 15-3.

Secondly, the proposal was debated: visits only occur by request of room occupants, guests must sign in, be escorted up, and later sign out. The residence hall staff is in charge of rule enforcement, and infractions will be handled by the dorm judicial council. The hours are 2-11 Sunday through Thursday, and 2-1 Friday and Saturday. (Individual dorms may reduce these hours by majority vote). The concluding vote was 16-2 in favor of visitation. (continued page 6, col. 2)

Roewade: The Artist And The Community

Karen Roewade, Affiliate Artist at Maryville College, returned to Maryville January 31, to continue her task of tearing down the velvet curtain which has too often and too long separated the performer from his audience.

The Affiliate Artist Program is a mission to America on behalf of the performing arts. Its purpose is to build audiences--to reach the 97% of the population who have never attended a live performance of any performing art. The program is founded on the idea that America needs her artists just as much as they need her. The American artist needs to create his audience as well as his art. He cannot perform without an audience. He can perform better with an informed and accepting audience.

As the name implies, the member artist is affiliated with either a community art center or an educational institution. The artist visits the community four to six times a year and participates in the total life of the community--clubs, churches, and public schools.

For this visit, Miss Roewade will be at Maryville College until February 13 and will spend much of her time in area high schools. She will perform at Everett High School, Friendsville Academy, Maryville High School, Maryville Junior High, and Doyle and South High Schools in Knoxville. In these informal concerts, she will demonstrate the technique and philosophy of her art and permit her audience to see her as DEBATE TEAM ...On the move!

Four members of the Maryville College Debate Team traveled to Wingate, N.C., this past weekend to participage in the Wingate Invitational Forensic Tournament. The squad consisted of two-man teams who debated both sides of the current intercollegiate question:

> Resolved: that the Federal Government should grant annually a specific percentage of its income tax revenue to the State governments.

Jan Welton, sophomore from Knoxville, and Steve Horning, senior from Indianapolis, made up one team, with Mike Montgomery, sophomore from Knoxville, and Robert Cox, freshman from Youngstown, comprising a second team. In addition to debating, the students entered competition in Persuasive, Impromptu, and After-Dinner Speaking and also Oral Interpretation.

Last year the Maryville College team of Robert Hutchens and Mack Garner, both of Blount County, won a trophy for third place at Wingate.

Following the Wingate Tournament, the squad will participage in the Tennessee Intercollegiate Tourney at U.T. on February 13-14, and in the Mint Julep, a regional tournament, at Memphis State University on February 20-21.

OPEN CHANNELS

In response to the dire need for open communication between Blacks and Whites on Maryville College Campus, a Black Interest Group has been formed. The group will meet bi-monthly and whenever the need arises to discuss local, nationwide, and world issues in relation to black and white communities. This is an extracurricular activity, but discussions will be planned in advance. Discussions are open to the entire college community and will be held in the second floor lounge of Thaw Hall on weekdays at 4:00 p.m.; dates will be announced.

The first discussion is scheduled for Friday, February 6, and the topic is "Black and White Students Reflect on Foreign Students' Reactions to American Relations." Terry Collins and Jim Spotts will discuss their experiences in Africa, and Helen Purnell will discuss her experiences in the Middle East.

editorial: VISITATION and ENROLLMENT

The other night as I labored frantically over my Independent Study, my tired mind began to wander. Thoughts of visitation and the Publication Committee's questionnaire filled my mind. The two definitely share common ground. The questionnaire finally revealed in black and white that Maryville College is suffering from a cancerous decrease in enrollment. Visitation could be the medicine to cure the cancer. However, enrollment increase and visitation will never come about if Maryville College continues to regard its students as irresponsible individuals. We are young adults who have taken on the responsibility of a college education--socially and intellectually. But the responsibility is presently a one-sided situation. College is supposed to be a training ground for that great big world out there, but unfortunately, Maryville College has adopted the task of creating a facade around itself. It wants us to be sheltered from the reality of that outside world. Maryville College has played the parent role--and a bad one at that--attempting to keep its children from growing up. Yet, it is Maryville College that needs to grow up, and place a little responsibility on its students. When Maryville does this, visitation and more students will come to a college that will offer a very good education--socially and intellectually.

LETTERS

Dear Editor,

It's a unique situation that I find myself in. Here I am a senior, getting ready to graduate in June, and as I look back over my four years here, and wonder about the preparation I have received for life, I find incongruencies in my background.

I look at that remarkable document known as the Statement of Purpose, and find that it asserts that, "An education that truly liberates involves full and free exploration." I also find that "The total college experience is designed to prepare the student for effective participation in the larger community of mankind." From that document, one can learn that the college stands "In the conviction that the most stimulating environment for learning is a vital community,..." and that "It seeks to establish a community in which all activities—intellectual, religious, social, cultural, physical--are coordinated so as to prevent distracting fragmentation."

As I look back over my career here at MC, I'm truly grateful for the many opportunities I have had for full and free exploration of intellectual matters. By the same token, I condemn the fragmentation that has been forced upon me. I am repulsed by the fact that my personal and social life have been subject to such paternalistic regulation.

A current issue is that of open dorms, or of visitation in dorm rooms of students of the opposite sex. In order to receive a complete education in preparation for the world into which we will graduate, we must not be protected from the inherent evils of visiting a member of the opposite sex in their "home away from home." I fail to see any evils inherent in such a program.

Some objections have been put forth by community members who feel that their right to run around in the dorms scantily clad will be violated. I maintain that their situation, under the current plan using an escort system, is little different from that of dwellers on the first floor of some of the dorms at the present time.

Although many appear afraid to verbalize it, I feel that the primary objection of many is that this will provide an open invitation to sexual intercourse. In the first place, there are plenty of opportunities at present for those who are really interested. One may say true, but a warm bed is a lot more inviting than a cold field. Granted this is so, but in the spring the fields will be warm, with the gentle fragrance of wildflowers.....Is there any need to say more? To get down to brass tacks, how many students do you think are going to risk a roommate's unexpected reappearance, or a friend dropping by to borrow a book, or the person in the next room guffawing over the squeaky bedsprings? Social control is going to take place, rest sate in that knowledge.

Oh yes I almost forgot about the objection that I almost forgot to mention is that there seems to be a fear that alumni might withhold funds for the college. It's rather ironical that one of the alumni contacted by the residence hall committee in an attempt to find out their reactions to the proposal replied that this would be a wonderful solution, especially at MC, because the students aren't permitted to have cars. Doesn't this lead you to question just how vitally interested and informed these withholding patrons really are?

Really, what this is all getting at is that I wish to have the freedom to make my own decisions in this matter, as in any other matter as long as it does not infringe upon the same rights for others. It seems to me that it is time that we at Maryville wake up to the inconsistencies in what we stand for, and if they really aren't what they are stated in the Statement of Purpose, won't somebody please tell me so that when some prospective student asks me about my Alma Mater in four months, I'll really know what to tell them?

To the Editor:

After spending a week on campus and hearing about some of the things that were happening I was both impressed and disappointed, and about the same issue.

I am very happy that an evaluation of the college community is being made and will be completed in the latter part of February. Of course many evaluations have been made before (by students and faculty alike) but what is most exciting about this evaluation is that it is being done by an independent firm. I am of the belief that this firm will come up with little new, that is information and evaluation, that community members have not already come up with. Of course that remains to be seen but if I am right I do hope that administrators will listen to the suggestions of the report. (Maybe that will be something different!) In any case I strongly recommend that the report be made known and published to the Maryville College community directly or via the All College Council, which reminds me of another point. I understand that the All College Council was neither advised nor asked for consent on having the evaluation in the first place. I know this to be the opinion of over half of the All College Council members. I can only remark that while I think the evaluation is one of the most creative and courageous things undertaken by a college I do believe that the way in which it was ordered (with quiet and through a central power, therefore weakening the concept of ALL COLLEGE) is indicative of sloppy administration that makes reevaluation a necessity if we expect the college to survive.

Sincerely,
Brian H. Childs '69

Since coming to Maryville College, I have heard many complaints about the lack of social activity and the need for "something to do" after class hours. Now, through your committee, we have a chance to tackle the problem in a realistic fashion; however, taking a look around campus at the efforts which are currently being made, I am reminded of the observation that "a camel is a horse that was designed by a committee." In other words everybody is making their effort to improve the social atmosphere, but the uncoordinated design that is being created looks an awful lot like a camel to me.

Item #1: Concerts, pop and otherwise...After working with the Artist Series for a year and looking at the prices charged by groups and individuals with any sort of renown, I am forced to take a realistic point of view that either we charge $10.00 a ticket to get the big names or we conduct a series featuring relatively unknown performers in a variety of programs designed for the benefit of our faculty and students which can be obtained at a price we can afford. There is no walkable middle road. In the area of Pop Concerts, we face the same situation. The really big "name" groups are in the $5000-$12,000 range and even while admiring the bravery of a handful who want to sponsor this kind of group on our campus, I only wish that we were able to take a mature attitude toward it and say to ourselves and our high school classmates back home: "We are too small a college to swing that kind of deal right now."

This rambling commentary is not without a solution. In fact there are several: 1) The College could hire a Director of Student Activities and Special Events. Before someone yells "MONEY" may I point to the way in which this works on other campuses where this sort of fellow (or girl) lives in the dorm and replaces the traditional housemother, thus serving two functions. However it would be necessary that he be given the full authority to coordinate programs, concerts, dances, etc., and to say to all of us things like: "You are cutting your own throat if you plan two expensive concerts and two movies in one week!"

Solution #2 rests in taking a long and satisfactory look at our big neighbor across the way called the Knoxville Civic Coliseum. Before somebody screams "UT" at me, may I remind you here that the University and the Civic auditorium are not one and the same. The activities sponsored there are as much for the people of Maryville as for the people of Knoxville. As to the wealth of programs there, you can see anything you want, such as recent Broadway plays, good symphonies and vocalists, and this year there were five pop concerts, the last one in the series coming up on Feb. 4 when Gary Puckett and the Union Gap will be appearing. Prices are not unreasonable at $3.00, $4.00, and $4.50. In fact, if we could afford to charge less than that the computers are all off!!

When I have dared to speak of these things in public, I have encountered arguments to the effect that we would be abandoning our student body to the wiles of Knoxville and that we would become a "bedroom" school to UT. However, if we stopped saying "no" and tried "why not" we might find that we could arrange a ticket subsidy from our activity fee for some of the Knoxville concerts, therefore making our community a part of their sponsorship (so you could go home to Philly or Miami and say "guess who we had for concerts this year"). We might also arrange for a charter bus if that was deemed necessary to provide transportation for our non-driving students.

These are only a few of the possibilities, if we only take a look at who we are: Maryville College....a small college...with good neighbors.

Lucy Proffitt

I am the one who wrote the "Dearly Beloved" article last week, and I think it served its purpose by raising a few eyebrows, raising some interest, or getting some people mad at me or at the "system"). I am now not so worried about visitation not passing as I am about the form it will take when it is passed. I'm afraid they will try to make do, or "experiment," with a very, very restricted form of visitation, more specifically, a form allowing it on Sat. and Sun. only. That, to me, is missing the whole point of visitation. For one thing, it cuts out almost entirely the "normalcy" of the situation. It keeps visitation as something special, something given to us as a special privilege rather than a right. It also cuts out the idea that this will be an optional study area (instead of in the library, which seems to be the only other place on campus specifically built for any kind of communal study) and an optional relaxation area (instead of the student center or the dorm lounges).

As I see it, if visitation is made a "special" thing for weekends only, it will be used as a "special" thing, for weekends only (which might please some detracters of the idea, for then the kids would be more likely to do just as they were afraid they would, namely substitute the room for the fields. Unless it is opened up completely, (meaning a very substantial period of every day of the week) we will have merely legislated in a system of regularly scheduled open houses, leaving very little room for the original concept, a normal relationship between students without discrimination as to sex, to grow. I understand that the proposal is coming out of committee, possibly for the Friday ACC meeting. If you're interested please come.

I stand looking at you Maryville College in utter disgust! You claim to be one of the few leaders in higher education and governmental structure, yet you let your children starve to death with the bloated need for social updating. The Mickey Mouse government of All College Council pounces viciously on any tid-bit of academia, but when it comes to action on a social issue such as visitation, it suddenly contracts polio, T.B., Cerebral Palsy, and Cancer with a slight but significant touch of Yellow Jaundice.

You hire a consultant and he tells it like it is; and many of our "leaders" choose to close their virgin ears to its implication and say, "It's not so." Do you really think that this professional is so biased and anti-Maryville that he is going to bother taking a side on the issue of whether this college is dying or not? How long did he say we had; even with 4 million dollars in securities? Are you really so naive to think that the students of this school will sit passively back and let you kill visitation?

Oh, but I've seen your tactics at work before. You take an issue which is Hot, and talk it to death, or send it back to committee, or bloat it as a moral issue, or keep it hush! hush!, or pull a fast tricky maneuver in parliamentary procedure which fakes everyone out until it's too late. Sure, that's all "community action." And yet you can sit there with a straight, pious face and look into the Biafran eyes of Social Starvation on this campus and say, "Forgive them when they plead for visitation, for they know not what they do." Well don't count on it!!!!!!

DISGUSTED!!

This letter was to have appeared in last week's ECHO.

Anyone for "Decoupage"?

What is going on at MC right now that is exciting? In a state of apathy you may say nothing. Or, in a narrow-minded condition you may say only the much talked about "relevant" issues of moral, freedom, justice, the importance of the individual--all the "in" topics. Yet, it may be the so-called smaller things in life (as opposed to many high ideals that never come into actuality) that come into actuality and make up the whole of the individual that are more important. MC is chock full of these smaller cogs in a big wheel just waiting for pent up individuals looking for an outlet to take advantage of.

Don't turn off yet! One such activity is the decoupage group. Sound enticing? Well, it could be if you gave it a chance. If you've seen those shiny decorating plaques in the store with a bird or flower design on them, then you've seen the finished product of decoupage. It is an old art that originated in France where furniture was trimmed with small painting and gilt.

And now, especially in the past five years, decoupage has found many dabblers in the U.S. To be sure, by the year 1970 it has grown to include a vast variety of objects besides furniture. One can air his painting or designing urge on boxes, purses, statue figures, glass, trays, plaques or on practically anything his imagination wishes.

Decoupage is not only an outlet for a certain few persons but it can be used to make original gifts. Or, it can be utilized as a profitable money venture.

This microcosmic group in a macrocosmic world just may be something that will enrich your life. If you are interested or just want more information, get in touch with Mrs. Pope (Dorm III housemother) who heads the group. There is a basic cost for certain materials but they go a long way. The decoupage group meets in Fayerweather 207 every Tuesday from 3 to 5. After you've learned the art, you can work intermittently as your schedule allows.

MC THEATRE presents...

The Maryville College Theater Group is now in rehearsals for the production of Eugene O'Neil's classic play, Desire Under the Elms, to be presented on February 20 and 21 at 8:15 p.m. in the college theater.

This is a powerful play about a group of people carried away by a torrent of emotions on a New England farm.

The cast is made up of Ephraim Cabot who, well along in years, is bringing a third wife, much younger than himself, to his home. Eben, a son by Cabot's second wife, is determined to stay and fight this new rival for his father's land. Abbie Putman, Ephraim's third wife played by Diane Wood, is a cold and masterful woman who uses Eben to insure her rights to the Cabot Farm.

Stuart Smith has been cast as Ephraim Cabot and Paul Hindman as Eben. Others in the cast include James Stewart, Carl Sutton, Judy Carroll, John Chism, Joel Tome, Harry Weisgerber, Mark Mertz, Carolie Fisher, Donald Hand, Duncan Randall, Dawn Sterling and Sue Ellen Smith. This production is under the direction of Thomas E. Jones, who is assisted by Larry Forte.

The author, Eugene O'Neil, has generally been regarded as one of America's greatest playwrights. He has received four Pulitzer Prizes and was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1936.

Desire Under the Elms has been regarded as one of O'Neil's most important plays. It helped explode the illusion that rural life in America was all sweetness and light, and that only in the big cities were crimes of passion ever committed.

Mc EAGERS SCORE 2 and 1 despite flu menace

In recent basketball action the Scots were two and one. The defeat was by Bryan 85-83, there on Monday. Last week Maryville beat Johnson Bible College 98-69 and Warren Wilson 83-75.

Against Johnson Bible College, Scots stormed out to a 40-11 lead after nine minutes of play. Mike Barrows led the early barrage with 21 ppints and John Weston added 16 points. Coach Baird put the reserves in and they kept up the pace building up a 66-36 halftime lead. The Scots in the second half were never pressed and won 98-69. In addition to Mike and John the scoring was: Dildine 2, Mize 8, McKinstry 10, Fox 23, Arlington 2, Bible 2, Boggs 2, Hickman 4. Warren Morgan was down with flu and did not play.

Saturday the Scots, playing without Morgan, Hickman, and Arlington beat Warren Wilson 83-75. The Scots trailed early in the first half, but took the lead late in the half and were never headed afterwards. John Weston scored 20 points and got 14 rebounds, Mike Barrows tallied 19 points and picked off eleven muffs. The rest of the scoring was Dildine 9, Mize 10, McKinstry 19, Fox 6.

Monday the Scots played Bryan. The boys with the flu were still out and Steve Boggs became the fourth victim. The ball game was close from the opening. The largest lead was seven points. The Scots led 51-46, but foul problems plagued them throughout the second half. Barrows and Weston played much of the second half with four fouls. Bryan took the lead 82-81 on a field goal by Roddy with a minute remaining. After a missed shot Bryan was fouled and upped their lead to 3 points. Bob Fox closed the lead to one, but a free throw at the buzzer ended the hopes of the Scots. The scoring was Barrows 19, Mize 10, Weston 9, McKinstry 27, Dildine 12, Fox 6, Cox 0.

The LMU Railsplitters used their superior height and hot shooting to subdue the Scots 94-86. After a close first half the Railsplitters broke the game open and the Scots could never catch up. Rick Trivett scored 30 for LMU. The Scots scoring was: Morgan 17, Barrows 4, McKinstry 6, Weston 16, Dildine 8, Hickman 7, Mize 17, Fox 11.

Last Saturday night Emory and Henry sparked by a 30 point performance by Pat Burns were able to edge the Scots 65-60. Many times the Scots got close but could never take the lead in the second half. With 30 seconds left the Scots trailed by one, but as had been the case all night Burns added four points to ice the verdict. For the Scots, Morgan had 13, Weston 13, Barrows 8, Hickman 11, Mize 4, Dildine 4, McKinstry 5, Fox 2.

Tuesday night, the Mars Hill Lions hitting a torrid 60% from the field in the first half, helped them to a 109-90 victory. Although the Scots hit a good 48% they were never able to cut into the lead as the Lions hit equally well in the second half. For the Lions Dick Mayozer got 30 and Jim Wilmouth topped all scorers with 34. For the Scots: Weston 11, Morgan 11, Barrows 18, Mize 9, McKinstry 29, Dildine 6, Fox 4.

an involved person who cares about them, instead of a performer isolated and insulated by the velvet curtain.

Since her last visit to Maryville, Miss Roewade has been touring with the Metropolitan Studio Company in upper New York State. She has sung ten performances of Pagliacci by Leoncavallo.

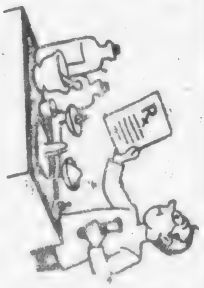
This is the third year Maryville College has participated in the Affiliate Artist Program. Miss Roewade is one of forty articulate artists who are becoming involved with audiences in college communities across the nation. This program is made possible by grants and gifts from the National Endowment for the Arts, Ford Foundation, Sears-Roebuck Foundation, United Church of Christ, Lutheran Church and gifts from other private foundations.

In appreciation of Dorm #3's "breaking of the ice," which they accomplished by holding a freshmen dance a few Saturdays ago, Dorm 1, home of the alluring Modine Grunch, will reciprocate with a dessert party and a dance. On Friday, the 6th of February, corresponding quads of Dorm 3 and Dorm I are invited to participage in this dessert party which will commence at 6:30 p.m. Provisions will be made for Dorm 3 quads which do not have corresponding quads occupied in Dorm I. The types of desserts served will depend on the whims of the girls in each individual quad.

Following the "yummies," a dance scheduled to start at 8:00 in the front lounge will be held with an open invitation to the entire campus. If you prefer folk to rock, bring your guitar. A folk "sing-in" will be offered in the back lounge while the dance is in progress.

Dean Massey will preside as the official hostess during the duration of this entire occasion. Under the direction of Amy Savory, the chairman of Dorm I's house council, various committees have been assigned to prepare for this coming event. Judy Green and Emily Dowdy are in charge of the over-all organization which entails decorations and format.

The evening will reach it s pinnacle with the announcement of the freshman from Dorm 3 who has been voted to be the most ideal date for Modine Grunch. The voting by the Dorm I girls will take place sometime before February 6th.



Music for MC!

Dr. Carl Alette, a 1942 graduate of Maryville College, has composed a symphony for concert band in honor of Maryville College's Sesquicentennial which will be premiered at the College Saturday, February 7, at 8:15 p.m.

The composition "Symphony for Band" will be performed by the Maryville College Concert Band under the direction of Dan B. Stallings, assistant professor of music. The program will also include the work of another graduate, Charles Huffman, '49, instructor of music, Union University, Jackson, Tenn., and an arrangement by Maryville College senior Harry E. Weisgerber, Cherry Hill, N.J.

The composition which Dr. Alette has written for Maryville College is approximately 15 minutes in length. There is no program or story associated with the music. The music is continuous although it has within it a number of different moods. The first portion of the composition is a slow, solemn section which serves as a kind of introduction. Next comes a more rapidly flowing section which is followed by a quicker march-like section and finally a Finale which contains fugal writing and also a restatement of some of the material of the introduction.

It must be remembered that this is an experimental period. All aspects of the policy will be evaluated in May. As for the Board's connection, visitation, in this experimental form, has been approved by the executive committee of the Board. The philosophy of visitation will be placed on their agenda in May for consideration of whether visitation falls under the Board's jurisdiction.

REVIEW... "Noye's Fludde" by Aphrodite Jones

Having been introduced to miracle plays in sophomore English and Benjamin Britten in high school chorus, it was interesting to see how Britten expressed Noye's Fludde musically. It was not a disappointment. The music captures both the intensity of the God-man relationship and the lightheartedness of man's relationships with his neighbors and family and at the same time makes the story cohesive.

The college production was a continuation of the spirit of cooperation which produced the first miracle plays, with more members of the Maryville community present to see the good in our community on the hill than at any other CIV.

The sung dialogue was sometimes not distinguishable over the orchestra which is sad because Britten is a good vocal composer and the anachronisms and middle English of the miracle plays were missed. However, the music and actions were expressive, and the well known story not hard to follow. The set and lighting were excellent and in keeping with the mood of the play. The whole performance had a great deal of spirit and succeeded in capturing the audience.

And still another M.C. GRAD makes it big!

Roberta Howie Phay, assistant professor of art at the University of Mississippi, a sculptor and a painter, has an exhibit in the Fine Arts Center Gallery at Maryville College during the month of February.

The exhibit includes a selection of her sculpture. She sculptures in ceramic, cast stone, bronze and aluminum forms which she sometimes combines with wood, welding or paintings. She has used religious symbolism on several of her ceramic reliefs. All of her ceramic sculpture is made from unglazed native Mississippi clay which she colors by adding oxides and other coloring agents to the clay before she fires it.

Mrs. Phay, a 1936 graduate of Maryville College, holds the M.Ed. and M.F.A. degrees from the University of Mississippi. She is a member of the board of the Southern Association of Sculptors and a member of the Southeastern College Arts Conference and is listed in Who's Who of American Women.

In 1967 Mrs. Phay worked on a University of Mississippi faculty research grant entitled "Foam Vaporization Casting of Cellular Expanded Polystyrene" and later experimented with the foam vaporization casting of polystyrene into bronze.

La Revue Moderne, an art magazine published in France, chose Mrs. Phay and her work for their May 1968 article on "Southern Sculpture." Her work has been exhibited in more than 40 different art galleries. Some of them are: Forum Gallery, New York; Dulin Gallery of Art, Knoxville; Birmingham Museum of Art; Creative Gallery, New York; Isaac Delagdo Museum, New Orleans; High Museum of Art, Atlanta; Exhibition Momentum, Chicago; and a one-man show in The Gallery, Memphis and the Municipal Gallery, Jackson, Miss.

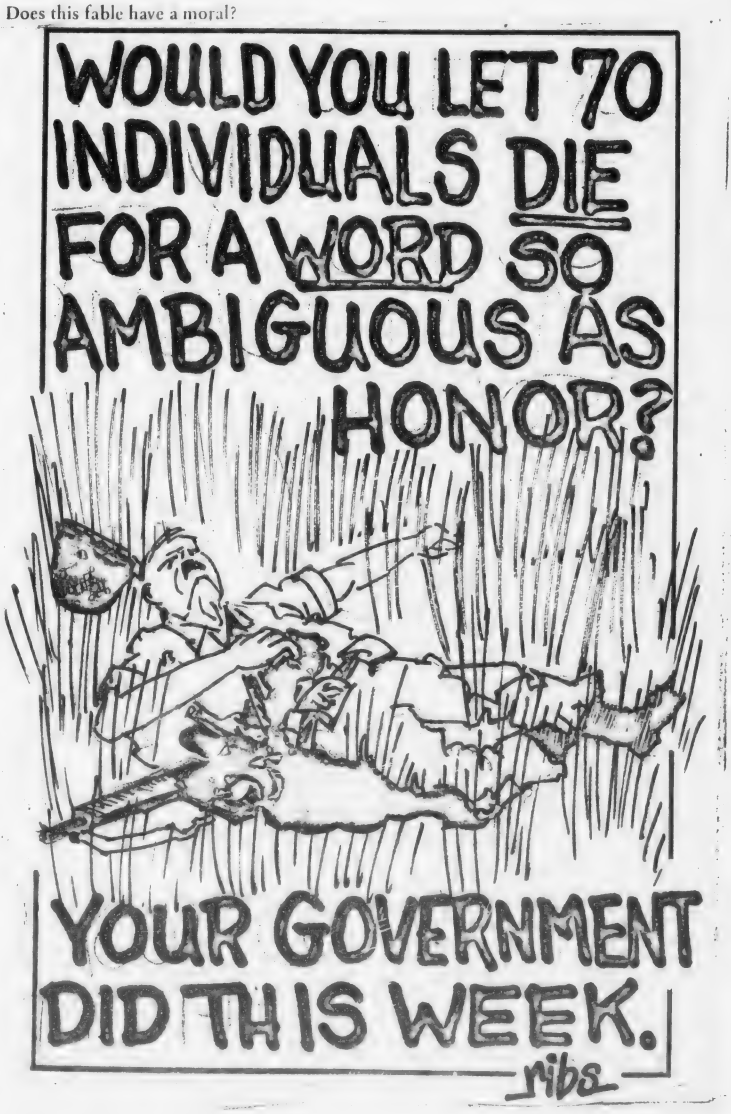
The Maryville College Fine Arts Center Gallery is open to the public Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. until 9:00 p.m.; Saturdays from 8:00 a.m. until 5:00 p.m.; and on Sundays from 12 Noon until 5:00 p.m.

"Fable of the Animal School"

Once upon a time, the animals decided they must do something heroic to meet the problems of the "new world," so they organized a school. They adopted an activity curriculum consisting of running, climbing, swimming, and flying and, to make it easier to administer, all the animals took all the subjects.

The duck was excellent in swimming, better in fact than his instructor, and made passing grades in flying, but he was very poor in running. Since he was slow in running, he had to stay after school and also drop swimming to practice running. This was kept up until his web feet were badly worn and he was only average in swimming. But average was acceptable in school, so nobody worried about that except the duck.

The rabbit started at the top of the class in running, but had a nervous breakdown because of so much make-up work in swimming.



The squirrel was excellent in climbing until he developed frustration in the flying class where his teacher made him start from the ground-up instead of from the tree-top down. He also developed a charlie horse from over exertion and then got a C in climbing and D in running.

The eagle was a problem child and was disciplined severely. In the climbing class he beat all the others to the top of the tree, but insisted on using his own way to get there.

At the end of the year, an abnormal eel that could swim exceedingly well, and also run, climb, and fly a little held the highest average and was valedictorian.

The Prairie dogs stayed out of school and fought the tax levy because the administration would not add digging and burrowing to the curriculum. They apprenticed their children to a badger and later joined the groundhogs and gophers to start a successful private school.

Does this fable have a moral?

THERE IS NO BARNWARMING IN BELGIUM
by Ethel Ann Scruggs a former MC campus organizer
(Junior Year Abroad)

There are no Barnwarmings, no Frosh follies, Chi Beta breakfasts, Homecoming floats, nor band suppers---yet I'm still hanging on--with a new and exuberant interest in people, places, politics, and the past. I have a routine now. At least five days of the week are routine---maybe that means I'm fitting into the groove. The other two days, however, are always completely different, completely unpredictable and completely lovely. Let me first describe a typical day of my "routine."

At 7:45 a.m. my clanging alarm bids me to throw off my blue satin feather coverlet. Hastily I don my black French wool slacks--black so they won't show the charcoal I draw with--and an imported sweater. Gulping down Nescafe, I give a "bonjour" to my landlady standing at the stove stirring a tin basin of sheets. I help her open the windows--we must air out the apartment in the morning and after every meal. If it is Monday, I trot a quick 4 blocks to the University--very large and very urban. As students live in town apartments or with their families, they commute to the university for classes only--their close friends are made through long term outside contacts--sometimes a lonely barrier for foreign students. As I hurry past the different department buildings I scan the student activity around me: first year men students with their heads shaved as initiation by their department seniors; groups of Congolese students--the women looking serenely elegant in their long print skirts and high colorful turbans, and the men eyeing with fascination passing blond girls; then the large swarms of noisy, leaflet laden politicians singing chants and waving their communist flags. I reach my classroom a bit breathless realizing how stupid it was to hurry as the professor is always 20 minutes late. The prof arrives and I begin taking my 10 pages of notes. But my mind wanders, I think of the liberty of the University student. Nobody cares what he wears, who he sleeps with, how he drinks, or how he lives. Ahh--what freedom. But then nobody cares. The University is simply different lectures in different classrooms, different experiments in different laboratories. Then I think of the other student life I have known--the student life amid restrictions. Those painful restrictions--now seeming so stupid, so unimportant. But with the restrictions there was a community, a close knit community living together and respecting each other. And somebody cared. Now I force my mind to concentrate on the comparison of Greek and Renaissance sculpture, proud of my comprehension of the professor's fast French. Yet I miss all names and dates completely.

If it is not Monday but another weekday, the morning begins with a 15-minute wait for a bus. Standing in the small booth at the bus stop, I read the graffitti: "Socrates eats hemlock," "Chastity is its own punishment," "Liberty for Bruxelles," "Kill Mobutu". Finally the bus screeches to a stop and I push and shove to get on--sometimes I get a seat --then I join the rest of the passengers in staring. For all of my 30-minute bumpy ride I stare, expressionless, at the smug Belgians staring at me and at each other. Plump housewives with their proud fur collared coats, student secretaries with long lower eyelashes drawn in heavy black, small jubilant children heedless of their crisp-starched uniforms. With a jolting thud, an old man sits next to me--he smells terrible.

I reach my bus stop and once more I push and shove to get off. I'm now on the big downtown boulevard where I love the sights and sounds of the everyday, European carnival. I hasten through the streams of business men and store clerks, aware of the screeching plea of the pineapple vendor, the blind [illegible] at their [illegible] by the [illegible] portable stove [illegible] garish [illegible] tique window [illegible] the [illegible] statues. Reaching the large partitioned study of my drawing class, I search for my easel and then enter into my trance of concentration, painfully studying the model's anatomy and position, shadows and contours, mass and weight. I have never before had the opportunity to really grasp the spirit of the human form for my previous experience had been with models ridiculously distorted by tight bikinis or, even worse, swarthy leotards. Although my professor is in the classroom for only 5 minutes, I am inspired to work and my 8-hour day at the Academy leaves me exhausted.

The [illegible] of the day, however, is brightened with chatter among my contemporaries--characters I never dreamed were even human. The nephew of the Ambassador to Turkey who, to the uncle's disappointment, comes to school only often enough to stay on the roll while spending the rest of his time with his girls in the plusher nightclubs--but he has such imagination for fashion designing. Then there is a really talented boy whose work leaves me breathless--when he completes his 6 years of study his aim is to be on the staff of Mad Magazine. And there is one store window decorator who wears more jewelry than I've owned in my life. These are people of my "routine."

However, routine is only a morcel of my life now-- weekends and occasionally evenings hold unexpected adventures--people and situations I never dreamed could be so exciting to discover. But despite my exciting world of dreamlike setting, art, and musical wealth, I find myself closing each day with thoughts of a campus!

The Big Blue Echo

February 13, 1970

INTEGRATED Who are you kidding man?!

In commemoration of Black History Week, February 8-14, the editor of the ECHO would like to acknowledge the black students of Maryville College. In his following remarks, Larry McDowell, a freshman, points out the increasing need of black students and black faculty at Maryville College.

Many people will boastfully say that Maryville College is an integrated institution. They think this statement is true because there are sixteen black students enrolled here. Sixteen black students in comparison to the number of whites here on campus is not integration, it is a form of tokenism. A large enough number for us to be comfortable among ourselves, but a small enough number to limit our involvement in the community life. Our existence here goes practically unnoticed. We have no strong representation because we are too small in number to be represented. There is nothing here that we can relate to our environment. We are being conditioned to live in an all-white society.

Since I have been here at Maryville I feel myself losing mental contact with the black community. There will be those who will ask, "Why don't you go to a black school?" The purpose of integration should be to bridge the gap of communication between the races. I would like to know more about all of the people that make up my environment. Here at Maryville, there is no compromise. Black students are forced to cross the bridge of communication and learn only the way in which whites communicate. If this were an integrated institution, there would be a compromise of ideas, both black and white.

Integration of Maryville College would require not only an increase in the number of black students, but also an integration of faculty and administration--of ideas and courses in the curriculum. There should be an emphasis on blackness not only in the form of a Black Studies program, but, incorporated in the present curriculum studies. Believe it or not there is more to black people than riots, revolution, and demonstrations. There are more important blacks besides Booker T. Washington and Martin Luther King, Jr.

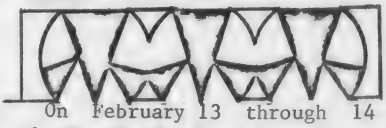
The black students here at Maryville need understanding and leadership. The type of leadership and understanding that only a black could give. There is no one that can counsel us here at Maryville. There are many that will sympathize with our problems and lead us in their own ways. It would be foolish to say that we are the same. Blacks and whites are exactly opposite in many aspects.

If Maryville College continues to front as an integrated institution, then why not integrate? Don't segregate us from the community and our culture. Help us become a part of the community. I am asking that Maryville College let me graduate a satisfied well-educated Black man, instead of a well-conditioned Uncle Tom.

Southern Tour in sight for the M.C. CHOIR

The Maryville College Choir's annual spring itinerary has been established and plans are being completed for 41 vocally talented students to take a chartered bus trip to cities in Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and North Carolina, March 13-23.

The choir, under the direction of Dr. Harry H. Harter since 1947, will sing before concert audiences and church congregations in Nashville and Memphis, Tennessee; Birmingham, Athens, and Huntsville, Alabama; Albany and Decatur, Georgia; and Charlotte, North Carolina.



A pre-tour choir concert will be given in the First Presbyterian Church, Oak Ridge, Tennessee, on Sunday evening March 8, at 7:30 p.m.

The home concert has been scheduled in Wilson Chapel on the Maryville College campus Tuesday evening, March 24, at 8:15 p.m.

The choir has traveled over 40,000 miles in the past 22 years to appear in well over 100 cities east of the Mississippi River.

The Maryville College Choir has been chosen as one of the official broadcasting choirs of the United Presbyterian Church, and has been heard on the Protestant Hour, the Armed Forces Radio Network, the NBC National Radio Pulpit, the CBS Church of the Air, and on the "Great Choirs of America" series, and the Voice of America.

The concert will include sacred music of the lenten and Easter Season.

On February 13 through 14 the People for Peace committee of UCM will hold another Peace Vigil. This Peace Vigil, like the one held in December will have as its focus point the flame for peace which will last for the duration of the Vigil. Also on the itinerary will be several pray-ins for peace and a film about war. The location for this three day event will be Frisby Field. Everyone is welcome to come and spend from a few minutes to an all nighter with us. Come help us "Pray for Peace."

In today's rapidly changing world, we students must be trained to take our place as adults. The uneducated will have no place, neither will those unprepared in basic attitudes to understand and respect the difference of others. Only a truly integrated education can properly prepare us to function with dignity in our society.

We need some sort of academic adjustment, first of all, in both opinions and programs. I'm not asking for separate Black Studies, but an incorporation of Black Culture into our predominantly Anglo-American oriented subject matter. Where are the Black authors in American Lit.? Were there any other important Negro leaders between Booker T. and Martin L.? How would History 101 be interpreted if taught by a Black professor?

Who can say that lack of cultural information does not injure the Black students here at M.C.? Already blasted by prejudice, they cannot help but feel shut out from various opportunities. Sixteen is not an adequate number for any kind of socializing. The limited number of Black students on this campus seems to be a token gesture of the white neo-liberalism here. We do not seem to realize that making them Uncle Toms is widening their separation from the community, thus postponing that reconciliation of the races which hopefully is yet to come.

RÉMEMBER VALENTINE'S DAY

Willeus on India

—At the meeting last Tuesday of the Maryville-Alcoa Welcome Wagon Newcomers Club, Dr. and Mrs. Malcolm M. Willey described the problems confronting an American family while living in India. Dr. Willey is visiting professor and chairman of the department of sociology at Maryville College.

For five years the Willey family lived in Calcutta where Dr. Willey served as an educational specialist with the Ford Foundation.

In presenting their program, Dr. Willey spoke first of the contrasts that characterize India....ranging from the geographical to the social and economic. "India," said Dr. Willey, "not only includes 40 mountain peaks that are over 24,000 feet tall, but also arid plains and deserts; its weather ranges from the freezing snows of the Himalyas to the tropical climates of the south." "More important," he added, "are the great contrasts in social conditions represented by fabulous wealth of a few and the miserable poverty of the many."

Mrs. Willey discussed how an American adjusts to such conditions as described by Dr. Willey. It was her observation that for a western family, life in Calcutta could be relatively easy and pleasant, but for most Indians, there was a

"Buddy, can ya spare a hand?"

Well the time has finally come! Sponsored by People for Peace and working with the Blount County Community Action Committee, a group of students offered their services to clean up a few homes in the Maryville-Alcoa community. The first time was a little disheartening but we have kept the faith and are going to go out again this Saturday, February 14. Our purpose is to show the people of Maryville-Alcoa that we do care if they live in a bug infested house or if their children don't know how to wash their faces properly. There is so much good that we could do if we only had the man and woman power to do it with. We are asking the people who went in January to get together with other members of their group and go back to the house they went to. If you are interested in helping, sign up on the sheet in the post office or contact Melissa Collins by leaving her a note in Box 2576.

NEW PROVIDENCE catches up

Beginning February 15 at 8:45 a.m., New Providence Presbyterian Church will host a 30-minute Worship in Contemporary Style utilizing folk music, spirituals, and secular songs with a message. In place of the traditional sermon, there will be short films, dialogues, drama, poetry, recordings, and multimedia presentations. The language of the prayers and litanies is that of the 70's. The first four of the twelve sessions will include:

February 15 - Love Feast - Richard Harrison, David Ross
February 22 - Poverty and God - Gerald Cooper
March 1 - Good Green Earth - Robert Ramger
March 8 - Community Concerns - Thomas Puroff

A bus will leave in front of the Chapel at 8:30 sharp!

VESPERS

Vespers this Sunday night will be a fireside communion worship service to be held in Pearsons at 6:30. Please note the change of time and place, and make plans to attend. Don't forget about Tuesday and Thursday morning worship services held in the little chapel during the break. Do you feel empty inside? Looking for something but not sure what? Give these worship services a chance--and you just may find the answer!

Next Monday, the spring football practice for returning football players will begin. Some of the returners will not join drills until late because of their participation in Wrestling and Basketball teams.

Cross-Country

In a Cross-Country meet held in Knoxville on Sunday, Maryville College runners did very well. Dave Wiley, a senior won the 18 mile race in the time of one hour fifty-seven minutes thirty-seven seconds. Freshman Doug Chase was second and Sophomore John Powell was fifth.

Boydson's Bangers: 9 and 11

The Scots' record stands at 9-11 after three recent games. The Scots dropped a 79-69 decision to Lee College, 96-87 to Centre, and then avenged an earlier defeat by downing Bryan 82-77.

The Lee College game was close all the way until the last minute. The Scots could never get the lead in the second half and as a result had to gamble for the ball. Lee took advantage of this and a few more unlucky breaks as they increased the margin to ten. The Scots' scoring was Barrows 15, Weston 15, Mize 14, McKinstry 10, Morgan 9, Dildine 4, Hickman 2.

The Centre College Colonials took advantage of their hot shooting and a leaky Scot defense to pin a 96-87 setback on the Scots. After trailing by thirteen points, the Scots put on a comeback and took a 65-64 lead with ten minutes to go. But at that point the Scots went cold and some costly turnovers gave the Colonials a lead they never relinquished. The Scots were paced by Dan McKinstry with 28, followed by Mize with 19, Morgan 11, Barrows 12, Dildine 1, Fox 3, Hickman 4, Weston 9.

The Scots got revenge on Bryan, here Monday 82-77. Although the score looks close, the game was really not much of a contest. At one stage the Scots led by 25. The Scots used a 52% shooting percentage with some slick passing to get the lead and then build. Mike Barrows tallied 19, McKinstry 15, Dildine 13, Mize 10, Weston 8, Hickman 6, Morgan 9, Fox 2. Cox, Arlington, Bible, Boggs all played, but did not score.

Last night the Scots played Milligan here. On Saturday, they play Tusculum College. On Monday, the Scots close out their home schedule when they then entertain the Mars Hill Lions. Thursday the Scots travel to Emory and Henry and the Scots close their schedule next Saturday in Chattanooga against Tenn. Temple College.

continuous struggle to maintain bare existence.

In concluding, Dr. Willey summarized the major problems facing India: how to bring a nation that is 70 percent illiterate up to modern educational standards; how to increase the food supply so that millions will not live as they now do on the brink of starvation; how to control the birth rate which adds more than 12 million a year to the population; and how to achieve national integration in a country that is badly divided by language and political differences.

"The significance of these problems," Dr. Willey said, "becomes all the more evident to anyone who has for five years lived in India and then moves to enjoy the kind of life that is offered in such a community as Maryville-Alcoa. It takes a residence abroad to make one fully appreciate the blessings we here enjoy."

FORENSICS DEPT.: DEBATE TEAM at T.I.F.A.T.

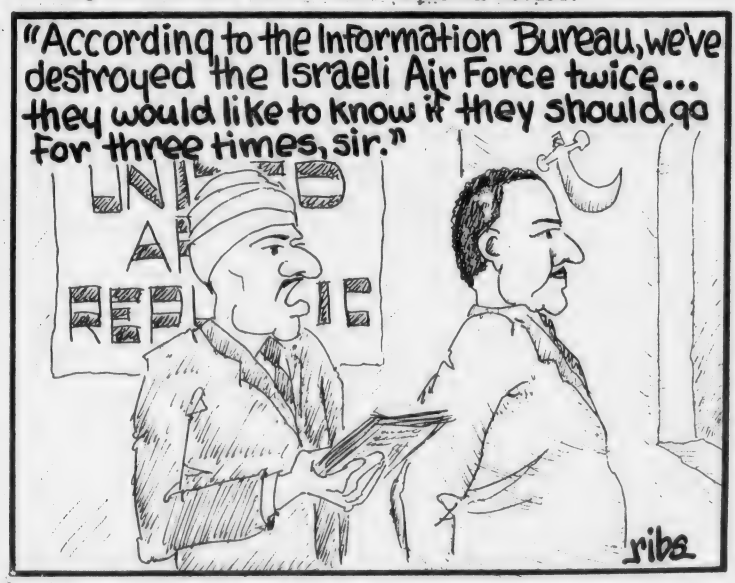
At the Tennessee Intercollegiate Forensic Association Tournament this week, Maryville College will have one of its largest squads of participants in recent years. The tournament, scheduled for Friday and Saturday, February 13-14, will be held at the University of Tennessee Student Center.

Representing Maryville College in debate will be Jan Welton and Steve Horning, entered in the senior division; and Bob Cox and Mike Montgomery, who are entered in the division for first year debators. The entries in Persuasive Speaking are Larry Fort, Bob Cox, and Jan Welton. In The Extemporaneous Speaking Division, where topics are drawn from current events and the contestant has one hour to prepare his speech, Steve Horning and Stewart Smith will represent the college. The contains the largest Maryville College entry, with Paul Hindman, Ernie Foster, Stewart Smith, and Steve Horning preparing for that contest. The college will also have one entrant in After Dinner Speaking which is still to be decided.

Accompanying the squad and participating as Critic/Judge will be Mrs. Robert Proffitt, Maryville College director of Forensics. Tom Jones, Theatre Director, is assisting in the coaching of extra speaking entries for this tournament.

Further tournaments on the forensic squad schedule include the Mint Julep, a regional at Memphis on February 20-21, the Magnolia Invitational at Mississippi State College for Women on March 6-7, and the Pi Kappa Delta regional tournament in Louisiana, to be scheduled during the spring vacation period.

WORLD PREMIERE at M.C.!



The world premiere of the oratorio, "The Story of Abraham," scheduled for May 2 at Maryville College, Maryville, Tenn., has been postponed until April 29, 1971.

As a part of the Maryville College Sesquicentennial Celebration, Richard Yardumian was commissioned to write an oratorio, and Andre Girard was asked to paint a video art film to be fused with the musical score. Mr. Girard's untimely death, coupled with other delays, has slowed the completion of the oratorio and necessitated the postponement.

Mr. Yardumian's "Come, Creator Spirit" a new mass in English, which premiered in New York City in 1967, will be presented in the Maryville College Chapel, May 2, in the place of the planned oratorio. Lili Chookasian, who was soloist for the New York premiere, will sing in the Maryville College production and the Piedmont Chamber Orchestra, under the direction of Igor Buketoff, will provide the orchestration.

This fall Mr. Buketoff is scheduled to give several performances of "Come, Creator Spirit," with Miss Chookasian in London, Vienna, and Rome.

Since the mass in English requires only one soloist, Phyllis Curtin, who was scheduled for the "Abraham" Oratorio, will perform a major solo work.

THE HILLTOP SINGERS COME TO MC

The Maryville College Playhouse proudly presents the Hilltop Singers in concert Saturday, February 28, at 8:15 p.m. The Hilltop Singers, well known in the Knoxville area, sang this past summer at The Porch in Gatlinburg. From Birmingham Southern University, The Hilltop Singers have an ear for the kind of sound enjoyed most by college audiences. Their program includes a wide range of folk and popular music presented in a soft and easy style.

The Hilltop Singers now have three LP albums out, and the latest of these, "Sunrise Row" will be on sale at the concert.

Tickets are on sale now in the Theatre Office or in the lobby of Pearsons during meals. Both $2.50 and $1.50 seats are available. Be sure to make your reservations now.

OUR UNORTHODOX JUNIOR CLASS DOES IT AGAIN

The Junior Class has something to say. At a rather unorthodox gathering Wednesday February 18, a group of about 60 juniors, responding to a called class meeting, expressed a general unanimity of feeling on at least two issues.

The first issue that was discussed is probably the most urgent and vital to the very survival of mankind. This problem is aptly labeled "the danger from the three swords of Damocles": pollution, population, and the threat of nuclear war. Politically, we think (1) any legislator or executive who is uninformed about or apathetic toward these vital issues is unfit for public service; (2) immediate steps should be taken to end the arms race and reduce nuclear stockpiles because it is universally recognized there will be no victor in event of a nuclear war, only universal death and misery; (3) immediate steps should be taken to educate the population of the world in general and the U.S. specifically to the colossal dangers from these three human blights; (4) any governmental action which does not, at its core, have the alleviation of these dangers, is inappropriate and is not action which serves the best interests of 200 million people in the U.S. nor 3 billion people in the world; or in other words, we are basically hostile toward government officials who practice politics to promote their own self interests and ignore the more urgent needs of people

The most immediate result of the preceding discussion was a determination by several juniors to take positive action to aid in the environmental education program at Tremont and to initiate a drive to devote the entire day of April 22 to clean up the Maryville College campus. Also, a letter will soon be distributed to one or more members of Congress indicating Maryville College Junior Class's feeling about the issues mentioned above.

The academic controversy represented the second issue discussed. It was generally agreed that academic buck passing on the part of students represents a shirking of responsibility, which probably represents one of the main reasons that many of the faculty have copped out on the purpose of the new curriculum.

Students: With taxation goes representation: true. But along with representation goes responsibility equal to that of faculty. There are 700 of us and until a large majority of that 700 want to exercise their prerogatives as individuals and be individuals in the fullest sense, until then, there will be no change —only rearrangement. You have to decide what you want then you can dialogue and act.

P.S. The April 22 project is very open to all classes. For further information see Dave Rugh, Doug Cox, Dr. Shields, Nat Kuykendall, Leonard Wood, or Dodie

CAMPUS CLEANED UP

The campus looks better now than it did last week. Discarded paper, cellophane wrappings, and junk mail have begun to disappear at last from the campus lawn and shrubberies. The glinting pavement of viciously shattered glass surrounding Dorm III has been picked up to let the grass show again. Even the trash heaps left by workers at the new P.E. facility have diminished. Why?

Hopefully, this clean-up marks a trend. It was inspired probably by those spirited few who last Saturday morning quietly filled buckets and buckets with litter they picked up on campus. They neither want nor expect praise. After all, they live here.

"DESIRE UNDER THE ELMS" REVIEWED

This past weekend theater-goers were given an especially effective presentation by the Maryville College Playhouse of Eugene O'Neill's powerful drama "Desire Under the Elms." The performance Friday night was quite good, and the audience responded accordingly. However, it was to the sadly unresponsive Saturday night audience that the best performance was given.

Jim Stewart and Carl Sutton were excellent as the earthy, hopeless, hard-working sons of a dictatorial father, and Stuart Smith's interpretation of this "hard" man was particularly convincing. It is, however, to the leading couple, Diane Wood and Paul Hindman, that the highest praise must go, for it was their powerful performance that pulled the audience into the tragedy. Paul vividly portrayed the inner conflicts of the vacillating Eben, and Diane was superb as the security-seeking stepmother who finds her real "home" in her love for Eben. The merit of all these performers deserves recognition.

Once again, Tom Jones has presented the community with an excellent dramatic experience. His performances demand praise and a request that his efforts continue.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

I get the impression some people are really oblivious to what the sixteen black students on campus actually want. Dr. Love's sarcastic letter to the editor last week, describing how he in the future would notice the blacks, was degrading, insulting, offensive, humiliating, unappreciated (!) by all colors, and absolutely absurd. What did he think his letter would accomplish? Did he expect to endear himself to the black population on campus? If so, he utterly failed.

Why should any of us fair-skinned, blue-eyed, straight-haired people recall and rub in the disgusting treatment of one human being for another which was so prevalent and is finally and gradually changing? We should be just as ashamed of our audacity and presumptuousness as the blacks are of their ancestral servility.

Sarcasm has its place and can be very effective. Parts of this letter are no doubt sarcastic since this has become such a popular form of expression. However, the consequences of Dr. Love's "putting blacks in their place" hardly seems worth the effort he took to write the letter; certainly, no positive outcome that the letter might have intended can outweigh the hurt, disappointment, and bitterness the blacks felt last Friday after reading the Echo. Any moderately sensitive individual was aware of the immediate "down" this minority of our students experienced. Usually out of common courtesy a person will avoid subjects or comments about which he knows another person is defensive.

I admit that since my face is white I cannot empathize with the blacks. I cannot understand completely the pressures they feel and their desires; but just because we do not understand exactly their feelings, let us not turn a deaf ear and a hard heart to them. We must still try! We are too insensitive to everyone as it is, so let us show we care about humanity by beginning to pay some past debts to black people. I think the first thing we owe is respect, especially instead of sarcasm and entertainment at their expense.

Diane Humphreys

To the Editor:

I cannot maintain silence in the face of Norman D. Love's recent letter to the Echo. But I wish to speak to him out of my reality as a white person and the values held in common by both of us as white persons. I wish to speak to him in the name of reason which is a white, Western value. I know that Dr. Love shares this value; he is a physicist! The insensitive and unfortunately sarcastic language of his letter notwithstanding, there is a rational argument lying behind his words. That it is inappropriate and fallacious is not difficult to show.

Dr. Love implies with his words that no human being should be treated any different than any other human being. He sarcastically reminds us that the racial problem in our time arises precisely out of the treatment of human beings in a "special way." He potently suggests that the Black man's request for "special treatment" now and on our campus is illegitimate, for after all, ONE HUMAN REALITY IS THE SAME AS ANOTHER HUMAN REALITY.

But Dr. Love betrays his seduction by mathematics and physics and his ignorance of humanities and history. One simply has to ask, what kind of reality can be assumed to be of one kind, so that any individual of that family of reality is to be treated with the same operations as any other individual? Obviously such things as particles of energy and quantities of mathematics (though I wonder if even here this is in fact so). But a human reality is not of this kind. A human reality is at its heart temporal, that is, historical. This means the reality of each individual human as well as groups of humans who consciously identify themselves as such is formed out of complex yet specific biological, social, economic, political, cultural structures and values. To respond intelligently to human reality is to respond to these specifics in a constructive and creative manner, aiming towards the ever-expanding of life-forces for these persons. To Dr. Love, I say that this rational grasp of reality as historical and thus actually different demands the principle of SPECIAL TREATMENT. For example, to recognize Black students as individual persons is to be sensitive to the fact that they exist in the middle of an historically racist American culture. They should be met with my awareness of them as persons whose historical need at this point in their history is a sense of racial worth and value (over against the historical depreciation of their racial worth). In like manner, to encounter White Americans as persons is to meet them with the awareness that they, too, have their personal sense of worth out of the structures and values of an historically racist American culture. Black students deserve treatment academically as students who are searching for their sense of racial worth, and that may mean having a Black faculty member, more Black studies, more awareness of the kind of future into which they must go when they leave Maryville and how we can best help them to have the tools for that future. In like manner, White students deserve treatment academically as students who need to discard their racist inheritance, no matter how superficially or how deeply it belongs to them. This may mean that there should be courses in the nature of prejudice, more listening to Black voices instead of reacting to them.

By all means, Dr. Love, the Black students, the White students and any group of students we have deserve SPECIAL CONSTRUCTIVE ATTENTION SIMPLY BECAUSE THEY ARE PERSONS . . . HUMAN. In similar fashion you as a physicist deserve the special attention of a philosopher in this matter, and I a philosopher deserve the special attention of a physicist in matters of atomic physics: for our needs for life-giving elements are in fact quite different.

Peace

Esther C. Swenson

Dear Editor,

First of all I would like to thank Dr. Love for making his sarcastic remark about the blacks here on campus because it means that we only have to be embarrassed 68 more times, since it seems to be the thing for the faculty to get its laughs at our expense.

His article was explained to me as being written to tell the blacks here on campus that we shouldn't look upon ourselves different but should conform to the community. In order for me or any black student to do that he has to be blind, deaf, and above all insane. Because (1) we're not wanted here, (2) we refuse to become "uncle toms." And for these reasons we can not, and will not conform to this community. Personally I feel that if I conformed to this community it would be mental suicide, because it would take away my awareness of who I am and what I represent and that is exactly what the white man wants because then he will be able to boast 'well that's another nigger we don't have to worry about causing trouble.' Sorry people, it's just nonot going to be like that.

Ya suh we are going to get ours!

Sincerely,

Leonard McWhorter

Dear Mr. Editor,

I am writing this letter in response to Dr. Love's apologetic letter to the blacks which appeared in the last issue of the Echo.

I'll begin by stating that Dr. Love's sarcastic attempt to evoke dialogue was a complete failure. His letter seems to have been misinterpreted by many whites (blacks, once again seem to be something for whites to laugh at) and the letter definitely angered the black students on this campus. If the views expressed by that letter reflect the majority of opinions on this campus, then our community is dying indeed. And, Mr. Editor, if those views are accepted in this community, Dr. Love should not be the only person criticized. Simply stated, an administration which lacks the insight to provide courses for removing the ignorance which has been displayed by dodging the issues of black studies and black faculty members cannot be expected to feel differently from Dr. Love, can they? Of course, I now realize that the "Maryville way" stresses words rather than action.

The comments made by Dr. Love have embittered the black students because the kind of attention which he proposes is the kind blacks have received for the last century. The BOY that Dr. Love feels he is addressing has grown into a Man who wants to make it for himself without the Master's aid. We want you to recognize our blackness; but we demand that you also recognize our Manhood. The two go hand-in-hand because color seems to be an inescapable reality of our society. For Dr. Love or anyone else to be colorblind in a society where race is relevant is not to be free but insensitive. For this reason black students everywhere are demanding that freedom to pursue from a black perspective from whence we came.

Black students have been placed in a unique position in this community. We are not just individuals attempting to find our places in a larger white society. Our lives, politically, socially, and economically are dominated by whiteness. But what about our morals and character? Do our minds have to be dominated in this manner as well? This is my charge, Mr. Editor. The entire "Maryville way" neglects this black and white difference in our lives. This community is insensitive to the needs of its 17 black students, and it refuses to let "We 17" express exactly what that need is. Does Maryville College have the social insight necessary to recognize the weakness in its system? What do you think, Mr. Editor? Personally, I doubt it!

G. Donald Hickman

Dear Editor,

We write this letter to express our agreement with and our thanks to Dr. Love for his letter of last week.

Ever since the end of the Civil War men have been striving, working, and praying for the integration of all races, creeds, and religions in America. Men have hoped that one day the time would come when all men would be equal in their rights, and treated as such. This has been the dream of many Americans, black, white, red, English, German, Irish, Chinese, Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant, all of these men working together to make America a melting pot.

We here at Maryville have an opportunity to live in such an integrated community. We will recognize anyone who merits recognition by his deeds, words, and actions while here at MC. We will give you absolutely no special thought just because your skin is darker than mine. None whatsoever. By the same token we will give you no special recognition because your skin is as pure white as ours.

The black man's grandparents were slaves to plantation owners over one hundred years ago. So what? Your skin is black. Our skin is white. So what?

We would like to call on MC to stop playing Marcus Garvey and black pantherism. We don't want a separationist movement. Let.s totally reject special recognition to anyone because of his skin. Let's judge each other on merit and we will give recognition in proportion to accomplishments.

We also add as a post script that a few people may write in to the Echo to tear apart Dr. Love. However, we plead that they are in the vocal minority and that these emotion packed letters of hate should not be regarded as representative of the entire community.

Sincerely,
Dalmatian

Dear Editor,

Dr. Love's little melodrama in last week's ECHO evoked both amazement and concern. At first I struggled to fathom the purpose of such an epistle, but soon vanished such difficulty by realizing there was none—except, perhaps in some mysterious way, to express those same sentiments of the contented masses: "What are you griping about? You never had it so good!" or maybe "What makes you so different from everyone else?" Certainly he is entitled to express his opinion (God only knows, we sorely need dialogue with the faculty), but when such views are stated in a manner causing an avalanche of ill feeling and embarrassment, an explanation is warranted. Would it be too much to ask that a letter of apology, or at least clarification, be forthcoming? Or is Maryville blessed with an heir apparent to Spiro Agnew?

Grok in fullness,
Jim Daugherty

Dear Editor,

Dr. Love was sarcastic.
I am not.
I'll pay for your passage back to Africa.

Wallacely yours,
WDM

To All:

This is in reply to last week's "Dear Isolated—Alias MC Community." The writer certainly had valid reasons to be angry—although I think the problem is a little more personal than stated. I write this from my own viewpoint, but I have no doubts that there are many other students (Maryville included) who feel the same way.

Granted, there are many problems in the world today which most students and teachers are aware of. But the fact is, for many these problems remain invisible. Some teachers like to hide in their own little intellectual world "with their baby." Many students are in college only for their own future welfare—you know, "the ticket to the Good Life" bit. Naturally such an internal goal will isolate one from OUR universal problems. Their all-important virtue of "self-esteem" cannot be lowered to involve themselves with such problems. Such an involvement would disrupt their plans for their own future life. Can't we be something more constructive than an egocentric society?

Perhaps the initiation of some new courses that are relevant to present societal problems would change this pestilent attitude. But not completely. It is a big mistake for one to attend college with the assumption that the institution will prepare him for what he wants to do in life. Only YOU can adequately prepare yourself. One who is individual and intelligent enough can discriminate between what he wants to believe in and what he doesn't want to believe in without the feeling of being indoctrinated, such as I hear so many students crying they are victims of. Teachers, examine your goal in education. Does it lie in helping to shape the future, or did you leave it behind in your little red school house?

So, to answer directly the question "What the hell I am going to do about it," I'll put it like this:

I see the problems that lie within me and the world, but I am a helpless creature to the world until I solve the problems within me. If I can't find this opportunity in an educational institution, then I can find it somewhere else.

Does anybody want to challenge—or is it better to remain complacent?

Optimistic,
Jerry Cooper

Dear Editor:

This article appeared in yesterday's Auburn Plainsman, which is the newspaper here at Auburn University. I certainly was sorry to see the portion I have underlined in red which states that the Auburn wrestling team "had a real obnoxious crowd against Maryville." It makes you feel rather funny to have your friends tell you that now they've heard of Maryville, and this is what they're referring to. I hope it wasn't as bad as it sounds, but there must have been something to it, or he wouldn't have stated it that way. When I was on the wrestling team at Maryville, nothing rubbed me the wrong way more than an unsportsmanlike crowd. There are always gonna be teams better than any team fielded, but the fans can make losing a lot easier by being ladies and gentlemen about it. I like to think the student body had good sportsmanship when we were there a few years ago, and I'd like to think so now. There have been a lot of changes at Maryville, but this is definitely not one for the better.

Hugh McCampbell
Student Body
President '65-'66

(The article referred to above contained this paragraph:

"However, co-captain Wayne Daniel commented, 'Unfriendly fans don't seem to bother us too much. We had a real obnoxious crowd against Maryville, and Milligan's crowd was pretty bad too, but we didn't have any trouble with either one of the teams. If anything, Bama's crowd will make us go harder since we've beaten them once already.' ")

SPORTS AND SHORTS DEPT:

The Scots closed their season with two defeats and finished with a 12-13 record. Thursday night the Scots were defeated by Emory and Henry, 94-85 and Saturday night by Tennessee Temple 81-80.

In the Emory and Henry game, the Scots held a five-point lead at the half. But as the second half started the Scots were plagued by fouls and some fine shooting by Pat Burns. Maryville was close until fouls claimed Warren Morgan, Lynn Dildine and John Weston, Maryville could not stop Burns besides and thus the Wasps gained the victory. For the winners Burns tossed in 53 points. For Maryville Mike Barrows had 33, Weston 10, Morgan 9, McKinstry 16, Dildine 8, Hickman 7, Mize 2.

Saturday's game was a thriller all the way. The Scots trailed until about five minutes left. Then Warren Morgan and Lynn Dildine gave the Scots a two-point lead. The Crusaders tied it and won it on a foul shot with three seconds left. The Scots' final effort at the hoop popped out and the game was over. This game marked the final game for seniors Don Hickman, Lynn Mize, Bill Arlington, and Captain Lynn Dildine. These guys will be missed next year but the Scots hopes will be high. The scoring was Barrows 18, Morgan 20, Weston 20, McKinstry 16, Dildine 17, Mize 1, Hickman 4.

OPERA POTPOURRI

An "Opera Potpourri" featuring scenes from eleven operas will be presented Thursday evening, March 5 at 8:15 p.m. in the Maryville College Theatre. The production is under the direction of Miss Karen Roewade, professional singer from New York City and Affiliate Artist at Maryville College, and will feature vocal talent from the college's Department of Fine Arts.

Included in the production will be scenes from "The Marriage of Figaro," "Il Trovatore," "The Flying Dutchman," "Madame Butterfly," " Trouble in Tahiti," "Hansel and Gretel," "Don Giovanni," and "Cosi Fan Tutte." The scenes are coached and staged by Miss Roewade, with technical assistance and costuming supervised by Tom Jones of the drama department. Miss Roewade will also perform, singing the Cherry duet from "L' Amico Fritz" with Dan Kinsinger, associate professor of voice at the College, and the Paris duet from "Il Tabarro" with Don Brakebill, Minister of Music at Maryville's First Baptist Church. A total of fourteen selections will be featured in the program which will include a commentary by Miss Roewade.

This marks the third year of Miss Roewade's affiliation with Maryville College. In past years she has produced two opera presentations with the aid of Maryville students. The most recent was Menotti's "The Consul." In addition, she has performed for a number of local audiences and appeared in a variety of noted performances here and elsewhere.

Twenty singers will participate in Thursday's performance. Accompanists for the event include two local residents, Martha McCall and Donna White.

There will be no charge for this exciting evening.

Castleman Concert

Internationally acclaimed violinist Charles Castleman will be the featured soloist with the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra in this year's final presentation of the Maryville College–Community Artist Series Saturday evening, March 7 at 8:15 p.m. in the Chapel.

Born in Quincy, Mass., Mr. Castleman began piano and violin lessons at the age of four. Two years later, he performed with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops. At ten, he gave a recital in New York, and at twelve was soloist with the New York Philharmonic. His later studies included a liberal arts education at Harvard, and a musical one at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia. Shortly after his graduation from both, he won the Silver Medal in the 1963 Queen Elizabeth Concours in Brussels. He also received an award at the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, and thus is the only American violinist to successfully represent the United States in the two major international contests.

During the past years, he has crossed the gulf between child prodigy and mature artist. Mr. Castleman has appeared in recitals and with leading orchestras over all of the United States and Canada. In the Spring of 1968, he completed his first full tour of Europe. Hailed by critics as a superb musician, his appearance with the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra should prove exciting as well as enjoyable.

Under the leadership of its present conductor, David Van Vactor, the Knoxville Symphony has achieved strength and vitality as one of the ranking musical organizations in the South. Its history spans fifty-nine years of individual and community aspirations as it has admirably served the musical needs of the Knoxville area. Included in this season's personnel are a handful of musicians who have been in the orchestra since 1930 and a large group who have been nurtured by the symphony since they were first-graders and who now take their place in the orchestra as college and conservatory graduates in music. Also appearing with the orchestra are Mr. Lee Kull, violist and instructor in music at Maryville College, and Miss Carolyn Coles, violinist and Maryville College music student.

MAN AND HIS ENVIRONMENT

Maryville College is continuing her year long Sesquicentennial Celebration and her current emphasis of "Man and His Environment" by bringing to the campus two distinguished guests today.

Dr. Paul B. Sears, noted conservationist, spoke at the Community Issues and Values program on "Man's Search for Patterns in His Environment," at 9:20 a.m. in Wilson Chapel. He will spend the rest of the day visiting informally with students, faculty, administrators, and community members before appearing again at 8:15 p.m. in Wilson Chapel with another distinguished guest, Dr. A. J. Sharp, noted botanist and former chairman of the department of botany at the University of Tennessee.

Dr. Sears has been professor of conservation and chairman of the Yale Conservation Program from 1950 until his retirement in June, 1960. He is past president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the Ecological Society of America and the American Society of Naturalists and former chairman of the board of the National Audubon Society. His special field of interest is ecology—its application in the management of natural resources, and in the history of vegetation.

Dr. Sharp is an authority on mosses and has conducted extensive research in the Great Smoky Mountain National Park, Mexico, Guatemala, and Far East and Asian countries. His research took him to the Hattori Botanical Laboratory in Nichinan, Japan, in 1964-65 under a National Science Foundation Grant. While in the Far East he conducted field studies in India and the Philippine Islands. In 1968 he made botanical studies in the Aleutian Islands and Tanzania, Africa.

He has served as president of the Botanical Society of America and has published 175 scientific articles and books.

CIV credit will be given for both the morning and evening discussions.

CALIFORNIA ART EXHIBIT

F. Herbert Hoover, a 1952 graduate of Maryville College, is returning to the campus this weekend for the Fourth Reunion Weekend in the College's year long celebration of its Sesquicentennial. But he is not returning empty handed. He is bringing a large exhibit of contemporary California paintings which will hang in the Fine Arts Center Gallery through the month of March.

Mr. Hoover is owner of the Hoover Gallery in San Francisco and is one of the youngest and most successful art dealers on the West Coast. He formerly was director of the renowned Pomeroy Galleries in San Francisco.

In 1968 Governor Ronald Reagan appointed Mr. Hoover to the California Arts Commission and he is presently serving his second term as a commissioner.

Editorial

Comments from the Editor's Desk—

This is the last issue of the ECHO for winter term. Next week, you will go home, to Florida, or some other exotic place. Don't hesitate to take MC with you. Talk up the College with your high school friends. If you could influence 200 kids to come here next fall, MC would be a better place at which to learn.

* * * * * * *

Visitation seems to be working well. There have been no reports of harems, or other lascivious goings-on. All in all, the old parlors have taken on a new dignity. The only campus area which is suffering is the student center, which reports a loss in revenue. It even seems that the people who were most adamantly against visitation have become its most singular users.

* * * * * * *

Reflecting on the Diane McKenzie incident, I can only say that her death is a harsh condemnation of all that is wrong at MC. We may have a curriculum that is designed to give us more time for intensive study, but what it really leaves us is more time to brood. We daily register our disappointments in this educational system. For example, who can approve of the art history teacher who is giving both a mid-term and a final next week simply because he feels he should in respect to the "system." How about the seniors who want to write their special studies for themselves, because they want to learn; and not for their instructor who seems to stifle their creativity? If the pedantry doesn't reach you, the lack of sincerity in interpersonal relationships will. Everything from secret organizations to just malicious gossip has some depressing psychological effect on many students. Maybe before we attempt to recruit more students to Maryville, we should examine our environment and determine if it is sufficiently healthy to support any more learners than it already does.

Until next term—happy vacation.....fang

(Editor's note: The following was inadvertantly omitted from last week's issue due to printer's error.)

Dear Editor:

The following letter is in reply to a faculty member's "apologetic" letter written in the last issue of the Echo. It goes out to Dr. Love and those who thought that his letter was worth the ink it took to print it.

Dear Dr. Love,

I've stated recently, in an attempt to get some black study courses and black teachers here at MC, that there are white students, faculty, and administrative members on this campus and out in the world who would apologize, and sympathize, but not recognize that the problem of race relations is THE most serious crisis existing. Your apology for not recognizing the black students on campus doesn't help the problem at all, but becomes a part of the problem. What is needed is your ideas and thoughts on how to cure this disease.

The "few personal gestures" of ignoring us, giving us one grade lower, dirty looks, and expecting us to say "ya suh" that you so SINCERELY signed your name to is the type of racist attitude that black and white Americans throughout the United States are fighting against today. If it was meant to be sarcastic, it didn't hurt my feelings nor those of my black brothers and sisters on this campus, for we've had 300 years of history to adjust to such attitudes, DR. Love. We would like to do something about it, now!

T.C.

Editor:

I have rarely seen such a variety of misinterpretations of a single letter as was presented in response to Dr. Love last week. This response could have easily been predicted, but I was appalled at the poor quality of the misinterpretations. While I do not share Dr. Love's motivations in writing the letter, I certainly expected a higher caliber of response. The only effective response was presented by Mr. Hickman.

The most disappointing letter was Dr. Swenson's. She seems to think Dr. Love's personal viewpoints are totally controlled by the fact that he is a physicist. As a matter of fact, physics and mathematics had very little to do with Dr. Love's letter. His opinions are certainly not the same as mine, yet I am obviously "seduced" by mathematics and physics. Additionally, the professional physicist is not necessarily ignorant of history and the humanities. I am not simply a physicist, but I am an educated member of society! Dr. Swenson thinks physics causes physicists to generalize beyond the recognition of individuality. This is absurd! Any such generalization is just as wrong in physics as in social science. One might generalize the American racial situation incorrectly, but in contrast to such an error, why not draw an analogy with the prejudice and strife in Northern Ireland? Certainly that situation has many parallels with the racial struggle here. Obviously our actions should be directed to a certain extent by the idea of SPECIAL TREATMENT, but why use so many irrelevant statements in presenting this idea? Indeed, why violate your own thesis in doing so?

Actually, any well-educated individual—whether his education is formal or informal—does not need to consult a philosopher in order to express his opinions in social science. Naturally he should communicate with experts in other fields on points of fact that he does not understand, but given an adequate education on a particular matter, he should be able to freely express himself on that matter. If his opinions are contradictory to the facts, the individual is responsible—not the profession.

GRAFITTI !

As for the theme of SPECIAL TREATMENT as voiced by Dr. Swenson —let me remind you that exclusive use of this idea is just as wrong as exclusive use of generalizations. In fact, one HUMAN REALITY was recently effectively expressed by one protestant in Northern Ireland. He claimed that the reason the Catholics there are "poor" is because they are "basically lazy." The terrible HUMAN REALITY here is that the prejudice against minority groups breeds the same statements in Northern Ireland as in Detroit or Memphis. How could anyone fail to see the significance of this generalization? How wrong would you be if you failed to take this into account in dealing with individuals?

Any good reply to Dr. Love's letter must not only contain a constructive idea, but it also must be thoroughly consistent with the constructive thought. The only response that satisfied these criteria was Mr. Hickman's.

Sincerely yours,
Dr. Thomas L. Ferrell

For New Years I was in Florence, Italy, with a group of Belgian girls. The beauty of the city astounded me but the damage of American tourism sickened me. Italian mothers cried while carrying babies, knowing this was more than the American heart could take. The pudgy Italian girl, about 6 years of age, who told me she was hungry, was happily smoking cigarettes a few minutes later (I was not the benefactrice). The Americans of course thronged the streets, their ever-ready pocketbooks happily emptying to ever-ready stores featuring American Styles and American prices.

(to be continued next week)

You'd think by now God would say "Phooey!"

PLAYMATE POSTSCRIPT

"Sometime scholar and full-time radical, an archetypal child of the rock age" was how Playboy described its December Playmate. "Always on the move, always ready to challenge authority, always ready to have a good time." A Northwestern University coed was pictured "savoring the good vibrations generated by thousands of peaceniks," to establish her credentials as a radical and, of course, nude as the fold-out to remove any doubt about her Playmate qualifications. As it turns out, Playboy picked a real winner, or loser. Gloria, it seems, was busted abroad for smuggling dope. Talk about challenge to authority.

After his graduation from Maryville College in 1952, he studied piano with Victor Wittgenstein. He has also studied under the noted Russian-American sculptor, Michael Von Meyer.

Maryville residents will have the privilege of hearing Mr. Hoover in a Gallery Talk, Friday, March 6, at 7:00 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Gallery.

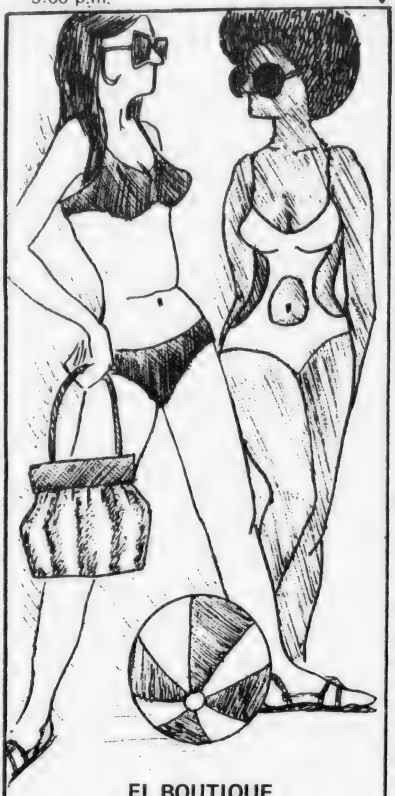
DA VINCI EXHIBIT

The inventive genius and foresight of Leonardo da Vinci, who conceived of the flying machine and other developments that did not take practical form until modern times, is depicted in an exhibition opening March 6 at the library of Sutton Science Center on the Maryville College campus.

If you remember da Vinci as the artist who painted the "Mona Lisa" and "The Last Supper," you may be surprised to learn that he was also a scientist ahead of his times. He defined the now everyday principle of aerodynamic reciprocity 200 years before Newton. He devised a parachute—or tent of oinen, as he called it, that is said to have been used successfully. His aerial screw was the forerunner of the helicopter which he foresaw, and this screw was the prototype of today's ship propeller as well.

The exhibition of the 15th-century artist-scientist's work, on loan from the department of arts and sciences of International Business Machines Corporation, includes 21 models built from Leonardo's scientific and technical drawings. It will remain at Maryville College through March 17.

Models in the show include both practical and theoretical devices. Among them are a paddle-wheel ship, an idea that was not successfully developed until the advent of steam power in the 19th century; a theoretical gear system that produced three speeds of rotation, as in the modern automobile transmission; and a device for determining the tensile strength of wire, information as essential to the engineer five centuries ago as it is today.



Leonardo was fascinated with the possibility of human flight, and devised many schemes for flying machines, including ornithopters—whose principle support and propulsion comes from flapping wings. A model of an ornithopter in the show follows an early design calling for a lattice-like wooden framework, two movable wings, a series of ropes and pulleys and a windlass. This was to be operated by the flyer, lying prone in the framework.

Although Leonardo considered war a "bestial madness" he was one of the leading military engineers of his time, and made innumerable sketches for weapons. Models in the show include an armored tank, in which he foresaw a type of vehicle not extensively used until World War I, and a scaling ladder that resembles modern fire-fighting apparatus, but which Leonardo designed for storming the walls of an enemy fortress.

The first set of models of Leonardo's work constructed in contemporary times was built in 1938 for an exhibition in Milan, Italy. It traveled briefly, and during World War II was completely destroyed by bombs in Tokyo. Another group of models, built in the United States after the war, was acquired by IBM in 1951 and incorporated into the company's touring exhibition program.

Recently the exhibition has been completely redesigned. The models, painted red, yellow, blue and green, are displayed with panels of explanatory material and sketches reproduced from Leonardo's notebooks. Other panels bear Leonardo's sketches in such fields as mathematics, optics, astronomy, botany, and city planning.

The exhibit is open in the Sutton Science Library daily from 9:00 a.m. until 9:00 p.m.

SPRING CLEANING

Volunteers are needed for a campus cleanup this Saturday. Between now and April 22 we will be increasing our efforts to give Maryville College a fresher look. To start the program, March 7 will be dedicated mainly to litter pick-up as well as a few other environmental projects. Other ideas are welcomed in Box 2755. A group of concerned students will be coordinating projects but many other volunteers will be needed. Meet at the Post Office with your sleeves rolled up shortly after breakfast tomorrow, or see one of the following: Ann Briggs, Doug Cox, Steve Horning, Ed Prichard, Dana Rothey, David Rugh, Leonard Wood, or Dr. Shields.

ARIES (Mar. 21-April 20) Heed trends for harmony and build them up. It's a time to give and take. Much humor can defeat the unpleasant moments.

TAURUS (Apr. 21-May 20) Do not form hasty opinions based on too little knowledge of a friend who is older and wiser. You may lack understanding about certain facts.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You'll have to do everything for yourself, and that includes making a big decision which can change both your career and your romantic interests.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be strong and affirmative in your convictions. You may have to make your way past a major obstacle that others have planted to halt you.

LEO (July 23-August 22) You may have a sharp disappointment to bear. You can show your strong character and endurance by the way you handle demands.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You may not quite know what is expected of you, so take some pains to get the facts very clear before you start operations with them.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Accent your self-confidence and powers of concentration. Be patient waiting for results. They will come more easily now.

EXPAND YOUR MIND

Vol. 1 April 3, 1970

UNIQUE OPPORTUNITY OFFERED ONCE MORE

Maryville College will again provide students a unique opportunity to earn maximum college credit in a short span of time during the summer. Lasy year's summer term proved to be very popular with college students and teachers. Dean Boyd L. Daniels has announced that the summer term will begin on Monday, June 8, and extend through Friday, August 7.

Once again the summer term will be divided into three sessions of three weeks each. A student will take only one course per session. Classes will meet two periods each day, five days a week, for approximately two and one-half hours per day. One course credit (equal to three semester hours) may be earned in three weeks.

Course offerings have been scheduled to appeal to different categories of students:

1. Currently enrolled college students will be able to get ahead in their academic program or make up past deficiencies.

we are a part by providing opportunities for area teachers to continue their education."

Mr. Arthur S. Bushing associate professor of English, is chairman of the summer term committee. Persons who are interested in enrolling for the summer term should contact the Registrar's Office immediately.

2. Entering freshmen (at Maryville College or any other college) may begin their college program in a more relaxed personalized atmosphere.

3. High school graduates who have not been able to meet college admission requirements, or those who wish added pre-college help, may take the non-credit course, English II, "Orientation to College Study."

4. Public school teachers may select from a variety of courses for certification requirements or refresher study.

In addition to courses offered on the Maryville College campus, two courses "Biology of the Environment" and "Outdoor Living and Recreation," will be taught at the Maryville College Environmental Education Center at Tremont. Also, courses in geology, forest ecology and limnology will be offered at the MACCI Field Biology Teaching and Research Center on Norris Lake.

Tuition cost for the summer school program will be $112.50 per 3-week session. Teachers from schools in Blount County will receive a tuition grant of $30.00 per course. Dean Daniels said: "We are hopeful that a number of teachers in Blount County will take advantage of this opportunity to refresh their knowledge of some of the important areas of study or to meet requirements for keeping their certification current. We believe that we can render an important service to the community."

MURPHREE PROMOTED

Mrs. Dorothy Murphree has been appointed Director of Communications at Maryville College effective immediately, according to an announcement made by president Joseph J. Copeland.

Since last August, Mrs. Murphree has been serving as Publications Assistant at the College. Her new position includes responsibility for all public information, publications, and television programming.

In a number of areas Mrs. Murphree replaces Arthur F. Dees, former Communications Coordinator. His responsibility for coordinating the Community Issues and Values program has been assumed temporarily by Dean Emeritus Frank D. McClelland.

Mrs. Murphree who holds a Bachelor of Religious Education degree from Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary and has done additional work at Mississippi College, has extensive experience in writing. She has been a free lance writer and a special drama consultant for the Baptist Sunday School Board.

A new book just off the press, Understanding Youth, has been co-authored by Mrs. Murphree and her husband, T. Garvice Murphree, who is Minister of Religious Education at the First Baptist Church in Maryville. Mrs. Murphree's other published works include plays, taped dramas, film strip scripts, and more than fifty articles in various religious periodicals.

She is widely known as a conference leader, and has participated in drama and youth leadership conferences in all of the southern states, Illinois, New Mexico, California, Indiana, Oklahoma, and the District of Columbia.

In commenting on the appointment, President Copeland said, "we feel extremely fortunate to find a person of Mrs. Murphree's background, experience and ability available here in Maryville, and we are delighted that she has agreed to accept the major responsibility for interpreting the College to our many constituencies. In these days of rapid and extensive change there is no task more difficult and sensitive."

JAZZ CONCERT

Danny, Danny, quite uncanny,
How does your jazz band blow?
"I give the beat, they tap their feet,
But after that I don't know!"

This Saturday night in the chapel the Maryville College Stage Band will play jazz by Doc Severins, Stan Kenton, Buddy Rich, and other such contemporary jazz men. The band has a tight sound and, for those with a taste for the more bizarre, the fabulous Warren Gaughan Trio will also perform. The concert begins at 8:15 p.m.

It is with great pleasure that the United States welcomes the striking mailmen back to work. It was quite kind of the union to agree to return to the job in time to celebrate with all of America that historic date in United States History, April 3!

If you happened to guess that today is Pony Express Day you were absolutely correct! On this day in the year 1860 the first pony left St. Joseph Missouri, and made its start for California.

Today one tends to think that the postal employees have it rough and deserve to earn $4.00 per hour. But how about the Pony Express men? They rode day and night, all year round, no matter what the weather. Instead of dogs biting and barking at them they had Indians, who liked pale-face scalps, chasing them. Rather than hard sidewalks and picket fences they had muddy trails and large mountains to cross. And all of this without a union to protect them.

And speaking of impersonal automation putting people out of jobs, think of those horrible telegraphs that drove those noble men off their appointed rounds. And isn't it a shame that there was no Federal Government Unemployment insurance to take care of these poor men. It is horrible to think of it, but they had to go out and find new jobs and work to earn their food! Too bad they couldn't have lived in America 1970.

And finally, this wonderful day brings back other less pleasant memories of that Pony Express System. Much like the U.S. Post Office, it ran for a while with greater expenditures than income. There was no reform and eventually the company collapsed. It is now the responsibility of the U.S. Congress to make major changes in our postal system before the U.S. Post Office becomes history!

LETTERS

To the Student Body of Maryville College:

As a member of the U.S. Army in Viet Nam I would like to express myself on two issues much thought about over here. Atrocities of War in Viet Nam and efforts for Peace in the United States. These issues affect every man over here in some way or another.

It hurts me that the news media makes out the G.I. as a wanton killer of innocent people. Though they may not mean to do this it comes out this way and it is both untrue and unfair. Though there is no justification in it people die in a war. Many times the victims are the innocent. But the news media fails to show that uncalled for acts have happened on both sides. How many Medevacs (helicopters carrying wounded) have been shot down or G.I.'s killed by mines or booby-traps? All violations of the Geneva Convention. This isn't a plug for U.S. involvement but it is a plug for the men who have the unpleasant job of being here.

Peace is something you really think about when you don't have it. I know I do. I only ask you to work for it wholeheartedly. Don't go to Moratoriums or demonstrations for peace just to make the scene. Go with the idea that you can do something to help. Peace starts with the smallest element in the Community, you the individual. Maybe there is something to the Golden Rule.

It is traditional that the Easter sunrise service be held in the amphitheatre in the College Woods. This Easter I attended that service as I have the past two years I have been here. A large white cross stood in the grass plot below the hill, its base covered with greens. The stream flowed quietly by, freshened by an early morning rain. The sun came up, and the day began with a newness that is especially meaningful on Easter.

Later in the day, prompted by a concerned housemother, I drove to the amphitheatre to look at the cross. My day was shattered by what I saw. The cross was smeared and splattered with mud, and the greenery was torn from the base and strewn around.

My first reaction was anger. A fury that rarely enters my brain seethed within me. But now my anger has turned to pity. What sickness of the mind could have done such a thing? What could have prompted such a vicious attack on that cross? I feel sorry for you who felt the need to deface that cross. I know who you are, and I am shocked and disappointed. You ruined many people's Easter with your action. You helped to show people that the cry for responsibility on this campus might go better unheeded. Whatever your motive was, the results of your actions are much more harmful than you can imagine. You have done nothing of constructive value, and your behavior is disgusting.

May it comfort you to know that there are doctors who treat people whose troubles result in such actions. May it also comfort you to know that the cross which you defaced symbolizes the cross upon which Christ died in order that you might be forgiven for what you have done. R.S.

She wanted to take a walk and so did I. We had to. That's the way it is with us. We're broughtup Christians, and we knew it was Easter. We couldn't exactly smell it in the air, but for the past few days we had been thinking of happy little kids and Easter egg hunts. So we were naturally expectant. We knew it was a special day, a time that had a meaning, that deserved reverence and meditation. But what to do? How does one wring meaning out of an 8:30 sleepy Warehouse on a chilly, drizzly morning as the choir heads back to bed or is already there. We were certain that we knew we had to try. We had to do something. Wondering though we were, we knew we would never step foot in a church building that day. That was the one thing we would not do. For it was a special day and we sought to transcend the ordinary, to commune with the spirit deep within us and all around us. We remembered past Easters with people making themselves look elegant and pretty, then strutting off to worship themselves, and we headed for the woods and the amphitheatre. The Thirty-Third Annual Easter Sunrise Service at the Maryville College Amphitheatre had been and gone, but we cared little for we had come to worship. We were momentarily stunned in out tracks, however, as the earlier Christians had left their impression in their attempt to make their worship more impressive. Yep, there it was as we looked down into the valley, a big white cross. Tall, stately, pure, rich, clean white. We were impressed. Couldn't help but react. Just the thing we had tried to get away from. And it wasn't only sterile white, it was plastic white. Couldn:t help but think of all the plastic white people we had seen on previous Easters who put up and worshipped such crosses. It looked like the blow-up of something your mother might use for a centerpiece or a wealthy church might use for a back drop as it stood there with nicely cut pine branches piled neatly at its base. As bright as the cross was, though, and hard as it tried, it could not hold our attention, for we felt even before we touched it how hollow it was. Our eyes would not remain on it but searched all around for things that were real; the grass, the squirrels, the bridge. It was out of place, unnatural, a saddening sight. We paused only for a moment thinking Mr. Mattel might come flying in and retrieve his game but no such luck.

Even as we started down the hill our minds united as we thought of what should be and I said, "You could talk me into it." But we didn't talk about it then. No, we had come to worship and we knew what we had to do. We colored the cross. Yep, we colored it brown. A symbolic gesture. Could have used green, you know Spring, grass, and new life. But brown was available so we coated as far as we could reach (which was over half way up) and then threw on the rest. Now please don't think that by throwing mud on the cross we meant to desecrate it. Just the opposite. We sought to provide it with new meaning. We were devoutly intent throughout the entire process (though I must admit it was quite an emotional experience). After scattering the branches around, more natural like and resting one on top. we stepped back, and we knew. We climbed back up the hill and sat down to meditate on Easter and God and Jesus, and Love, and crosses, and people, and authority, and violence, and destruction, and truth, and what we had done. For we had come to worship.

The cross seemed much more alive now. Somehow your eyes would remain on it and you could think of things that were real. The brown cross inspired images and thoughts that related the cross of Jesus to various aspects of the world. It was not a cross to be taken lightly but one that would grab your attention. Our thoughts on this matter were confirmed emphatically as Mac the cop came up from behind and, like the true professional that he is, asked us if we had seen "who did that?" We assured him that we had and that we would wash it off but that we felt the cross should be brown. Well, Mac seemed to have found the culprit and set things straight, as usual, but nonetheless he walked away with an air of uncertainty. We wanted to tell him why we had done it and to ask him what he thought of it but being unsure of his relgious affiliation we didn't want to ask any touchy questions.

Well, the cross is white again. We thought of leaving it brown but since some people would never stand for mud on their cross we didn't want to make more work for the maintenance crew. But next year, and next time, when someone raises a white cross before you, remember the brown cross. The cross that stands as a symbol of man's need for God. It reminds man how far he is from God. Man can never make that cross white. Love, Bob.

CONFESSIONS OF A SURPRISED BIGOT Robert Trent

When, sometime in October, I pulled my brain out of the delusion of an egalitarian community of learners, I found myself blessed with the rare gift of living with the good people the inhabitants of the fourth floor of dorm III, noted campuswide for their good taste, refinement and superior intelligence. My quadmates and I often made complacent little remarks about how wonderful and coincidental it was to be grouped with such fine students, so conveniently isolated from the raving madness of the illiterate jocks downstairs. Of course we thought ourselves the only quad "intellectual" enough to have a worthwhile meaningful, or truly happy existence. Our self righteous apathy kept us from any interaction with our supposed inferiors, and "they" understandably acted hostilely in turning us off and reciprocally labelling us.

This unfortunate stratification is, obviously, a result of a lack of communication, but it has deeper roots. All of us have classified, to a degree, the faces that pass us everyday. Certain people we never speak to after having made first impressions in September. Others, whom we consider closer to "our kind of people," we allow two-phase conversation 1. "Hi", 2. "How ya' doin'?" and seldom even think of getting an answer. Then there are those within our layer, our secluded nest. To these personalities we extend our friendship and respect, sharing our thoughts and experiences.

It is comfortable and happy to interrelate in this pattern. But at the same time it is a serious limitation. It makes us one-half or one-quarter of a person when we wall ourselves off, traipsing through a maze of characters and worldviews compatible with our own. No matter the number of friends or the extent of experience in years or miles, to hide in a glass bubble all one's life may have an educational effect similar to that brought on by permanent residence in Antartica.

The example of the athlete/intellectual rift is serious, but is only one of the many layers of insulation limiting the warmth of this community. Much of it, however, has resulted from unconscious individual prejudgements, and hopefully can be remedied by a simple awareness of the nature of our self-imposed social lines of defense.

Reach out to someone--"to communicate is the beginning of understanding."

SPORTS AND SHORTS DEPT:

Two of Maryville College's three spring sports, tennis and baseball, have begun while the third, track, starts its season Saturday.

Coach Boydson Baird's baseballers began their season this past weekend of March 27th and 28th with a split with Mount Union College of Alliance, Ohio. They won the first in a slugfest 13-8 and lost a squeaker in the second 8-7.

In Friday's game senior Lee Faulkner pitched all nine innings as the Scot batters showed plenty of punch. Sophomore Joe Kozel of Uniondale, N.Y., blasted a homerun and a single and contributed three RBI's and was helped by Senior Bob Mays who blasted a triple and had two RBI's. In all the Scots combined for 13 runs on none hits as Faulkner held Mount Union to 8 runs on 8 hits.

Saturday's game was even more productive for the Scot batters, unfortunately their ten hits were only able to garner seven runs this time as they lost by a single run 8-7. All-American candidate Lynn Dildine got his first hit of the season, a home run, and Bob Mays again showed ability to hit the long ball as he blasted a two-run homer. Maryville's most productive hitter, however, was second baseman Joe White, who had two RBI's on 3 singles. Freshman pitcher Bob Randall came on for Maryville in the 3rd inning and allowed only one run while striking out ten.

TRACK

Maryville College's track season will begin Saturday on the road as they travel to Atlanta to face Berry College in a duel meet. Top returner is distance runner Dave Wiley. Dave should be shooting for College Division records on state and regional levels, and possibly nationally. At the longer distances, John Powell should be effective, while Bob Cooper, who ran right behind Wiley all last year, should help in the 880 yard run. Don Hickman is a seasoned sprinter and participant in the triple and broad jumps. Hampered by injuries last year this should be a good year for Don, a senior. Chip Pusey, is another returner who figures to be prominant in the scoring column for Maryville College in the hurdles events. John Leibrock, a junior who has an outstanding record, John has won the Tennessee College Division high jump in both his freshman and sophomore years. With these returning lettermen as a nucleus and several other promising prospects Coach Denny McGowan should field an exciting track team.

Ron Tedford is a newcomer in the hurdles, Doug Davis in the pole vault and javelin.

W. N. Osborne returns in the shot put and should receive plenty of help from Dave Koopman.

BASEBALL

The baseball team opened the season by splitting a two game series with Mount Union College. The Scots won Friday 13-8 with Lee Faulkner doing the pitching. Joe Kozel hit a home run and Bob Macy a triple to spark the win. Saturday, the Scots fought back from a 7-2 deficit and tied it before losing 8-7. Bob Macy and Lynn Dildine hit home runs for the Scots and Joe White contributed three hits in a losing cause. Returning lettermen include Joe Kozel - C, Bob Macy - IB, Joe White - 2B, Larry Stephens - SS, Gary Reagan - 3B, Junior Maretta - Lf, Lynn Dildine - CF, Dan McInstry - Rf, Lee Faulkner - P. Other squad members include pitchers Phil Ziglar, Kent Smith, Wayne Basler, Rob Randall, Randy Calhoun; Hugh Hunter, Larry Bodine, catchers; Leon Hart, Mark Brooks, Bill Cochran, Steve Boggs, infielders, and Dusty Miller, outfielder. Bob Macy and Lynn Dildine are co-captain. They play here Friday against St. Clair and Monday against Milligan before hitting the road.

FOOTBALL

Junior linebackers Mike Parks and Tom Ickes were elected Co-Captains of the 1970 Maryville College Scots Football Team at the completion of spring practice on March 12. Parks is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe E. Parks of Lawrenceville, Ga. Mike has been a starter his freshman and sophomore years as an interior lineman and is a two year letterman. Coach Howard J. Tomlinson had the following to say about Parks: "Mike's election is truly deserved and he should prove very able in providing the leadership we need so badly at this particular time. He is one of the most dedicated men we've had in our football program in the last several seasons. He is an able student and currently is on a Leadership Grant at the College because of his academic and personal qualities."

Tom Ickes is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ickes of Alliance, Ohio. Tom has been a starter as a linebacker his freshman and sophomore years and also is a two year letterman. Tomlinson stated that "Tom should be a valuable leader through his performance and effort. He is constantly improving himself and has been responsible along with Parks for the increased ability of our defense. Tom is as dedicated as anyone on our team. Tom also is a recipient of the Leadership Grant."

WOMEN

Any women interested in participating in a statewide bowling tournament for college women meet in Bartlett Auditorium at 10:30 a.m. Friday, April 3.

A Crisis In Education

Dr. Esther Swenson

Associate Professor of Philosophy and Religion

In a recent article concerning young adults written by Paul Goodman, the observation was made that students do not believe in the future. Faced with political and social crisis and with a jarring psychological reorientation fostered through technology, there is wide-spread and deep despair over the existence of time. One student expressed it: "The only thing to do is to turn yourself off in as many ways as possible, and then you can be oblivious." Or, as the TV program "From Here to the Seventies" closed: "We do not know how much time we have."

A DENIAL OF THE CHRISTIAN MAN

I am certain that there have been other apocalyptic times in man's history and that an understanding of them would help to focus the issues of our own. But let me begin an attempt at understanding by asking what elements we find in our own time, leaving to the historian the job of checking and rechecking the similarities with other times. First, I believe that the denial of a future is a denial of the Biblical and Christian man. The man who stands before the God of the Old and New Testaments is a man who is squarely placed in time and toward a future. The God of Genesis is a God who promises fruitfulness, a new land, blessing. The God of Jesus Christ is one who enters time, confirming and affirming that living in time and toward the future is good, and providing the reality of the future in the presence of the resurrection. No matter how much students may verbalize belief through Christian statements, a disbelief in the future is a denial of the Biblical and Christian God. The crisis concerning the future is then a crisis in Christianity.

A DENIAL OF THE RATIONAL MAN

Secondly, I believe that the denial of the future is a denial of the rational man. There are at least two predominant senses in which this is so. Reason may be understood with Plato as dialectical, the processes of generalization and division in constant undogmatic movement. By engaging in such a temporal movement man is made available to a vision of the Good, the True, and the Beautiful, the One, which, to be sure, is not itself temporal. But the ascent to the vision is temporal, and the one who sees then faces the obligation of descent, of engaging in dialectic with others for the sake of their own visions. In this manner rational man lays claim to a future as Just and Good.

Rational man can also be pragmatic problem-solving man, his rationality being a tool by which he manipulates reality. In this way situations of confusion and disorder are resolved into ones of clarity and order. Thus, rationality is the means by which man lays claim to and ensures the future. It is this rational man who relies on city-planning, who makes budgets, who engages in long-range planning, and who insists upon population control. (It is a truism in sociological literature that poor people who believe their lives are ruled by "fate" or "destiny" rather than rationality, reject or misuse population control procedures).

In either sense of "rational," therefore, a denial of the future is a denial of rationality.

AN ALTERNATIVE BEING CHOSEN: NEW MYTHICAL MAN

If what I have said contains even a kernel of truth, one cannot help but ask, "What alternative way of being man is available to one who denies the future and thus Christian and/or rational man?" If one takes seriously the works of phenomenologists of religion, mythical man was a man who did not take time seriously. Undoubtedly his life was as precarious as ours even though in a different sense. What mythical man was concerned with was this particular moment which balanced treacherously on the edge of non-being. To ensure this present moment in its reality and meaningfulness, man entered into rituals, including myth-telling, which realized the present by equating it to eternity. Such rituals contain profound sensuous elements involving bodily movements, rhythmic sounds and muscular feelings, and repetition; all of which provoke immediate emotional involvement.

It is not too difficult to recognize such elements in many of the attitudes and activities of students: in their efforts to form community or fellowship through the celebration of sound and taste and sight and touch, through their involvement in the drug scene, through their refusal to analyze and their opting for feeling. Involvement through ritual in a community of the present, of the moment, without regard for the past or the future is in many ways the creation of a new mythical man.

QUESTIONS FOR THE EDUCATIONAL SCENE

If we face the possibility of the development of a man relying on mythical elements as the form of his life, we face serious problems with traditional education. One need only point toward a basic value of traditional education: truth. This has always involved the use of processes of reason. But truth to a mythical man is ritualistic in character, not logical or rational. How does education proceed in that circumstance? Again, a curriculum based on reading and writing, that is, logical and rational processes, becomes psychologically questionable to a mythical man of emotional and sensual involvement. Or again, is not the whole notion of courses, credit, and departments based on a notion of a rationality capable of making clear-cut divisions and distinctions? Are not these too psychologically irrelevant to a mythically formed man? And certainly classroom procedures oriented toward analytical, abstract, rational forms of discourse would also be irrelevant and meaningless to such a man.

I do not claim that this is the only crisis or even THE crisis which education faces. But if we confront all the others and do not face this one also, becoming creative in the context of it, we will have failed not only our students and ourselves but also the future which we as Christians seek to affirm and confirm in our being.

FOLK SINGER JOHN JACOB NILES PERFORMS AT CIV

Folk singer and composer John Jacob Niles was Maryville College's guest performer at the Community Issues and Values program, today, at 9:20 a.m. in the chapel. A native of the Kentucky bluegrass country, the 77-year old balladeer sang several tunes he had written himself in his sixty-year career which have contributed to America's folk history. including "Black is the Color of My True Love's Hair," "I Wonder as I Wander," and "Go 'Way From My Window." Mr. Niles accompanied himself on handmade dulcimers, and described his voice as a male also with lapses in to a clear high falsetto.

Music has been his life-long involvement, according to Mr. Niles. His fther was a singer and square dance saller in Kentucky. Niles began collecting folk songs in 1910 in the hills of Appalachia, and has published several books, collections of folk songs, and sonnets in his lifetime. He studied at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music and later received an honorary degree of doctor of music from that institution.

COPELAND ELECTED PRESIDENT

Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, president of Maryville College, began a one year term as president of the Tennessee College Association at its annual meeting in Memphis last week. The 51 member organization is committed to the advancement of the cause of higher education by promoting interests common to the colleges of Tennessee.

Dr. Copeland who has been president of Maryville College since 1961 has served as president-elect of the Tennessee College Association this past year. Retiring president is Dr. Archie Dykes, chancellor of the University of Tennessee, Martin and past-president is Dr. Joe Morgan, president of Austin Peay State College. Dr. Herbert G. Gabhart, president of Belmont College, Nashville, will serve as president-elect for the coming year.

Maryville College was a charter member of the Tennessee College Association when it was organized in 1919.

WILLEY TALKS NOBODY WALKS

Speaking at the March 31st luncheon meeting of the Maryville-Alcoa Civitan Club, Dr. Malcolm M. Willey, head of the sociology department of Maryville College, predicted that the major internal problems faced by the United States today are likely to become even more severe in the years immediately ahead. This, said Dr. Willey, is because they are all basically related to the striking increase in population, and there is no indication that population will stabilize in the foreseeable future.

"This very day census takers are beginning to count heads throughout the United States for the 1970 decennial census. The population of this country is now just over 200 million," Dr. Willey stated, "but by the year 2000, which is only thirty years away, this nation will number more than 300 million."

Dr. Willey mentioned the problems that are causing the greatest concern in the United States today, including pollution of air and water resources, providing adequate education especially at the primary and secondary school levels, transportation involving the use of the automobile, and urban deterioration with accompanying increases in crime and other forms of deviant behavior. "If you think these are crucial problems today, what do you think the situation will be when our population has added another hundred million?" Dr. Willey asked. This country, he said, faces no difficulties in feeding the people, but in these other areas grave difficulties will continue to

U.T. GOES WILD

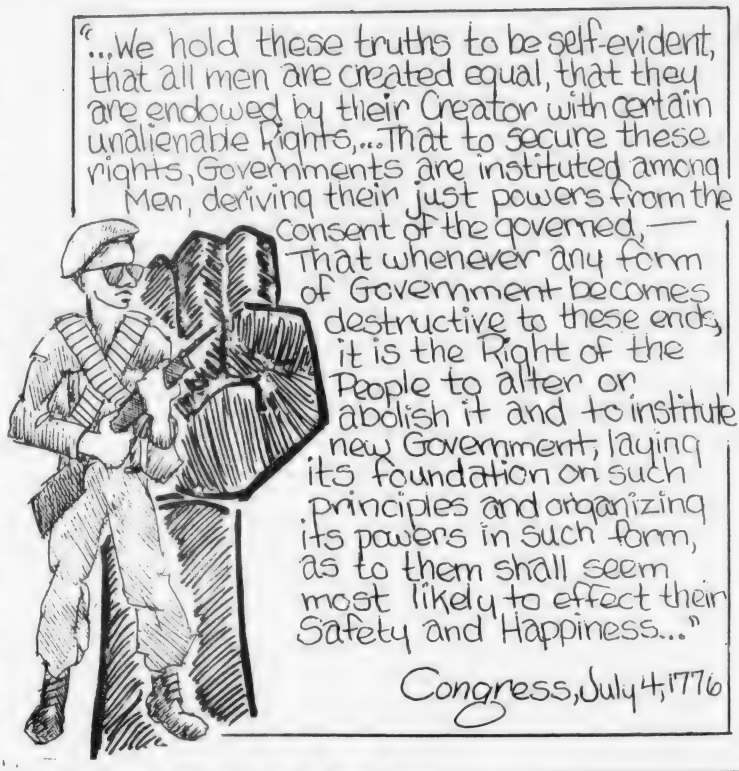
The recent student protest of January 15 at UT campus was a surprise to anyone who had regarded that university as a "fraternity" or "football" school. The results of the 1500 students gathering in front of the Administration Building are even more alarming: except for minor scuffling when the police arrived, the "mob" (Weaver, UT chancellor) was orderly and had been organized and conducted under emphasized non-violence tactics; city policemen, called in when the crowd refused to disperse, came "in full riot gear—helmets, sticks, gas masks and riot guns" (News-Sentinel); no damage was reported, some students threw snowballs, four police and one co-ed had minor injuries; twenty-two persons were arrested with the aid of plainclothesmen and YAF members; most of these face charges of "assembling on the property of a state university for the purpose of creating a disturbance or inciting acts of violence" (News-Sentinel); these "militants" face penalty of one to ten years imprisonment under the law.

Gus Hadorn who is one of the "Knoxville 22," spoke at a UCM meeting last Sunday. He emphasized the facts that though several non-students were involved, the protest was not instigated by outsiders; that the severe penalty for assembling, an American right, is unjust; and that the action planned was not a take-over or student strike, but merely a "mill-in." Hadorn mentioned that in a true riot, which ensued the UT football championship two years ago, a mob of students incurred thousands of dollars damage on the campus but no arrests were made. A grad student who had planned his career in teaching, Hadorn appeared no "angry young revolutionary" and impressed Maryville students with his rational and qualified insights, giving both sides.

The protest opposed the appointment of a new president, Dr. Ed Boling, who was appointed without any attempt to ascertain student support. The remainder is from the News-Sentinel:

"My God, this can't be happening," a girl said. "What are they doing? It is unreal." The officers entered the crowd, swinging their clubs. . . The battle ended quickly. The students went only a short distance, then turned to jeer. . . (Weaver, chancellor, objected to the crowd and ordered the riot squad in because:) "People need to get in and out of the building." Weaver said, "We're not going to be hasty but this mob is going to be cleared from this area." . . . "Hell no, we won't go," the crowd chanted. . . (The arrested students issued the following statement:) "Despite our arrests we continue to believe in nonviolence. The moral witness of nonviolence is stronger than infinite numbers of guns and clubs. We urge our fellow students to join our peaceful resistance."

The Knoxville Legal Defense, supported by those defending the Knoxville 22, is planning a rally in Nashville for all Tennessee students this Sunday, April 12. Gus Hadorn, member, says the purpose is to "rejuvenate the Constitution and Bill of Rights and make people aware of the repression occurring throughout the state and to make attempts to stop it. The rally will be statewide and will include state and private campuses." The organizers are seeking to politically unify students from all parts of Tennessee.



Besides informal teach-ins and discussion groups, the Knoxville Legal Defense has engaged Jerry Reuben to speak

editorial:

Everyone gripes about the Independent Studies program here at M.C. Actually, I have found it to be one of the College's best assets. Here is a chance for the student to explore in some depth an area in which he is interested. The whole experiment quickly turns sour, however, when it turns into a dependent study revolving around the adviser. Advisers become so preoccupied with changing the student's writing style that they begin to lose the essence of the study. At this crucial point, the student usually discovers another problem: that his writer's Bible, Turabian, never gives definite footnote examples for his one of a kind footnotes. Perhaps our Independent Studies Department should construct its own manual for writing research papers. These guidelines should then be applied to all levels of research, from Freshman interim papers to Senior Independent Studies. This would eliminate the confusion of learning the Harbrace way, then the Turabian way. Presently, M.C.'s Independent Studies program seems to be more closely concerned with whether the paper is technically perfect than if the student has achieved an awareness of his topic.

LETTERS

Dear Fang,

This is not a letter of naive enthusiasm describing the ecstatic mysteries of ivy-covered castles or European drug-pushing students. I'm writing about Maryville—my friends there and their vital concerns. If you could imagine the strange feeling of my position—I felt such an active role in the MC circle—then I stepped out for a year and now I'm a mere onlooker. The letters I wrote and sent to you seem so distant and out of place, and each letter I receive from MC brings a sort of culture shock. Each letter begins the same: "There's not much going on, same old drag here." Then the following sentences nonchalantly plant the hurt—"so and so quit school—she was a senior too," "half of our class didn't return," "New visitation but the freshmen don't respect it," "Dr. Young is leaving," "The freshmen are dropping out like flies," and finally, "One of your friends committed suicide." There are always the unfortunate reports of hospitalization and physical accidents but I never realized how badly Maryville is suffering mentally. It is upsetting and I want so badly to reach out and comfort, but even my own efforts on campus of counteraction are only a painkiller to soothe the world. Why are we so messed up? How can we have so much and yet have nothing? How can we live so closely and yet so far apart?

I won der if it is because we are not searching for enough outside of ourselves? (I am most depressed when I dwell on my own problems.) This outside searching is going to have to go farther than candel holding. I know MC can become stale in regards to fresh ideas for thought stimulation--why not search to the wealth drawn and hidden at UT? It can be antagonizing not to date--'dorm rotters' we used to call ourselves. But a little searching into the Maryville Community reveals hundreds of children who, being victims of poverty and parental neglect, can readily respond to the guidance of college scout leaders or Boys Club workers. Our administration too, by opening our closed environment, can help us search in a more relevant world. (This has been a personal discovery this year.) I admire the conscientious objectors who do not believe in the Vietnam War or in fighting but I am sickened by the guys who purposely hurt themselves or abandon their citizenship. A much more positive peace program is to volunteer 2 years of service to the education-starved Congo, a country with ambition but helplessly exploited. I suppose I am branded right away as an idealist--but I prefer the name "Christian."

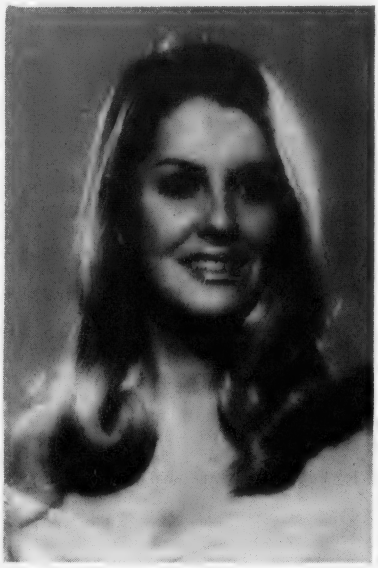
Dear Editor,

Last Saturday, while quietly eating my pork and dressing and in general enjoying my main meal of the day, I was advised to go to the Lantern the next night to see some of the Knoxville Twenty-two "for the side you don't get in the Knoxville Journal,' whatever that was supposed to mean. Thus ended my quiet enjoyment of Maryville College cuisine, with most of my meal left on my plate. I am so glad to see Christian love abounding so freely on our campus.

The Knoxville Twenty-two came to talk to UCM, which seems in itself rather paradoxical. And yet, it really doesn't bother me that the Knoxville group spoke on our campus. But it does bother me that the self-proclaimed and self-styled student leadership of this campus sees fit occasionally to make off-the-cuff, irresponsible remarks which are meant as attacks upon the press and upon figures and institutions of authority in the United States. It bothers me when the main campus activist organization which is misnamed University Christian Movement thinks it can foster brotherhood, love and Christian fellowship be attacking those with whom it disagrees with bitterness and rancor and when it attempts to disrupt the educational facilities of the college with anti-war activities and other functions which it adopts either directly or indirectly. It bothers me when those who have been given responsibility fail to make every effort that both sides of an issue be heard with no partiality or malice.

I will say here that those students and faculty members of this campus who share my views--and I include myself in this--are not totally free of blame. We have been lazy and cowardly, or, worse yet, blatant and occasionally irresponsible in our attempts to defned our principles. But those in control outnumber us, and they also must be obligated to open this campus to free dialogue and total exchange of ideas. And the members of this college community must try to clear their minds, at least to the extent that they search for truth.

It never ceases to amaze me that students and teachers from states far removed from Dixie feel so well-qualified to attack the South immediately upon impact. Yes, I,m sure that this is Christian openness. And not only do they attack the South, but they attack her public figures, from George Wallace right on down to community and civic personages. But do they try to understand? And do these people try to really understand "Southern" views on misplaced ones from the South as well--that perhaps racism and segregation are not synonymous, that black hatred for the white manis just as prejudiced as white hatred of the black? Let there be no prejudice and no bitterness in anyone's heart! Let there be understanding and true Christian love. Let there be total exchange of ideas among all sincere people on our campus.



For only through total love and respect can we find the way to the unity and peace we all claim to desire.

Applications for admission to the fall term at Maryville College are running 19% ahead of those received on this same date last year, according to Col. William F. Taylor, director of admissions at the College.

MARYVILLE COEDS PROVE THEIR BEAUTY

Lynn Gillespie, junior from Kearny, New Jersey, is the new Miss Blount County. She is the second M.C. student to be chosen for this honor. Last year the post was held by Barb Grinstead. The Miss Blount County pageant is a preliminary contest for the Miss America pageant held in Atlantic City every year. The contestants are judged on talent, poise and beauty in evening gown and swimsuit competition.

Lynn, in the talent competition, sang a religious-type folk song, "Hymn," while accompanying herself on the guitar. Her question—the judges always ask the 5 finalists a question—concerned the contemporary problem of the generation gap.

Lynn received a $200 scholarship from Bill Love's Kentucky Fried Chicken, $300 tuition grant from M.C., and $100 savings bond from the Blount National Bank. Also included were several gift certificates to other area stores, a trophy, and the trip to Jackson, Tennessee, in July to compete for the Miss Tennessee title.

First runner up was Dana Rule, a freshman from Knoxville. She sang Al Di La very well. As first runner up she would take Lynn's place if Lynn were unable to fulfill her duties as Miss Blount County.

Each year on the night of the dress rehearsal, all the contestants vote for one girl who they think is the most congenial. Claudia Gradwell, junior from Ramsey, New Jersey, won this award.

The pageant was highlighted by a guest vocalist who knocked a stool over into the orchestra pit, almost hitting the organist. Also, the Emcee, Sir Bernard Quayle, from WNOX, who otherwise did a fine job, at one point became so entangled in the microphone wires that he practically fell on the floor. The contest did have its humorous moments, and was an interestingly entertaining evening.

SCIENTIFIC REPORT OR "CANNON'S" COMET

Comets are one of the most interesting astronomical phenomena that occur. For hundreds of years the sighting of a comet has awed man, because of their unusual brightness and long glowing tail. Although most comets are not real bright, and some so faint that only by use of a telescope can one see them, there are exceptions, such as Bennett's comet which is easily visible in the early morning sky about 4:00 - 5:00 a.m. Another exception is Halley's Comet which will undoubtedly light up the day time sky although it will not be visible until 1986.

A comet is made up of a nucleus, coma, and a long tail. The nucleus is usually a few kilometers wide with the outer coma being about a hundred thousand kilometers wide. Tails have been measured from several million kilometers long up to 100 million miles, which is a distance greater than from the earth to the sun.

It is believed that comets are made up of frozen material and small solid particles. When a comet approaches the sun these particles reflect light. Gases are also formed and reflect more light. Some comets have orbits inside the solar system and periodically return while others have parabolic or hyperbolic orbits and never return.

The comet pictures is very brilliant when viewed through a larger telescope or even binoculars, and I believe it would be worth anyone's while if they have never seen a comet to get up early some morning soon and see this spectacular sight. It is located in the northeastern sky, about 20° off the horizon.

A NEW SOUND

A symphony written by a sixteen year old Finnish composer will be among the selections performed by the Maryville College-Community Orchestra on Friday, April 10, at 8:15 p.m. The symphony, called Sinfonia Piccola, is a charming, often dramatic work, full of the haunting melodies that have come to be associated with the Nordic countries.

Also on the program, in recognition of the 200th anniversary of Beethoven's birth (1770-1827), will be his overture to Egmont, a work based on the historical play of Goethe.

The remaining works to be performed are Marche Militaire Francaise by Saint-Saens, Ballet Parisient by Offenbach, and the Intermezzo from L'Arlesienne Suite No. 2 by Bizet.

The Orchestra is a community venture and is open to all residents of the community and all Maryville College students who play an orchestral instrument.

The concert, to be conducted by Lee Kull, Instructor of Strings at Maryville College, will be given in the Maryville College Chapel and is open to the public without charge.

BASEBALL

Maryville College remains at the .500 mark after splitting a doubleheader with St. Clair College of Michigan Friday. Each of the games evolved as pitching duel. In the first game Lee Faulkner pitched a 3-hitter and allowed no earned runs, but lost two zero as errors in the 2nd and 3rd innings allowed St. Clair runs. The Scots themselves managed only 3 hits as Jr. Maietta, Larry Stephens, and Lynn Dildine had one each.

The 2nd game turned out to be even tighter as freshman Bob Randall turned in another fine performance as he held the opposition scoreless while scattering six hits. St. Clair's Kuzava went 2 for 3 to lead the touring Michigan team. Maryville's lone run came in the 5th inning as Dan McKinstry smashed a double off the Dan McKinstry smashed a double off the the fence in left centerfield. Bob Macy walked, Joe White bunted to fill the bases as the play at 3rd was unsuccessful and Bob Randall struck out. So with the bases loaded Jr. Maietta executed a perfect squeeze play as McKinstry scored the game's lone run. McKinstry also picked up a single as he gathered Maryville's only two hits.

TRACK

Maryville College lost a dual meet to Berry College at Rome, Georgia Saturday. The 106-39 score reflects the difficulty Maryville had with a good Bery team. David Wiley was, es expected, Maryville's top performer as he continues to lower Maryville College's distance records. Wiley scored ten points with two firsts as he set a new school record of 4:24.3 in the mile and 15:28 in the 3 mile. Chip Pusey garnered two seconds, one in the 120 high hurdles and oen in the 440 intermediate hurdles, and freshman Doug Davis placed in both sprints, the highjump, the polevault and the javelin throw. TIAC high-jump champion John Leibrock lost an expected first when he injured his knee, but is expected to be ready this week.

WOMEN

Softball is presently underway. Check the schedule for every Tuesday and Thursday. XB beat Independents 13-9. There will be one more practice for the girls swim meet (April 23) next Wednesday night. Sign up for singles and doubles matches in tennis now. Watch for article in next week's paper on our aerobic women.

confront the nation.

Dr. Willey pointed out that the answer lies in conscious control of population growth, and in an increased recognition on the part of American people generally that only as the size of the average American family is reduced will these major problems be lessened. "A more stable population is the goal toward which we must work," Dr. Willey concluded.

DIXIE DEBATE FOR MC STUDS

Maryville College will have a total of 39 entries in various speech/theatre events at the Dixie Festival, April 23, 24, 25 at Georgia Southern College, Statesboro, Georgia. Under the direction of Mrs. Robert Proffitt, forensics director, the troupe has prepared entries ranging from puppetry to persuasive speaking, and including 12 individual entries in oral interpretation of prose and poetry. Fourteen students make up the Troupe.

For this festival a reader's theatre has been developed which includes Sue Drees, Diane Wood, Mark Mertz, and King Bennett. This group will perform a lively program designed for youthful audiences entitled "Children, Dragons, and Other Beasts," based on the story of the Reluctant Dragon. Following the festival, this 30 minute program will be available for a limited number of guest appearances in area schools.

Entered in due-acting competition will be Diane Wood and Mark Mertz, performing a cutting from "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf." Stuart Smith will represent the College in solo acting with cuttings from "Desire Under the Elms," portraying Ephraim Cabot.

The oral interpretation divisions were determined by groupings of 20th century American poets. Reading from Robert Frost and Conrad Aiken will be Sue Drees, Patty Coleman, and Paul Hindman; Eberhart, Wilbur, and Brooks will be read by Diane Wood, King Bennett, and Carol Fisher; contemporary and beat poets will be read by Steve Horton, Mark Mertz, and Don Hand; and, 20th century prose writers will be interpreted by Sue Drees, Stuart Smith, and Paul Hindman.

Among the other entries are Harry Robertshaw (radio events), Stevan Horning, Bob Cox, and Jan Welton (speech events), and 4 teams of puppeteers composed of various members of the travelling troupe.

Entered in novice debate will be Mike Montgomery and Bob Cox. Thomas E. Jones, director of the Maryville College Theatre, will also accompany the Troupe.

GETTING READY WITH KINSINGER

Dan H. Kinsinger, assistant professor of music at Maryville College, will present a voice recital April 23, 8:15 p.m., in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall.

Mr. Kinsinger, a native of Peoria, Illinois, received his B.A. from Eureka College in 1951 and his M.Mus. from Northwestern University in 1953. In December he passed his preliminaries for the doctor of music degree from the University of Illinois. He has attended vocal workshops at the University of Tennessee, University of Illinois, Ohio State University and the University of Western Kentucky at Bowling Green.

Soloist in the chancel choir at New Providence Presbyterian Church in Maryville, Mr. Kinsinger has also soloed in many major works in the East Tennessee area. He has sung the tenor solos from the Messiah for 8 years and appeared with Karen Roewade, affiliate artist at Maryville College, in two opera night programs. He sang the role of the magician in The Consul and of Mr. Angel in Impresario.

Dr. Harry H. Harter, chairman of the Department of Fine Arts, invites the public to hear Mr. Kinsinger in the following program: four hymns by R. Vaughan Williams, five songs from the Lieder Kreis cycle by Schumann, an aria from the Opera La Muette de Portici by Auber, "Sicilianna" from the opera Cavalleria Rusticanna, four songs from the La Bonne Chauson cycle by Gabriel Faure and five poems of James Joyce set to music by the English composer E. J. Moeran.

During intermission new members of Tau Kappa Chi, honorary music fraternity, will be inducted into the Maryville College chapter.

WHY APRIL 22 IS IMPORTANT TO YOU

It is sometimes helpful to reflect on the facts of our existence. We humans are inescapably communal animals. Unless we choose to seclude ourselves as hermits in a rapidly vanishing wilderness, we are faced with the problem of co-existing with others. So the question arises, how does one live meaningfully in the context of society?

Governing systems exist in their present form either by the action or inaction of the governed. The rules laid down by the governing body can lead to various kinds of societies. Customary labels attached to various societies are capitalistic, communistic, totalitarian, etc. Perhaps more relevant and more appropriate descriptions would be: dehumanizing, neurotic, psychotic, anti-human, productive, or individualistic; to name a few.

Each person has to decide for himself what shape an ideal society should take. Keeping this in mind, it is then imperative to acknowledge the plain fact that if change is to occur it will occur through cooperating with others of a like mind in endeavoring to produce a more meaningful product.

Take the problem of paper waste: If enough people who purchase milk at a market took along plastic jugs, and poured milk from the carton into the jug thus leaving the cartons for the store to worry about, would milk companies continue to use paper cartons instead of returnable bottles?

Automobile fumes: If no one bought anything but lead free gasoline, would petroleum companies continue to make leaded gasoline?

Germany 1933: if enough people refused to swear the oath of allegiance to Hitler, would he have come to power?

Russia 1970: If enough Russians refused to go to work and struck for higher wages, would the pay not increase?

Basically Environmental Action Day is a day set aside to express the concern that our social patterns are threatening the continued existence of our natural habitat and specifically the continued existence of homo sapiens. But the motives behind Environmental Action Day are as varied as the number of people who will participate in it. Bring your motive and lend your voice!

The following people are presently serving as a clearing house for ideas concerning Environmental Action Day: Dave Rugh, Ann Briggs, Steve Horning, Ed Pritchard, Tom Graham, Dr. Shields, Doug Cox.

Following is a tentative list of projects and people to see concerning each one:

1) Tremont Open House — Dr. Shields
2) Oak Ridge (Demonstration) — Lloyd Kramer
3) College Woods (Clean Up) — Jerry Cooper
4) Campus Programs (movies, etc.) — Linda Jones
5) Campus Cleanup — Sally Day, Tom Graham
6) Nationwide
   a) letters to Congress
   b) boycotts, etc. — Ed Pritchard

LETTERS

An Open Letter to the M.C. Community

Let's quit the griping. M.C. is a college to write home about.

To anyone who has studied or taught in the city (I taught for 5 years overlooking a traffic jam on 49th Street in New York breathing carcinogenic fumes), walk this spacious campus on a spring day, look up at the mountains, inhale the air, and get turned on by nature's profusion.

No Greek could ask for more. Here there is beauty and freedom. Over and over again I ask myself, why don't my fellow students use the freedom to inquire and the freedom to determine the direction we ought to go? But we have. I've watched us grow for three years. We've already got freedom to move (cars); freedom to socialize (visitation); freedom to worship in our own way (no required chapel); freedom to govern and to be heard (ACC). So Let's go on!

You know, I would think twice before exchanging the freedom and beauty of this place for a traditional college. So an end to griping now! A beginning to thanksgiving! Let's write home about M.C.

Fraternally,

Donald M. Stine

MOVIE: WEIRD AND WACKY

The Maryville College movie series will present "Oh Dad, Poor Dad" in the College theatre Friday, April 17, 8:00 p.m.

The 86 minute color film, released by Paramount in 1967, stars Rosalind Russell, Robert Morse, Barbara Harris, Hugh Griffith, Jonathan Winters and Lionel Jeffries.

"Oh Dad, Poor Dad," beautifully photographed in Jamaica is an uninhibited offbeat tale about a typical everyday family. That is, if you can call a doting mother who tries to seduce a millionaire and her twenty-five year old son (complete with security blanket) who resists being seduced by the hotel baby-sitter and a father who happens to be a stuffed corpse hanging in the closet, if you can call all this typical, then it is a typical everyday family.

Tickets will be available at the door for this weird and wacky comedy, $1.

COME CREATOR SPIRIT OR OUR COMMISSIONED MASS

Richard Yardumian's Mass in English "Come, Creator Spirit" (Veni, Creator Spiritus) will be presented on Saturday, May 2, 1970, at 8:15 p.m. in the chapel at Maryville College in celebration of the College's Sesquicentennial year. Igor Buketoff will conduct the Piedmont Chamber Orchestra in the presentation, and will be assisted by two 100-member choruses made up of former Maryville College City, on March 31, 1967. In composing the Mass, Yardumian sought to make it suitable for use as part of the service of worship or for performance in concert. As to the techniques employed in writing the Mass, Yardumian points out that the characteristic detail of texture is polymodality. In other words, he often uses several different chant themes in contrapuntal juxtaposition. Mr. Yardumian has dedicated the Mass "to the greater glory of God."

The Piedmont Chamber Orchestra has as its nucleus artists-in-residence at the North Carolina School of the Arts, Duke University, and other institutions of the Southeast. It is conducted by the prize-winning American Conductor, Igor Buketoff.

The Mass, "Come, Creator Spirit," was commissioned by New York's Fordham University in commemoratio of its 125th anniversary and presented at Philharmonic Hall, Lincoln Center, New York Choir members and members of the community, and soloist Lili Chookasian. There will be a second performance of the Mass on Sunday, May 3, 1970, at 2:30 p.m. in the Knoxville Civic Auditorium. The program will include Chorale Prelude on the Plainsong "Veni Sancte Spiritus"-Richard Yardumian; Solo Cantata No. 51 "Jauchzett Gott in Alles Landen"-J.S. Bach-soloist, Phyllis Curtin; and Mass in English "Come, Creator Spirit"- Richard Yardumian-soloist, Lili Chookasian.

Mr. Yardumian's principle works include two symphonies, a violin concerto, "Cantus Animae et Cordis" for string tet or string orchestra, and the Armenian Suite" for orchestra, which he wrote when he was only nineteen. Noted musicologist Hans Moldenhauer has said, "The music of Richard Yardumian is a true reflection of the composer's spiritual and emotional temperament, tending toward contemplation and meditation. In an age when computers and other electronic devices are crowding into the lives and minds of the earth:s conformity beseiged inhabitants, Yardumian's music is a welcome call to solitutde and soliloquy. Long sections of Yardumian:s music are pervaded by mysticism and religious fervor. These qualities form a sharp contrast to the harsh realities of...twentieth century life and strongly reveal the composer's deep religious faith and profound inner peace."

CIRCLE K DECIDES WHAT CIRCLE K REALLY IS

There will be an informal get together for all interested men on Wednesday, April 22 at 7:00 in the Fine Arts Center Lounge. The purpose of the program will be to introduce prospective members to "What is Circle K." Dr. Randolph Shields, chairman and professor of the Biology Department at Maryville College, will speak on the need for concerned people both on our campus and at Tremont.

We are looking to an active 1970-71 school year and would like to have you join with us in this effort.

Alan Coren of England's Student Magazine satirized the American Collegian's switch from sex to politics, taken from Moderator Magazine for this issue of the Echo.

Sex, as the traditional preoccupation of American college students, is dead, says the Rev. Earl Brill, a college chaplain. It has been replaced by civil rights and war concern.- Daily Telegraph.

Gently, an ivory disc of Californian moon rose over the dark knuckle of Bodega Head, striking soft phosphorescence from the still Pacific and picking out the slogans pasted to the flanks of a ramshackle convertible parked beside the highway. HANDS OFF VIETNAM! they shrieked: BAN THE BOMB! LET MY PEOPLE GO!

Behind the wheel sat tanned, cadaverous, liberal sophomore Wiley Folkenflik Jr., champion of civil liberties, archenemy of HUAC and Hoover, militant angel of SANE and CORE, a man whose name turned whole sororities white overnight. Where Wiley walked, suburban shutters slammed and Young Americans for Freedom turned their badges to the wall in fear and trembling. And female students, terror and wrestling in their untested bosoms, watched, quaking deliciously, as his shadow passed.

One such maiden sat beside him now, Dulalia Freeport, blonde Baptist cheerleader, slim of leg and lush of texture, pure, smooth and tempting as an unnibbled peach, who dreamed of some day raising a son to be the first All-American footballer to put a chapel into orbit around Uranus. As she sat now, shrinking, beside the awesome Folkenflik, her soul cried out at her own folly: she had eaten his Tastee Whamburger, she had sipped his Joo-C-Frute — but at what cost? What final reckoning?

In the heavy midnight silence, Folkenflik spoke suddenly.

"They're building a nuclear reactor up there," he said, pointing. "Don't you think that's a lousy thing for a government to do?"

Dulalia gasped. She bit her tender lip.

"Please, Wiley," she muttered quickly. "Don't talk that way. I mean, I'm not that kind of girl. I mean, I think you ought to know that. If we're going to date one another. I mean."

Folkenflik laughed, a dark, sophisticated, liberal laugh.

"Why ever not? Hell, Dulalia, you're almost eighteen. We're adults, you and I. Nuclear power is a fact of life."

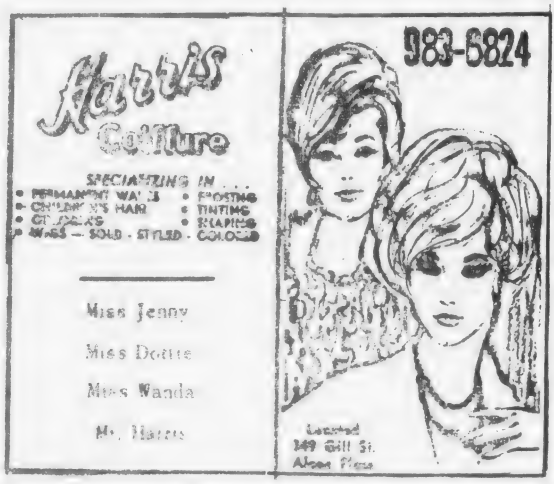
She looked desperately at the shining sea.

"I know, Wiley. But once a boy and girl start talking about — about peaceful uses of atomic energy, that kind of thing, well, pretty soon they'll be discussing — discussing bombs or something. Or — or integration. It's how these things start. I've heard from other girls. You don't find out until it's too late. I think I should tell you, my mother warned me about boys like you. I mean."

Wiley sighed a weary, experienced sigh.

"Dulalia, I want you to understand I respect you as a person. Not just another girl to discuss Red China with. They're a dime a dozen, that kind of girl. I want a relationship. There's nothing sordid about discussion, Dulalia, Why, your own mother and father do it, I'm sure—."

"Please, Wiley, you mustn't say things like that."



"There's nothing to be afraid of. Discussion can be a very fine, a very wonderful experience. A person isn't mature until he or she has engaged in political intercourse. Trust me, Dulalia."

He turned his famous smile upon her, and she felt her knees dissolve. She found herslef wanting to talk about civil rights more than ever before, but she forced herself to think of other things.

"It's this way, Wiley," She murmured at last. "I've been brought up to believe that people oughtn't to talk about Vietnam or Negroes or Socialised Medicine or anything until after they're married. Until they know what they're doing." She looked down at her hands. "It's always the girl that pays; Wiley. I mean, only last week Myra Duesenberg went out in a four with that terrible Morris Fisch, the one who's always handing out leaflets and everything, and they're in the back seat of this sedan, and it's pretty dark, and suddenly this Morris Fisch turns to her and says: 'Myra, don't you figure we ought to negotiate with the Viet Cong?' And before she knew what she was doing, she'd replied. Well, right after that they pulled over to the side of the road, and they all started discussing. All four of them!"

Dulalia fell silent among her private fears. Far off, a fire flared suddenly on the dark beach, silhouetting the tiny figures beside it. Guitar strings twanged distantly, the strains of an old sweet protest song about the failure through union corruption of the Placerville artichoke crop. The music pricked tears into Dulalia's huge violet eyes.

"Oh, Wiley," she murmered, "just look at that dreamy moon!"

"It's too much," he said, sighing professionally. "And just think—that's the same moon that rises over the Da Nang Peninsula."

"Gosh, Wiley, I never thought of it that way. D'you suppose those awful Peking trained Marxist lickspittle VC terrorists hold hands under it, just like us?"

"Depends on whether the war-orientated escallation-committed Pentagon lackeys happen to be bombing them at the time, I guess. Gee, honey, don't you feel that the unjustified strafing of Haiphong is leading the US further and further into a position of confrontation that will make withdrawal ultimately inconceivable?"

Dulalia snuggled closer to the stringy arm beside her.

"Oh, Wiley, who knows? Maybe truce negotiations won't be possible until the Viet Cong are zapped to the point of accepting the impossibility of military victory."

"But surely, Dulalia, continued bombing of North Vietnamese non-combatants will only strengthen their determination not to yield? Meanwhile jeopardising our chance of permanentising the Sino-Soviet rupture, and welding the Communist bloc more dangerously together?"

Dulalia felt, her cheeks bloom with a new, exciting warmth.

"Never!" she cried. "The split goes far beyond political considerations! It signifies the inevitable mutual alienation of Occidental and Oriental life-processes. Don't you see, Wiley, it's — it's —"

"Yes?" he breathed, "Yes?"

"It's a RACIAL QUESTION!"

As the soprano cry rang out against the velvet night, Wiley Folkenflik Jr., turned to gaze upon the face of Dulalia Freeport. They stared into one another's eyes for a long, startled moment. And then the terrible silence broke on a single sob.

"Please, Dulalia," he breathed in his lowest register. "Please don't cry."

The sweet shoulders shook, and the Beatle faces on her sweater grimaced weirdly with the sudden ripplings of the nubility beneath. Words slipped between her sobs.

"I — I'm sorry — I can't help it. I've never — I've never done this before. You — you do believe that, don't you Wiley? It was the first time."

His fingers encircled her delicious arm, expertly.

"Easy, honey" he murmured. "The first time is always the worst." Dulalia brushed a hand across her melting eyes.

"I guess you've done it hundreds of times, haven't you?"

He shrugged.

"A few."

"How many times, Wiley? I mean, how — how many girls have you discussed things with? Before me?"

"I don't know, Dulalia. But that doesn't matter. They don't count. It was never like this before. Never as good. Was it — was it good for you too?"

She hesitated, afraid. She looked into his eyes. She nodded.

"I'd like to go home now, Wiley," she said, very quietly.

As the dilapidated car drew up beside the impeccable anonymity of 146758 Chestnut Avenue, a light snapped on in an upper window.

"Oh heavens!" Dulalia whispered.

"Shall I come in with you?"

"No." The sweet chin dimpled bravely. "I shall face them alone."

"We shall overcome!" shouted Folkenflik, and slipped the clutch. Dulalia skipped quickly up the gravel path to face her environment.

Her parents were standing three paces inside the door, dressing-gowns over their nightclothes, trembling between rage and apprehension. Henry Clay Freeport had pulled on his American Legion cap, for strength, and his wife hovered at his shoulder, peering into her daughter's lovely face for a Sign.

"What kind of a time do you call this, Dulalia?" cried her father. "What are you trying to do to your mother and I?"

"Me," said his wife.

"I mentioned you," shouted Freeport. "This concerns all of us. The family is the economic unit that made America great. And you," he turned to Dulalia, "have threatened the security of us all."

Tears welled up in Dulalia's eyes, hesitated, and hurtled down her cheeks. Her mother leapt forward, embosoming her daughter.

"What did he do to you?" she shrieked. "What did he do to my baby?"

Henry Clay Freeport blanched, adrift in a world not his.

"Oh God!" he moaned to the empty air, "and me a Rotarian!" Broken, he crept upstairs.

He was still awake, staring unblinkingly at the ceiling, when his wife slid into bed beside him an hour later.

"It was that Folkenflik boy," she said. She blew her nose erratically. "They talked about Vietnam. And the H-Bomb. And Rap Brown."

Freeport groaned.

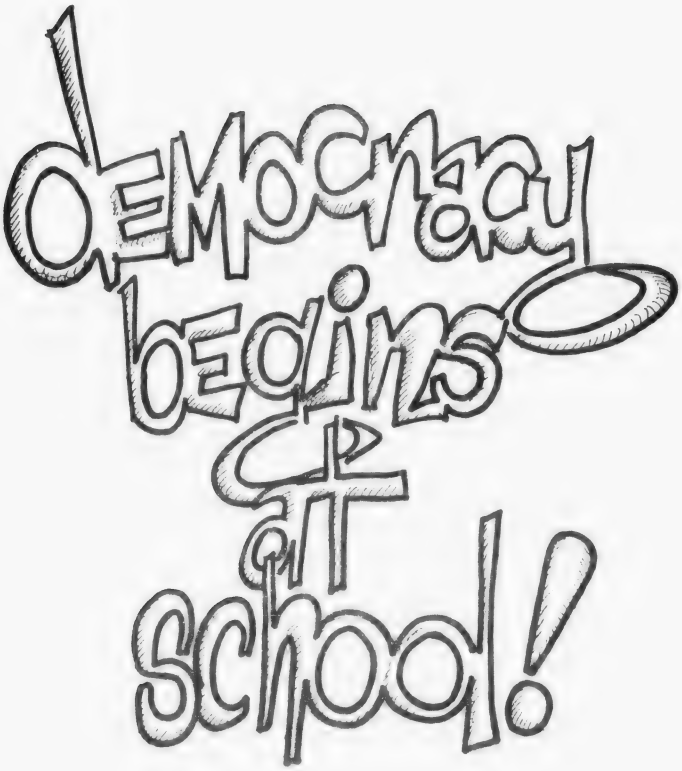
"Will he marry her?"

He felt her shrug.

"Who knows?" she muttered. "Who knows with youth?"

"Ach!" cried Freeport at the dark walls. "There's so much goddamned youth about. Everywhere. Insidious. Threatening."

"Maybe we should have talked to her earlier. About the Far East and ICBMs and strategic proliferation, that kind of thing. Maybe we're to blame. Henry."



Curious stirrings moved through Freeport. Things that decorum and practicability and middle-age had long suppressed. He looked for a definition of his feelings towards Folkenflik, and found envy. It had been so long. His head turned on the pillow.

"Muriel," he murmured, in a low, strange voice, "how do you feel about Formosa?"

She started, snatched a glance at him, giggled girlishly.

"Oh, Henry" she simpered, "don't you think we're both a little old for that sort of thing?" ■

REVIEWING JOE GAMBLE

Joe C. Gamble, chairman of the board of directors at Maryville College for the past 17 years requested last October when his present term expired that he not be considered for re-election as chairman. The board requested, however, that he remain as chairman through this sesquicentennial year. The board is expected to take action concerning a new chairman at its next meeting. Mr. Gamble will continue as an active member of the board, a position he has held since 1939, following in the footsteps of his father, Judge Moses Houston Gamble, who served as a board member from 1910 to 1934.

Mr. Gamble, a prominent local attorney who holds membership in the American College of Trial Lawyers, is a graduate of Maryville College and holds the LL.B. degree from the University of Michigan Law School. Maryville College conferred the LL.D. degree upon him in 1958. Religious, civic and political activities have claimed much of Mr. Gamble's time and energy. He is an elder in New Providence Presbyterian Church, chairman of the board of directors for the Bank of Maryville, former member of the Tennessee Legislature and the State Election Commission. An active Kiwanian, Mr. Gamble has been president of the local club, president of Green Meadow Country Club, and chairman of the board of directors for Blount Memorial Hospital.

Maryville College has played a prominent part in the lives of many of Mr. Gamble's family members. His mother and father both were graduates and so were four of his brothers and one sister. His brother, M. H. Gamble, Jr., partner in the local law firm of Goddard and Gamble, has also given active leadership to the College. Mrs. Joe Gamble, the former Frances Leisenring, graduate of the University of Michigan, attended Maryville College and their son, Douglas A. Gamble, a graduate student in history at Ohio State University, was president of the student body at Maryville his senior year. Doug's wife, the former Janet Lynn Wells, is a 1968 graduate of Maryville College.

Mr. Gamble has served Maryville College as chairman of the board of directors during 17 of its most progressive years. Endowments have almost doubled during this time, gifts and grants have increased from $14,750 in 1953 to $1,000,000 annually. The value of the physical plant has increased more than four times. A continuous building program during this period has included the Samuel Tyndale Wilson Chapel-Theatre complex, the art wing of the Fine Arts Center, Sutton Science Center, four new residence halls, the remodeling of all dormitories, the new health and physical education building now nearing completion, and the remodeling of Fayerweather as a student center.

During Mr. Gamble's tenure as chairman of the board of directors, Maryville College launched a successful ten-year Sesquicentennial Development Program which culminates this year. Initially it included the raising of $6 million for capital and current uses. After the inauguration of Maryville College's seventh president, Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, the goal was raised to $7 million which was reached in 1966 and then extended to $12 million. To date, over $11 million of this goal has been realized, and the College hopes to reach the $12 million mark by the close of this year.

President Copeland, in commenting upon Mr. Gamble's decision, said: "Mr. Gamble has been untiring in his time, energies, and wisdom spent on behalf of Maryville College. He understands and is very sensitive to the deeper meaning of higher education in American life. He knows the responsibilities and prerogatives of a Board in its relationship to a college or university.

"These characteristics, coupled with his unreserved commitments to Maryville College, have made him a very strong and valuable chairman. In addition to this, his wise counsel, his availability and his warmth and cordiality have brought security to me personally in these nine years that I have been President under his Chairmanship. I deeply appreciate the fact that the college and I personally will continue to have his services as an experienced Board member."

SUMMER PLAYHOUSE

The Maryville Summer Playhouse announces the 1970 season with a new and exciting format—lots of music and laughter, and maybe a few tears, but theatre for everyone. Opening the season, Neil Simon's Star-spangled Girl describes the antics of two young publishers of an underground newspaper and their next-door-neighbor, an all-American girl. Curtain date is June 19th, and the show will run through the 29th—the extended run is another new feature of the Playhouse set-up. Soon on the patriotic path of Star-spangled Girl comes the classic musical that has thrilled children and warmed the hearts of adults for three generations; Dorothy, Scarecrow, Tin Woodman, and Cowardly Lion dance down the yellow brick road to see the grand and glorious Wizard of Oz, starting July 3rd. Running through July 11th, this mixture of magical Munchkins and wicked witches is followed by the musical that took New York by storm and has remained one of the very favorite Rodgers and Hammerstein classics of all time: South Pacific. This touching love story of a French planter and an Arkansas hill girl in the World War II South Pacific features such songs as "Bali Hai," "Some Enchanted Evening," "Bloody Mary," and "I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Outta My Hair." Opening July 17th, it will run through July 25th. Finishing the season is the English comedy Joe Egg, the story of the trials of parents who refuse to acknowledge that they cannot raise their daughter who is palsied. Opening August 14th, Joe Egg will run through the 22nd. Be sure to get seats early for this season of songs, stories, a little sadness, and sentiment. If you can act or would like to try, come to auditions—to be announced later —and join us in the theatre this summer.

OUR FAMILY COMPUTER

Most of the MC community is familiar with the College's use of the computer either through upper division science and math courses or through the required freshman Science Thought and Fundamentals courses.

Dr. Love has had a paper accepted for presentation at the University of Iowa's Conference on Computers in the Undergraduate Curricula to be held June 16, 17, and 18. The paper is titled "The Introduction of the Computer into Maryville's Freshman Science Course."

While at the conference Dr. Love will also serve on a panel discussing the problems with and the effect of the computer on Maryville's campus and those of other small colleges.

editorial:

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep....

April 22 was Earth Day, and Americans were asked to focus on the problems of pollution. In Philadelphia, New York, Miami, and Los Angeles rallies were held to reveal the grave future that Americans face in a polluted nation. In other areas throughout the country, people discussed, and even sang about, this problem of pollution. Even on our campus, activities were held to recognize the problem of polluted skies and waterways. Green armbands were the fashion of the day.

One day out of 365 was set aside to honor this place we call earth. For a few hours in the day, Americans talked about the industrial waste that covers the skies, the soil, and the water. But there are 364 more days that cannot be ignored in dealing with the pollution problem. Earth Day was a clever "gimmick" to get Americans concerned; however, this concern cannot be limited to one day if the industrial waste is to be washed away. Let's hope for the sake of our survival that the thinking and the action will continue after April 22.

Let's also not forget the responsibility involved in cleaning up the air and the waterways. We all have the responsibility of supporting anti-pollution legislation. We also have the responsibility of bearing the cost entailed with such laws. Industries are gradually being regulated by laws to install anti-pollution devices in their plants. These devices, which are very expensive, will result in a rise of prices for their products. Americans will complain when the 1971 cars will have expensive tabs due to the addition of anti-pollution devices in their motors. But this is the price that must be paid for living in a highly modern and complex society whose members created pollution.

We are all in this together; industries are only a few of the "pollution-producers." We all must solve this problem, and it is not going to be an easy task nor an inexpensive one. We all must think of the long run—of making this earth a viable place in which to live. It's a tremendous responsibility, but let's face it, responsibility is a tremendous part of life.

In the beginning the earth was created; right now we are destroying this creation. Let's try to keep the creation going, not for one day only, but for the millions of other days that will follow April 22.

Dear Editor,

I would like to thank all the people who were responsible for sending the good luck telegram to Boston while John Powell and I were there prior to the Marathon. It was, to say the least, a morale booster.

Thank you very much.

D. Wiley

Dear Humans,

The recent "Fast for Peace," has brought to my some interesting thoughts. The mere fact that I sit here now, thinking of what it has meant to me to go without food for two days, is return enough. But it goes beyond thoughts of hunger-pangs shooting through the stomach.

The period became a time when even though my thoughts on the war are as neblous as the next man's, I could say with some measure of certainty that this war, and all others, is wrong. It gave me a much needed sense of urgency. and desire to help. Something that, to date, no other experience has given me. I have been confronted by people on why I chose to fast, and each time I was approached, my opinions became clearer and clearer. For this I thank certain people on this campus that made this event open to participation.

Another reaction I received from the fast was a thought of those who were against the whole moratorium idea, or of getting out of the War. I thought of some of thier arguments, such as stopping Communism before it spreads and ending the war in victory with honor, and so on. Finally I thought of the 15,000 people marched on Washington holding signs saying "In God We Trust," and "Victory Then Peace," as if they were synonymous terms. I really want to be able to talk to them, but it would most certainly end in argument. They can see the urgency of pollution because it affects the possibilities of a not so rosy-looking future. Perhaps they fail to equte the two because the only thing that is effected by that somewhat distinct war is their pride in their country's accomplishments. But, if one thinks about it, what really is pride in one's country, except the denial of another section of land to be as good. If the U.S. is first, that means that someone has to be say tenth (in other words, last). Why cannot we all be Fifth?

The conclusion has come and yet I feel as if I have said very little. Maybe I have failed to make any point at all, except that I am a human being, living here trying to "make it" with other humans, and trying to decide what compromises should and should not be made.

The fast has brought to me these thoughts, plus becoming inches closer to several people. There was indeed worth in it, and I again express my congratulations to those who planned it, both locally and nationally.

To the Experience,

Mark Stoub.

I would like to second Dr. Stine.s letter. Also, I would like to add several more things to the credit side of Maryville College. Beginning this year the Physics 203 students have the advantage of using the laboratory facilities at the Special Training Division of Oak Ridge Associated Universitieis. Having these facilities available will give our students experience that many student in large universities do not have. Also, arrangements have been made so that the faculity and students working on independent study labs can make use of the Low Temperature lab at Oak Ridge National Laboratory. If you talk to the people in the Chemistry Department you will find that they also are making use of ORNL as well as UT.

This summer, while I worked at ORNL in a conversation over lunch, I convinced six scientists in fifteen minutes that Maryville was the top school in this area; If I had had the time I could have convinced them that it was tops in the South, in another fifteen minutes; and in an additional thirty minutes, top in the Nation. Stop complaining long enough to check our good points and I think you will see what I mean.

Sincerely,

Norman D. Love
Acting Chairman Math & Physics Dept. and Director of Computer Services

P.S. How many schools the size of Maryville have a computer center on campus?

TO THE STUDENT BODY, FACULTY, AND STAFF OF MARYVILLE COLLEGE

I am staging a protest against this cmapus! I have several things to complain and ask about! First, What is UCM supposed to be? It's name says that it is Christian. If I have been raised correctly as the daughter of a Presbyterian minister there are ten commandments Christians are supposed to follow. Three of these are: Thou shalf not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. Thou shalt not steal. Thou shalt not bear false witness

AN ERROR OF COMEDY

Friday night the movie "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mother's Hung You in the Closet and I'm feeling So Sad" was shown on campus—unfortunately! I had expected a hilarious comedy, and I was sadly disappointed. This is not to say that there were not quite a few very funny scenes. Indeed, father's untimely fall from the closet was uproarious—or was it merely that the rest of the movie was so inanely boring that this scene seemed humorous in comparison? Perhaps the scene in which the "baby sitter" was called to Jonathan's suite was amusing—but it was a rather insipid sort of humor. The movie was fraught with possibilities for comedy, but they just missed the mark. A few scenes were funny for a few seconds (the grabby Venus Fly-Trap, for example), but they were too extended to contain any real humor and too "Jerry Lewis" to enjoy for very long. Other episodes were too morbid, and their symbolism was so lacking in subtlety that the biggest reaction was simply boredom.

In short, "Oh Dad, Poor Dad" was a mistake—an error in judgment that masqueraded as a comedy.

against thy neighbor.. In case the people on this campus do not understand archaic language I will translate: Don't swear! Don't Steal! Don't lie! I have not seen any evidence of the University Christian Movement defending these principles!!! Instead they have chosen to concentrate on the conveniently nebulous problems of Community, Peace, and Poverty.

Now to what I have seen. I have seen young boys and girls who think thay are adults using some of the worst cussing in normal conversation--not only in their rooms and dorms, but also in very public place they can find. I do not mean to say that I am perfect but I do try to use swearing as little as possible. Maybe that is doing your own thing but you might take into consideration the people around you!

Next, I have seen stealing in the wrost degree possible. There are two places where it has been most obvious. The first is in the dining hall. I have seen the few attempts by Miss Ware to decorate the place disappear in five minutes. I have seen sugar bowls, salt and pepper shakers, plates, silverware, you name it--chances are it has been stolen! I have seen boys coming back to their seats boasting to anyone nearby about how mcuh food they got away with. If they threw away all of the empty milk cartons and napkins that they took the waitresses would not mind so much. But these same boys seem to think that empty things are harder to carry than full things so they leave them on the tables, chairs, and floor.. (While I am on the subject, I would like to inform the student body of a couple policies that have been in operation for some years regarding supper. First, although tea and water pitchers are allowed to circulate around the dining hall they are supposed to end up back on thier original service table--not congregate six to an area for persons private use. Other people might want some, too! Secondly, after six is when the dining hall is beginning to clear out and the waitresses begin to clean up. After that time it will be hard to find water and tea because about 600-700 people have been there first. If you are polite more water might be fetched but no more tea because there is not any. Thirdly, is it too much to ask that people pick up their plates and empty glasses?)

Now back to the main topic. Another stealing place is the dorm kitchen. It seems that the wonderful Maryville College students take great pride in their speed of refrigerator raiding. They will steal anything that they feel thay need. Not only that but they will even go so far as to change a name so that they can claim the object later as thier own!! I have had a candy bar disappear within five minutes of the time it was put in the refrigerator. I have had five cartons of milk stolen in as many days. And I am beginning to wonder about the class of students that steal consistently.

Third, there is the case of lies. It is not quite as basd as the others but it is there. Coupled with it is the general disrespect that is shown to our faculty and staff. The rumors that float around this campus are to be expected, but not their viciousness. There have been outright lies that have been said in front of people but not to them. I am sorry that students think it is cool to lie to others, swear with them and at them, and steal the rest.

And this, my friends and enemies, is one of the reasons I am proud to say that I am leaving the Community of Maryville College at the end of this term. It is also why I cannot recommend this college to my friends at home. I only wish this school (and the basic action group on campus–UCM) was not so apathetic that it will not even try to correct the problems even in the slightest. This school has and has had great possibilities but what has happened!!! Are we really dragging new students out of the gutters or does it just look that way?????!!!!

Lee Ann Dalzell

United States Senate
Washington, D.C.

Dear Friend:

The destruction of our environment is a matter of urgent concern to all thinking people. One of the largest stumbling blocks to meaningful environmental repair is the powerlessness of the American people to challenge, through legal channels, those responsible for the pollution that destroys our air, water, and land. This situation seriously handicaps the struggle for a clean environment.

In recognition of the urgent need to deal with this problem I introduced, together with Senator Philip Hart, a bill designed to "provide every person with an adequate remedy to protect the air, water, land, and public trust of the United States from unreasonable pollution, impairment, or destruction." It would do so by opening up the Federal and State court system to anti-pollution suits by ordinary citizens against other citizens or government agencies, and by granting every citizen the right to challenge administrative decision - making where it is lax or in the implementation of environmental policy generally.

We need all the support we can muster and all the interest we can generate to enact this important measure. I hope you will help.

With all best regards, I am

Sincerely,
George McGovern

STUDENT HONORED

William C. Hutton, junior chemistry major, gave a paper Saturday April 18 at the Eastern Regional Meeting of the Tennessee Academy of Science, Collegiate Division, at Lincoln Memorial University. Bill's paper ("Lactam Synthesis Via Aminolysis of Diketoesters") was based on research done on his free time. Dr. Young emphasized that this work was not a part of any course requirements and was done simply out of interest in the topic. It is hoped that this will be the beginning of a trend of independent research which will bring more renown to Maryville College and individual members of the community.

TROPHIES AWARDED

The Maryville forensics troupe came home from the Dixie Speech and Debate Festival held in Georgia Southern College, Statesboro, Ga., weighted down with eight first place trophies and the festival sweepstake.

M.C. won the sweepstake over 22 other colleges and universities including Auburn, Memphis State, Stetson, Western Kentucky, University of South Alabama and Berry College. There were over 200 entrants in 14 different categories.

First place winners were:

Oral Interpretation of Poetry: Paul Hindman reading Conrad Aiken's "The Room" and "The Road."

Humorous Speaking: Patty Coleman giving an after-dinner speech on the woman's liberation movement, "You've Come a Long Way, Baby."

Reader's Theatre: Mark Mertz, King Bennett, Diane Wood and Sue Drees in a production of "Children, Dragons and Other Beasts."

Puppet Construction: This was a puppetry team award for the most ingenuity and best quality in overall construction of puppets for all events.

Second place honors went to Mark Mertz in the contemporary poetry section, Stuart Smith in oral interpretation of prose, Mike Montgomery in extemporaneous speaking, and Carol Fisher in mid-century poets.

Diane Wood and Mark Mertz won third place in duet acting doing a cutting from "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf."

Jan Welton was a finalist in persuasive speaking, Steve Horton in extemporaneous, Steve Horning in impromptu and Paul Hindman in prose interpretation.

Other Maryville College students who participated were: Bob Cox, Donald Hood, and Harry Robertshaw.

The Highland Echo joins the rest of Maryville in hearty congratulations and a warm thank you to all of the involved!

DR. PROFFITT ELECTED AS CHAIRMAN

At the Board of Directors meeting yesterday Dr. James N. Proffitt was elected to succeed Dr. Joe Gamble as chairman of the Board. Dr. Proffitt graduated, cum laude, from M.C. in 1938 and received his M.D. degree from Vanderbilt. He is a resident here in town and has been on the Board since 1965.

In other action, the board elected Dr. Herman E. Spivey as vice-chairman, and approved the restructuring of the organization of the board.

HIKERS HAVE HOLIDAY

Spring is now [illegible] and with spring come [illegible] thunder-[illegible] created interest [illegible] among various [illegible] kinds [illegible] might [illegible] annual spring bust walk, or wilderness hike. Upon our entrance into Cades Cove we were joined by a large group of adult nature enthusiasts wearing little orange name tags. We chuckled softly amongst ourselves as we noted one lady leaning on a cane, women carrying pocketbooks, and a gentleman sporting a nice-looking suit. They all piled into their cars and followed us to the mill, where we were joined by another bunch of hikers, these being young boys outfitted from head to toe by the U.S. Army. Their gear consisted of assorted knives and cigarettes which they needed frequently during the hike. I think someone said they were Boy Scouts. At last everyone got together for instructions from Dr. Shields, and no less than sixty-six energetic hikers began their journey into the wilderness.

We stopped again at the beginning of the trail (?) for some more words from Dr. Shields. He told us the general history of the area, what we could expect to see, and explained that many people, after making the hike expressed: "...if I had known what is was going to be like I wouldn't have done it, but I'm glad I did and I'd never do it again. Then we began the hike in full earnest, everyone trying to acquire a position at the very front of the line, so as not to miss anything Dr. Shields might say. I felt a little like one of a herd of stampeding cattle for the first stretch of the hike. After we crossed the first stream everyone but the scouts gave up the chase and enjoyed hiking at his own rate. The route of the hike led us straight through bushes, logs, rocks, and about twenty crossings of Mill Creek--a crossing averaging upper calf in depth. By lunch time we had reached our destination in the falls. The steepest part of the hike was immediately following lunch when we scaled two mud-sliced slopes in order to reach the top of the ridge and then start back down. Our descending trail was thickly carpeted with pine needles, and was fairly easy going.

By five o'clock we were all back on the little yellow bus with one painful eye injury in the crowd; a very wet, frustrated but otherwise uninjured member who fell into the creek twice; and one member richer by a case of beer promised him by a lady he had assisted throughout the day's labors. Aside from the unfortunate eye injury the hike was a success.

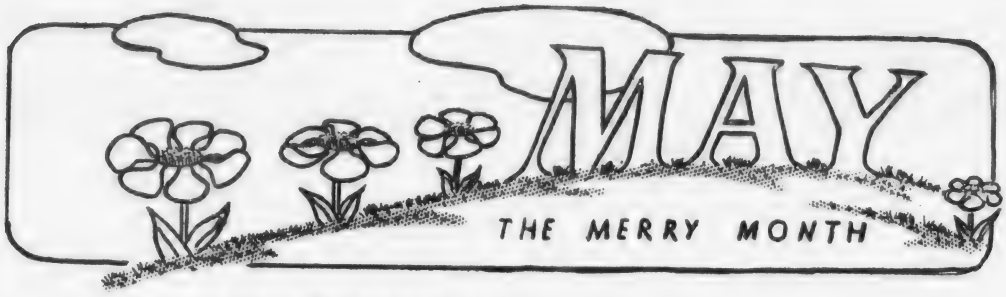
MARYVILLE'S ANSWER TO THE ROCKETTES



Once upon a time there were some pretty girls with beautiful legs, big smiles (to say the least), and unbelievable stamina. Having lots of spirit, and being the hard working kind, they decided to put their better parts together and form a team. They marched and fussed, fretted and mussed (Ha! You thought they cussed there for a minute, didn't you?), and in fact, did everything in their power to become really fantastic. Soon, their hard work paid off and they became known throughout the land.

Sorry, the girls I have just described are not called the "Maryville College Drill Team"; they are the famous "Rockettes." The truth of the whole idea, however, is that the M.C. Drill Team may have worked just as hard coming into being as did the "Rockettes." Three weeks of hard drilling is nothing to be scoffed at, especially when some of the girls had never marched an inch in their lives.

Try-outs for the drill team were held Monday night at 7 in the Alumni Gym. There, twenty girls waited for two hours under the strains of nervousness and heat until each girl had completed her part. The girls were judged by four instructors of similar experience in military and dance abilities: Dan B. Stallings, Band Director; Edith Largen, a P.E. instructor; and Lynn Gillespie and Debbie Branch, Highland Lassie Majorettes. Each girl could receive a possible 100 points from each judge with the main categories being: 1. Personal Appearance (including posture, confidence, smile, etc.) 2. Necessary Abilities (commands, teamwork, and personal ability) 3. Marching Routine; 4. Dance Routine.

The girls were notified Tuesday, April 28th, as to their assigned place on the team. The team consists of 16 regulars and 4 alternates. All of the girls will be able to march at some of the games next year.

Be on the lookout for some fine performances next year! Maryville is stepping up with the help of some pretty legs and flashy smiles. Congratulations to the girls and their audience! (And boys, wait until you see them "do their thing" to "Goldfinger"!)

EDITORIAL

Today in Moscow many thousands of Soviet soldiers are marching across Red Square as Russia celebrates its annual May Day. But in the United States a different kind of celebration is taking place. Today we are observing "Law Day, U.S.A." There will be over 100,000 peaceful ceremonies across the land. High School students are acting as jurors in mock trials, and many aliens are being sworn in as new citizens.

The purpose of Law Day is to foster respect for law, advance equality and justice, contrast freedom under law with tyranny, affirm loyalty to this State, and to make a plea to substitute rule of law for the rule of terror among nations. This is not just another promotion to make more business for the American Bar Association (even though they did initiate the program in 1958 and have supported it whole-heartedly each year). But it is a day when, in the words of JFK, all the citizens of this country must "rededicate themselves to the ideals of equality and justice with one another and to the same ideals in relations with other nations."

This is the second day in as many weeks when all of us can unite around a common cause. For we are all aware that the advance from savagery to civilization is attainable only when brutal force is displaced by reason, morality, and law. We remember all too well the lesson Lenin taught us, that anarchy leads to tyranny. We stand united against tyranny!

The theme of this year's observance is "Law, Bridge to Justice." This is the ABA's national and international goal. We join the ABA in the hope that the Mid-East, Southeast Asia, and other conflicts be settled, if at all possible, before a World Court where the only casualty would be wounded pride.

We ask that all of Maryville College will join the Highland Echo in supporting the President, the Joint Houses of Congress, and the State Legislatures across the country, by affirming our allegiance to the principles of Law Day, U.S.A.

Editorial Comment

Once again, as our year at Maryville draws to a halt, various decisions are being made for a hopefully progressive year to follow. One of these decisions, which is considered a basically important one, is the choosing of Senior Counselors, Resident Assistants, and Sophomore Aides. Only a certain number of students hold these positions, so that those who are chosen feel honored. There is rising controversy, however, as to whether or not these three positions are honorable, and that controversy arises because of the manner in which their occupants are chosen.

Choose your best friend. Would he make a good leader? Consider those few students on campus you consider to be leaders. Are they close friends with you and many other people? In other words, should a counselor be a leader or a true friend? There is always a possibility of both, but a possibility does not always emerge as a fact. Sometimes a girl with great intellectual abilities is too withdrawn to "let out" one's problems to, and a boy that the housemother recommends is not necessarily trusted by his fellow boarders.

Another problem that some students are presenting is that some students are chosen by "popular quad ascendance." That is to say, "Annabelle was a Sophomore Aide, is a Junior Counselor, and will probably be a Senior Counselor." There are two problems connected with this particular case. Number one, "The same people in the same quads tend to be partial to the people who are in their own quads. Often, they are not partial to these people because they are the best, but because they are people that they KNOW the best." Number two, "Does experience in this type of a position necessarily make one person better than a person who has had no experience as a counselor or R.A.?" Experience, most will admit, is a helpful teacher but is it always a necessary one?

In spite of the controversy taking place over these positions, there seems to be little or no solution. Electing Senior Counselors, Sophomore Aides, and Resident Assistants by popular vote would more than likely turn out as a popularity contest. Furthermore, everyone will surely agree that some exclusiveness is necessary in choosing the students that are to serve as both college assistants and friends to the freshmen and new students. But how much? What are your opinions on this and its solution, students?

LETTERS to the Editor

Dear Leditor,

Here's an unusual letter. No biting cuts. No complaints about UCM (which is open for anyone to get into, start groups, discuss). I've managed to live through three years in Dorm III, four years of eating in Pearson's, and even liked the "Error of Comedy" (Oh Dad, etc. and I'm sure Freud is chuckling merrily in his grave over it). So why am I writing an edder to the letitor?

Probably the worst complaint anybody has about this campus, in spite of the many others, is the constant chatter of people who know all the answer to everyone else's problems, everybody else's shortcomings and "lack of personality" or whatever. When people gripe about what others do I become tempted say Hell, that's life. But instead, I'd rather say appreciate yourself enough to quit talking and think about the other person long enough to deal effectively with the reality that we're all on this old tub of a world together. Especially in a world as tense as ours, you might say peole are like cards in a card house, and kicking any one around could just bust up the whole works.

So whether your thing is peace or victory, whether your thing is poverty or capitalism, community or individualism, if you shut some people out of your feelings, if you criticize without getting involved, and all of us do it I guess, then you—we—are part of the problem. And there is no need for anyone to be, because each person, you and I, have something real important to contribute, even if it's just a kind word for no reason.

My basic belief, is that even when people hide their potential with sharp words and indiscriminate chatter about others, hide it by laughing scornfully at those whom we don't know, hide it by being a big man and spitting tobacco or swinging "tough" words, even then there is something worthwhile, a human tragedy, an infinite imagination and store of potential.

All it takes is to appreciate it and give it a chance to grow in ourselves, without distorting it with conjured up rage and aloof words. When and if each one of us appreciates others in a really thoughtful way, then others will appreciate us as the infinitely important creatures we all are.

This is not to say smooth things over. There are some structures and individuals that are in gross need of change, even if feelings have to be hurt. But this still shouldn't prevent us from a simple appreciation of people who are basically just like us, and will be more open to us if we help them be sure of themselves.

A Friend

After reading a letter of protest to the editor in the April 24 edition of the Echo, I felt it necessary to write a short comment on returning to Maryville College this coming fall.

My main question is: Why should I spend $2200 and travel 1500 miles to school when I can go one mile up the street to a state college which costs $700 a year? I have been deliberating over the answer for some time but now that certain fees are already being taken for next year I felt that it was the time to decide.

I came to Maryville mainly because my sister graduated here and after having lived in the area for sixteen years before moving west I felt that this was the place to come for a good liberal education. My decision not to go to college at home as many of the graduates of my high school class did was based on the fact that the school was extremely mediocre. I have had all I want of mediocre places of learning. After having read a viewbook on that college I really did feel thankful for being here. Now I am not so sure. I have learned little but have received the grades. They have been very average and I certainly know I have not set the academic world on fire. The fault

GRIDESSES TO PLAY

Girls play football? Impossible! What?? You mean they are really going to do it? That's right, our genteel, feminine, or what ever, girls are going to be playing in the first annual FCA Powder Puff Football game. There are now sign-up sheets in the women's dorms. So, Girls, if you don't want to be left out of the game of the century make sure you sign your name by saturday afternoon.

Mike Parks and Tom Ickes (next year's captains) have agreed to be the two coaches and each is confident that his girls will be the winners. Chuckie Sedgwick is, as you've probably already guessed, head cheerleader and he has promised... well...come and see for yourself!

The Fellowship of Christian Athletes is sponsoring this game in order to raise scholarship money to send some guys to summer camp. The game will be next Friday, May 8 at 6:30. Be sure you're there!

is mine for not making the grades but what if I did make straight "A"s throughout this year? Would I be any better off or any wiser? Possibly all I would have would be something to please my parents and some facts which would make me "educated." Other than these points I'd have little. I want something which I haven't gotten in high school. I'm not sure really what it is I'm looking for but all I know is that it is not to be found here. My high school education continues here at college but where do I go to get something better? Schools all over the country as well as at home are the same way but are cheaper. They do not have the community life though that Maryville College has. I can say that through this type of college life here I have learned a lot about people and have made many friends, learning to understand their ways of thinking.

My dilemma surely exists for many here on campus. Is it worth it to give up the education received here out of the classrooms to save a chunk of money but only to retire to still another mediocre college without the vital part of learning known as "community life"? I shortly will have to decide whether to return this fall with all its costs and try to get more out of Maryville or to seclude myself away at home and make better grades because it is easier but not really learn a damn thing. The question really boils down to whether I make the grades or learn something. Why is it that people measure an educated man by the number of good grades and number of degrees he has? Hopefully the readers of this comment are not in the same predicament. If you are, I pray that you find the right answer. The rest of your life as a productive member of society depends on it.

George Mahon

Dear Editor,

My goodness gracious! Lee Ann has finally spoken up for us who still possess some form of Christian decency. Ever since Madalyn Murray O'Hair attempted to pollute all our minds with her Communist inspired lies, this campus and its community have been ever so slowly sliding into the doors of hell. Will it be God's mercy who saves us? Or will it be a repentance by all M.C. students. I personally am leaving this sinking ship and transferring to the University of California at Berkeley where Christianity permeates the atmosphere with its absolutes or maybe Columbia or N.Y.U. or even Old Miss where ethics are strict and an individual's mind closed to questioning the system as it exists.

IF YOU ASK ME . . . .

Generally, when asked whether or not Maryville College should reinstate physical education as a major, half of the students who were interviewed voiced opinions which were in favor of this major. However, for the remaining half, the subject seemed to trigger a response which revealed their dissatisfaction with the college administration. The comments of a few students are listed below.

"A lot of guys want to be physical education majors. Since we have that new P.E. building, a P.E. major would attract more students." Ron Salage—freshman Biology major

"I know some guys who want to take P.E. as a major. P.E. is not an easy course like a lot of people think." Chuck Sedgewick—sophomore biology major.

"I think that now, since we have adequate facilities (the new P.E. building), we should have a P.E. major. It would increase our enrollment." Jim Showalter—junior history major

"If we adapt a P.E. major, we should improve our physical education department." Liz Beard—junior Psychology major.

"We have a wonderful facility for P.E. majors but we need to strengthen the physical education department." Pam Hobbins—senior history major.

"I will withhold my comments concerning the P.E. department at this college until I have passed my required P.E. courses." freshman—language major.

"The P.E. department should improve next year since 'Monk' is taking courses now to obtain his masters so that he will be qualified to teach next year." junior—history major

"The P.E. major should be a part of a liberal arts college. Also I understood that the college must reinstate the P.E. major according to the agreement made in which the government would help subsidize the new P.E. facility." Carl Gehman—junior political science major

"I am for P.E. majors at this college if all of the emphasis in this program is not just concentrated on football or basketball but is made to evenly encompass all fields of physical education, covering a broad field." Scott Thompson—sophomore Psychology major

"Since we have built a new P.E. building we should have a P.E. major. If Maryville College continues to cut majors, it isn't going to have a college left." Senior—sociology major

"If we could get some superior 'jocks' instead of the mediocre ones we've been getting, the alumni would contribute more money because in a lot of cases, athletes make a school. If we get a P.E. major, we might attract good athletes." sophomore—English major

"If we reinstate the P.E. major, why not reinstate the Home Economics major also?" Junior—philosophy major

In tradition with Highland Echo policy the candidates for editor of this publication put out a copy of the paper. This week's Echo is done by Bob Eickelberg.

IMPOSSIBLE THINGS

The Secret War of Harry Frigg was shown to a small, but delighted, audience in the M.C. theatre Friday night. For those who had been getting a little tired of the "heavy" diet in plays and movies shown at M.C., it was a welcome relief. Here at last was a movie in which the good guys wer good–but certainly not boring–and the bad guys were bad–delightfully so!

From the first outlandish escape escapade–that was some touchdown!–to the last madcap mascarade, the audience appropriately applauded and cheered for the good guys and all but hissed at the bad. A secret tunnel and a beautiful countess added to the suspense, and an incompetent Italian staff produced much hilarity. The Italian colonel, who after four weeks of faking proudly announced that his men now had bullets for thier guns, was aided by a black market merchant ("Want cornflakes? Ritz crackers? Gillette blades? Hersey bars?") and a linguist whose command of English was anything but accurate. ("Possibly!")

But the best thing about this movie was its complete departure from reality A student who has just survived comps or is struggling through independent studies or is battling to pass core courses does not always want a movie fraught with Social Comment and Symbolism. He wants something innocuous, something he can enjoy without thinking. Perhaps those who sponsor films on campus would consider interspersing their visions of gloom and depression with rays of lightness and hilarity. Possibly?!

GIRLS ON THE MOVE

Do you belong to that group of college students presently suffering from what is commonly called "spring fever"? If long walks in the woods have been prescribed for you and you are in the habit of wandering past the track after the evening meal, perhaps you have been noticing a number of girls jogging around the football field. By now you may be questioning the condition of your eyes or asking yourself what has come over Maryville's fairer sex.

Could the girls be getting in shape for the next Leap Year, or is it the image of the handsome prize that may be theirs on Sadie Hawkins Day that keeps the legs moving and the lungs pumping oxygen into their wheezing bodies? Of course they could be members of a local chapter of "Equal Opportunities for Woman" training to challenge our all-male track team for its position in the athletics program.

Although these could be secret goals the girls refuse to acknowledge, they are actually volunteers running to provide information for Linda Reigenkugel, a 1969 graduate of Maryville, who is working for her Masters degree at the University of Tennessee. Linda is trying to prove that a regular schedule of running helps to proportion body measurements.

Each girls must run one mile, five times a week for eight weeks. Measurements were taken at the beginning and will again be recorded at the conclusion of the experiment.

After four weeks, those which remain from almost 40 volunteers joyfully report a loss of weight and increased muscle tone. In most cases, the time required to perform the task has dropped from ten to twelve minutes to six to nine minutes.

Watch out men, the women may catch you yet.

CAR WASH

Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, National Professional Music Fraternity, will hold its annual spring cleaning car wash and wax. Wash with interior cleaning even with the inflationary spiral will still be one dollar. A fantastic simonized wax job professionally applied will be done for the low, low price of five dollars. HELPING HANDS

Do you ever think about people who just can't function in our society? Have you ever visited a mental hospital, say Eastern State, without feeling like you were an intruder in a different kind of world but also feeling like you were part of it? Every week girls from Chi Beta are welcomed there by the patients who share with all people the need for a good listener. The students are not expected to counsel them, only to be a friend who will respect them as people. Games are provided—ping pong and pool tables, and music for dancing. Regularly on Tuesdays, girls from the college are there to play checkers, cook, or just sit around and talk. The patients need someone there to interest them in an activity. Occasionally dances are held, and again the interested person can do much to make it into a more enjoyable activity. More people are needed to go. There are many patients there who would benefit from anyone taking a special interest in them.

Other Chi Beta activities include helping with the Girls' Club in Maryville and a Brownie Scout troop. Fifty to eighty girls come weekday afternoons to the Club and participate in such activities as ceramics, cooking, sewing, antiquing, and games. College girls are needed for organizing of games or just participating the activities. The Brownie troop also provides an opportunity for students to learn more about children. Help is needed by the leader in planning and carrying out the programs.

A recent activity undertaken by members is visiting a family on welfare. This involves going regularly each week to help the five children with their school work. The mother has deserted the family and the children are eager for the attention and love of the girls.

DID YOU KNOW. . .

Mendel Rivers said last week that it is time to study a possible reduction of the 310,000 U.S. troops in Europe?

That the House of Representatives passed a $3.6 billion bill for space work? This was over a quarter of a billion dollars above that requested by President Nixon.

That under the Nixon plan to end college deferments that all those presently holding a deferment will be allowed to retain it?

That since 1799, 12 federal officials have been impeached and only 4 have been convicted? Tennessee can claim William Blount and West H. Humphreys... however only the latter was convicted!

i am sick of being an American. The word itself sets my stomach in motion to the point where i cry for Alka-Seltzer. The word "American" has all the Evil connotations a word can possibly have. Now you Americans may ask why. Go ahead. Don't be afraid...

i am sick of this government trying to sell, literally sell, its freedom to People throughout the World. This system and you people have a tendency to believe that MONEY can buy anything; and therefore believe you can sell your freedom. But before you sell your product, you must know your product. Take a good look at the "freedom" you are trying to sell. Visit a neighborhood slum. There are enough of them around. Just visit one. Now try to imagine living there. Where is your freedom now? Read the papers. Look at the time and energy (not to mention the MONEY) spent building up the stockpiles for God only knows what. Try to change the government's defense spending. Where is your freedom now?

But...i am not going to give you the satisfaction you want. i am not going to leave your country. i am going to stay and change the system that smells so of sewage.

Now, a good word from the sponsors—Alka-Seltzer. Your "country" has a great potential. Not as a country, but as a People. If you are going to show the World the wonderfulness of Freedom, practice. WE, as a People, working Together can change the system NOW or face the consequences.

HERE IS YOUR CHANCE TO GET INVOLVED

Sun, salamanders, and singing are just part of the fun of a camping trip at Laurel Lake with kids from M.C. and the young folks at Blount County Children's Home a couple weeks ago.

There are meaningful things in life, like being a friend to a person growing up without the close ties of an individual family, giving an "unwanted child" a reason to look forward to tomorrow, all this and having fun, too. The individual students who share themselves at the Home may never realize the impression they make.

There are many needs in our community, physical and social, and many kids who will never have half the opportunity of those in the Home. But at the Home many needs can be directly responded to in ways that don't take any special awareness or talents, only human friendship.

There is one Black young man, apparently doing real well. But, Brothers and Sisters, how would you like to be the only black in a white Home in Blount County? If nothing else the whites really need education in Blount County, so that they won't grow up learning about "colored people" from jokes and superstition.

The kids are anxious to learn to play musical instruments. There are a lot on campus that can play a lot of things. Just learning a band instrument can give a person a place in high school society, on band trips, and lots of other opportunities. Music lessons have to be regular and continuous, but a little regular devotion can yield infinite rewards.

There are a lot of other needs in the community, but if you can't find them, if you want someplace to start something really meaningful, something you can look back on and say at least this little something really meant something to someone, and if you just like to have fun in life, then whoever you are, start a regular commitment with the Home, come out some of the three days a week we go out, or talk to Joan Brocket, Jean Watkins, Roy Miles, or Mike Bullard.

A bus leaves the chapel every Tuesday, and Friday at 4:00 for about an hour and a half, and every Thursday at 7:00 for about an hour and a half. Also there will probably be a party or two before the term is over, a swimming trip and picnic.

MR. CLEAN BECOMES MR. DIRTY WATERS:

Maine's junior Senator, Ed Muskie, long the friend of liberalism and the foe of all that was not A.D.A.—oriented in his party, has always been known around the Nation's Capital as Mr. Clean. Muskie has been the sponsor of much anti-water pollution legislation. An advocate of Federal standards and controls and an intense advocate of massive Federal spending for pollution control, the Senator's true colors have only now come to light. National Review reports in its March 10th edition, "It was not ever thus. Back in 1965 (when the crusade du jour was for civil rights or something like that), Senator Muskie brought pressure to bear on the Maine legislature to downgrade the Prestile River. Where formerly the river was classified suitable for swimming and fishing, after Muskie's efforts it was perfectly legal to pollute it. The downgrading was needed, Muskie said at the time, to attract a beet sugar refinery to depressed Aroostook County. The refinery was built (by a friend of Muskie's who was seen wining, dining, and limousining the Maine delegation at the 1968 Democratic convention) and sure enough, the Prestile turned to gunk. It got so bad, in fact, that farmers across the border in New Brunswick tried to dam it off."

"When the river was downgraded, Muskie assured the world that this was only temporary, that the refinery needed a little time to meet state pollution standards. It never did. It folded in short order; now the Prestile is being polluted by potato processing plants."

"Brief pause here, to fume over the manifest hypocrisy of Mr. Clean. That done, let us stop kidding ourselves. Can we really blame a politician for exploiting an issue that at the moment burns bright in the public bosom? Give the people what they want...Today they want clean air and water, they think; five years ago in Aroostook County they wanted industry and jobs. Aroostook County remains poor; the whole state of Maine is poor, and certainly the proposed oil refinery at Machiasport, latest target of all antipollutionists except Ed Muskie, would be a shot in the arm. The question nobody seems to want to face is that of costs. The antipollution crusade, if carried to extremes, will cost—directly, in taxpayers' dollars, and indirectly, in the thwarting of badly needed industrial development in poor areas and (perhaps) the slowing of economic growth in the nation as a whole. But economic growth and industrial development—technological civilization, in short—cost too. And they pollute. The only way out of the dilemma is a careful weighing of the costs, and the working out of reasonable compromises, one at a time—both impossible in the climate of hysteria that clouds the pollution question. The simple fact is, Mr. Clean cannot have it both ways, and neither can the rest of us."

So much for liberal sincerity, integrity, and honesty.

I BEG YOUR PARDON

Teachers, like students, have their reputations as well as different personalities. Below are some of the compliments or simply statements about Maryville's Faculty:

"I'm always kidding Esther Swenson because she is named after a fertility goddess. (Esther)."

"What do you mean Miller is hard as Hell? He's worse than that!"

"Oh, so that's 'Monk.' Then who's the cute one?"

"Well, Mr. Bonham just kind of leans over like this (he's so cute!), and tells me what I'm doing wrong, and do you know that he uses English Leather? Man, that was the first time I smelled something old smell good!"

"Are you kidding? German class meets every day and every period of the day?" "I'm serious! And I haven't been to class in four weeks."

"That can't be right! Cartlidge says that according to Plato, I'm a girl and not a boy because I exist as an idea of a concept rather than as a form. Shoot, thinking about the form I want isn't going to get me anywhere!"

"Listen, don't even worry about it! All freshmen are scared of Shields! When you get to be a sophomore it's twice as bad!"

"Man, did you see Kovarovic and Puroff today? I asked 'em were they dressed up in green to celebrate earth day, and Kovarovic said, 'Yea, The green shirt, coat, pants, and socks for youth, and my white tie is for purity.' Now I wonder what Mary, Queen of Scots would say to that?"

"Mr. Castle took one look at it and said, 'Yuk!'"

"Then Dr. Kratz said, 'Suddenly I noticed the whole class was laughing and as I followed their gaze I found that a part of the ceiling was about to fall on my head. I wonder why no one told me?'"

ACC DISCUSSES NATIONAL – INTERNATIONAL CRISES

The Maryville College All-College Council, in a specially called meeting on Wednesday, May 6, decided to call off classes on Friday, May 8, and to devote that day and the rest of the weekend to a discussion of the serious national and international events which have culminated in the past week of violence, at home and abroad. This was in response to student concern, expressed in a mass meeting Monday night, and a special prayer service at noon on Tuesday held in the main triangle in memory of the four students killed at Kent State University Monday, and victims of violence throughout the world. A student planning committee presented a proposal at the ACC meeting to cancel classes, substituting lectures and seminars on a wide variety of topics. Their proposal, modified by one presented by Brick Brahams, was accepted by concensus at the meeting.

The feeling of the students in presenting this proposal was that a crisis stage has been reached in this nation at which many threats present themselves to personal freedom, personal safety, and moral responsibility in government and between governments. The spark which ignited many of them was the recent killing of four innocent students by National Guardsmen on the campus of Kent State. The concept behind the special events is much broader than just that one incident. It is an attempt at getting people to confront the expanding violence in the world, and to re-evaluate his relationship, and the relationship of various institutions, to this new aspect of an old problem. With the extention of the war to Cambodia, the war in the Middle East, the questionable use of authority by the President in this situation, and the continued turmoil and polarization within the nation in response to this, the All College Council as a whole felt a grave necessity to emphasize individual concern without our community.

In the lectures and seminars, some of the topics to be discussed are: Perspectives on the War; The Psychology of Crowds; Should an Academic, Christian Institution take Positions on Political and Social Issues?; Civil Disobedience; and War as an Expression of Sociological and Biological Needs. In all cases, a a great attempt has been made to provide a balance of speakers, pro and con, or speakers with different emphasis within the topics. Students and faculty are taking part in all aspects of the programs.

On Sunday, all students are urged to attend the church of their choice, wearing white armbands as a silent symbol of their concern. They are also urged to invite others to attend, and to attend themselves, a short worship service to be held on Sunday, tentatively at 12:30. This service will have not only participants from the Chaplain's office, but will also include clergy from the surrounding churches.

Along with these plans, two other items were passed. First, a letter from the ACC to President Nixon, urging the latter to "...respond affirmatively to the invitation of President Hester of New York University and presidents of other academic institutions to meet with them in reference to the expansion of the war in Southeast Asia," was accepted. Secondly, the American flag on Anderson will be flown at half-mast for the remaining academic year as a symbol of the college's sorrow at the violence in the world today. It was hoped that, by these symbols and the participation in the special meetings of all elements in the community, a deeper coner and involvement by all in the problem of the world could be achieved.

BLACK STUDENTS RECRUIT BLACKS

This past year several students of Maryville College staged an ambassador type recruiting crusade to several area high schools, with the hope of recruiting more blacks. Schools visited were Alcoa, Knoxville Fulton and Austin-East high schools. At the present date there is no indication of how many black students who visited this school are seriously thinking upon attending this fall. But from these recruiting trips a vast amount of knowledge was accumulated through these efforts.

First and foremost is the fact that the name Maryville College, which is a predominantly white institution, doesn't turn blacks off. This gives weight to another fact that black students, like white, want to come to a good accredited college to get a well rounded education, and not to spread racist ideas. It was sort of hard at first convincing black students that they could pass the core courses. It was our job to explain that it was not always what a professor gave you to do, but largely how you took it, and then applied it accordingly to his or her own procedure. Of course there was the ever-present problem of a financial handicap, but this is a problem that shouldn't be too difficult to solve. The exclusion of one or two of our more expensive C.I.V.'s, or other form of entertainment, could help balance a student's tuition. I know this may sound selfish and absurd, but I believe true sacrifice goes beyond giving all you have got, to giving when you have not. This last statement means you must seek another resource not designated at first for this given project. Keep in mind the fact that our nation and our college institutions are similar in nature and behavior. If we continue to have either all black schools or all white schools, our nation will be segregated in the same manner. Today's black man is better able to distinguish for himself the difference between brain-education and brain washing. The first of which was denied to him for fear that it would reveal all the tricks and trades of white hypocrisy. The latter one was a carbon copy of a youth behind an iron curtain in a communist country, who receives all education in an already predescribed predescribed formula. The blacks are now well informed on all the injustices inflicted upon him by lack of a decent education. More education to more blacks means more understanding to both races not just one. Each black recruiting crusade is an attempt to close the seemingly evident gap of complete non-existence of the races. This country is vast, but not quite large enough to support two large races of people both with secretive ideas about its own destinies. To exist, either the two races merge as one or one must leave, (and that is why that "why don't you go back to Africa" *%†$&@ is older than the ignorant clown who started it long ago.) Anyway I believe that the majority of American blacks would rather walk through a lion's cage with Pork Chop underwear on than go back to Africa, barring that he has ever been there in the first place. I once heard a white college professor remark "Blacks can be better educated fighting over in Viet Nam because war educates the blacks." My answer to this is, if fighting and maybe dying is the only means for the preservation of knowledge and education for the blacks, then let the entire world look upon the blood-stained soil of Viet Nam and see how this mighty race in the name of education said "Right On Brother," for understanding through education is the greatest aspect of man.

BAND CONCERT

This Saturday night in the Chapel the Maryville College Concert Band will present its second formal concert of the year. The band, under the direction of Dan B. Stallings, will perform Festivo, by Nelhybel, Lincolnshire Posy, by Grainger, Marche Eccossaise, by Debussy, and Variations on a Korean Folk Song, by Chance. Two of the band's budding maestros, in the persons of Daniel Rhone and Harry Weisgerber, will make their debuts conducting (respectively) Sonatina for Band, by Giovannini, and Second Suite in F for Military Band, by Holst. The highlight of the evening will be the presentation of Dello Joio's Songs of Abelard, featuring soprano Sue Yehl. The concert begins at 8:15, admission is $1.00 for adults and $.50 for students.

YARDUMIAN REVIEWED

Last Saturday night, May 2, the Maryville College Chapel rang with great and beautiful music as a combined chorus of over a hundred voices, headed by two opera stars, with the Piedmont Chamber Orchestra, all under the direction of the orchestra's conductor, Igor Buketoff, presented an evening of Bach and Yardumian. The verdict of all who went: "Excellent!"

The orchestra started out with a Chorale-Prelude by Yardumian, done on the plainsong "Veni, Sancte Spiritus." Then soprano opera star Phyllis Curtin joined the orchestra in Bach's Cantata No. 51, "Jauchzet Gott in allen Landen." Following a short intermission, the main attraction of the evening, Richard Yardumian's mass, "Come, Creator Spirit," was presented. The chorus was drawn from the immediate college community, the community at large, and alumni. For the performance, it was divided into two sections, a main chorus, and a vox populi, roughly speaking, a responsive chorus. The latter, much smaller than the main chorus, sang by itself, acting as a counter to the main chorus. Lili Chookasian, contralto, was soloist with the chorus, and the Piedmont Chamber Orchestra rounded off the bill.

The sheer force of the combined chorus and orchestra was one of the main things which hit the listener. At times when the peak intensity was hit the listener had to sit back and wonder at the power of the music. At other times, the Mass slips into quiet passages of much beauty. Throughout all of it, the whole ensemble was held together and shaped very well by the conductor, Igor Buketoff. This also speaks well of the direction given the chorus in the separate rehearsals which it had until last week when all the chorus plus orchestra and soloists was brought together for the first time.

To my layman ears, it was fabulous, and I was much impressed. Both soloists shone. The orchestra was excellent, in all respects. And the many people making up the combined chorus should be commended on the end results obtained from their many hours of practice. Dr. Harry Harter should not be left out of the honors, for he was the man most responsible for getting the chorus together, and then whipping it into shape. And, probably most of all, Richard Yardumian should be honored for producing the excellent work he did. At the end of the performance, when he was introduced, he received a standing ovation, very justly.

The attendance was rather disheartening, with very few students in the moderate sized crowd. We hear much talk of boredom and nothing to do on campus, yet when something does come, people don't attend. I think this is partly due to a bias against non-rock music in the student culture. Most students have never been exposed to much "straight" music, so they assume it is no good. I am sure that the majority of students would have enjoyed this presentation if they had taken the time to attend.

There have been some rumblings on campus about the amount of money spent on this presentation, many people wondering if it could not have been spent more wisely. The Mass was not cheap, but it was a gift to the college from a friend of the college, so it actually didn't cost the college anything. But, if it may be pointed out, possibly the world needs more culture, more "non-necessary" things, for it could be that these things are the truest expression of the better qualities in man. Today, more than ever, we need to be reminded of those good qualities man does possess.

Jim Showalter

SISSI

On campus over the weekend, leading informal discussion, was Sissi Barbour, a student at New York Theological Seminary, who has worked nearly four years in South Africa as a missionary and social worker and has personally experienced the realities of the apartheid system.

Arising out of the discussions was an urgent need for campus education and action on the actualities of enforced apartheid.

The two realities she stressed were:

1. Most Americans have little knowledge of the cruel policies and unjust willful segregation and exploitation which are inherent in apartheid. In practice, apartheid is essentially another word for slavery. Large nonwhite majorities are deprived of political, economic, and social power by the small, controlling white minorities. Whites control the land, the money, and the elections.

2. The problem of apartheid is not localized in the Republic of South Africa. Blatant white domination and exploitation exists in South-west Africa, Botswana, Lesotho, and Swaziland, all economically dependent upon South Africa. It exists in the colonial provinces of Angola and Mozambique, which are still in possession of tiny Portugal. For years, extensive wars of liberation have been conducted in these two Protugese colonies by native guerillas. One speaks of "southern Africa" when he speaks not white exploitation.

To dispel our ignorance of the situation in southern Africa, helpful, informative material has been placed on reserve in the library. Check it out and find out for yourself how grave the problem is.

Finally, there was extensive discussion about the possibility of bringing a black South African to the Maryville College campus to study for a year. Any ideas on this subject should be duly forwarded to Stevan Horning.

SPORTS BANQUET

Monday night April 27, Maryville College held its all sports banquet. The event was emceed by former Scot Dr. Bob Proffitt. This past year 115 participated in varsity athletics at Maryville College, and these along with the cheerleaders, coaches and guests attended.

Honors were designated in 3 sports, football, basketball, and wrestling, while track, baseball and tennis are still in progress. Junior football co-captains are Tom Ickes and Mike Parks while the most valuable player for the 1969 football season was senior W. N. Osborne. Most improved was sophomore Johnny Weston.

In basketball the most improved and most valuable player awards were both shared by Dan McKinstry. Co-holder of the MVP award was senior Don Hickman, and Johnny Weston was the sharer for the most improved award. Warren Morgan will be captain for the '70-'71 season.

The new captain for the Scot wrestlers will be Ray Nye, who won an SEC championship his freshman year. He will be a senior next year. Recipient of the most valuable wrestler award goes to senior and twice captain Harry Burnette, while senior Bob Mitchell received the Most Improved honor.

DIRECTORS' DECISIONS

The Maryville College Board of Directors meeting on campus last week approved a tentative operating budget for 1970-71 of $2,290,000, established three new majors, and instituted a new degree.

Although the total figure of the operating budget is the same as last year, the instructional and salary sections have been increased. Of the $2,290,000 budget $1,000,000 is allocated for salaries.

The board approved a recommendation from the All College Council to establish new majors in Speech-Theater, Health and Physical Education, and an individualized major. The latter will permit a student whose needs are not met by one of the available departmental majors to develop a program in consultation with appropriate faculty members, which would accomplish the objectives he sets for himself.

In addition, the board paved the way for a program in business to be developed within the present economics major and permitted a revision in the foreign language major to allow a concentration in one language instead of the presently required two languages.

At the present time Maryville College offers only the B.A. degree, but the board instituted a new music degree, B.Mus., for students who plan to continue in this field professionally and require a greater concentration of applied music than is possible in the B.A. program.

In other action the board approved a special leave of absence for Dr. David P. Young, chairman of the chemistry department, so that he may take advantage of a National Science Foundation fellowship to study at Cornell University during the 1970-71 academic year; and granted Dr. Russell D. Parker, associate professor of history, sabbatical leave during the winter and spring terms.

The following faculty members received advancement in rank: Dr. Jerry Waters, associate professor of psychology and head of the department of psychology, to professor; Dr. Wallace Lewis, assistant professor of history and acting head of the department of history, to associate professor; Mrs. Edith Largen, assistant professor of physical education, to associate professor; Robert Bonham, instructor of music, to assistant professor, Dale Bunse, instructor in art, to assistant professor; and Lewis Lee Kull, instructor in music, to assistant professor.

DAUGHERTY PRESENTS

James Daugherty, baritone, will present his senior recital on Friday, May 8, 1970, 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center. Mr. Daugherty, a senior music major from Staunton, Va., is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Daugherty of Westover Drive.

The program will include "Mein Herz ist bereit," solo cantata for bass, by Buxtehude; Schubert's "Litanei"; and four pieces by Brahms: "Sonntag," "An einer Aeolsharfe," "Wiegenlied," a and "Ich Wandte mich."

Mr. Daugherty will sing Thomson's "Three Songs from William Blake" (The Divine Image, The Little Black Boy, And Did Those Feet); and Charles Ives' "Seven Songs."

Miss Judy Young will accompany Mr. Daugherty, and there will be an organ and string ensemble accompaniment for the Buxtehude cantata.

LETTERS

Dear Editor,

I am deeply disappointed that the students of this so-called liberal arts college did not take advantage of the opportunity that was given to them last weekend. I refer to the Mass by Richard Yardumian, which featured a star-studded cast, not to mention our own choir, and community chorus. Here was a chance to see and hear a concert of excellent musical quality. Yet the majority of the students chose to stay away.

True, there was money involved. But one dollar as compared to the regular prices of four and five dollars was very reasonable. I don't think, however, that the cost really had that much to do with it. For pitifully few students attend the artist series, or the music recitals, when there is no cost at all for students for either event.

Surely a college that has such a diversified student body has some students who could take the time and the interest to pursue and learn to appreciate good music. If not, then all the effort that has been made for their benefit has gone to waste.

Fran Murphy

Dear Editor:

There comes a time when we can no longer sit and let the world pass us by, to paraphrase a recent statement by a M.C. student. So we sit down and talk about the current situation in Southeast Asia and in our own country. I have serious doubts about whether such action is really "involving" us in this immediate crisis and feel that in such cases we can't really have our cake and eat it too. If you want to really do something about Vietnam now you ought to drop out of school and start acting. On the other hand, if you regard Vietnam, Czechoslovakia, the Middle East war and the like as symptoms of our condition rather than as isolated crises, then perhaps you ought to remain and grapple with the long-term roots of our total condition, be they physical sources like the population problem, or non-physical approaches to experiencing and valuing other people or finding joy in discovery and communication. As far as I'm concerned, this is what the academic life is all about.

I would like to leap from these generalities to a specific case in point of personal disappointment to me. We had an expert (not, ipso facto, an authority) on the biological effects of radiation talk to a scheduled Science Fundamentals class. Many people (have you listened to Grover Foley lately?) feel that if you are a living creature this may be the most serious environmental problem you will ever face, in peace or war. Here was a great chance to get some hard facts to ponder and respond to instead of hearing vague rumors, wild claims and nameless fears. Here also was a chance to gain some insight into the division and concern among scientists in interpreting such facts. Here was a chance, of all things, to grasp at the world passing by through going to class instead of cutting. Out of a total enrollment of 170, about 30 showed up to take advantage of the opportunity. My conclusion, made I hope with realism rather than cynicism, is that, like beauty, education and the understanding of our situation lie fundamentally in the eye or mind of the beholder and are not objects to be totally redefined and shaped by a particular change of external curricular or geographical conditions.

Think about it and let's talk.

Paul Ogren

Editor,

That the lead editorial of the May 1 issue of The Highland Echo was dedicated to Law Day is jarringly ironical.

At 9 p.m. on the evening before, The President of the United States, sworn to uphold the Constitution, announced the movement of American troops across the frontier of the neutral nation of Cambodia in flagrant disregard for international law and in utter contempt of the Congress of the United States. May 1 shall pass into history as the American Day of Lawless International Violence. So now consider: Has "brutal force" been "displaced by reason, morality, and law"?

Donald M. Stine

Dear Editor!

I would like to respond to the opinion that some of the students attending and soon departing from this campus have of Maryville College. This opinion is that Maryville College has problems such as stealing, lies, and pure dishonesty. This opinion is true to a certain extent. But, did anyone ever stop to think how bad Maryville College could be? Many university and college campuses in our nation are in a wavering state of unrest and violence. This problem has not occurred at Maryville and probably will not in the near future. These factors (stealing, lies, dishonesty) are much worse in the vast majority of institutions of higher learning in our country.

One should be concerned with such problems on his own campus, but if certain people do not see a wave of the UCM movement on our empuas, why don't they become a little involved and concerned and try to correct this situation rather than abandoning a sinking ship and going out with thier opinions and giving a bad recommendation of Maryville College to their friends. If Maryville is bad and immoral, it is because of each individual, even those who find these faults in our student body. If one believes in the UCM he should look at himself first, and then work to make what he thinks is a bad situation better. Anyone can "down-grade" Maryville College and leave to find only a worse situation elsewhere, but not everyone has the character to work and to take a look at himself and a few people around him and try to do something to make the situation a better and more pleasing one.

E. E. Hill

Dear Mr. Editor,

We are submitting this article as a reply (we call it a retaliation!) to a letter in last week's Echo about the Phys. Ed. major at M.C. and other assorted topics. We think that while dwelling upon the subject of our so-called "mediocre (and superior) jocks" at M.C. our nameless wonder has let his ignorance of sports show thru the yellow stripe down his back (next time sign your name!).

First of all, what do you consider a "superior jock"? Do you want a Mickey Mantle, an Elgin Baylor, a Herb Adderly, and a Jim Rynn. Unfortunately, we can't have athletes of their prowess so we must settle for such "mediocre jocks," as you call then, like All-American centerfielder Lynn Dildine, nationally recognized percentage scorer (check the charts!), Dapper Dan McKinstry, Little All-American defensive halfback, Don Hickman, and high Boston Marathon finisher Dave Wiley. And these are not the only standouts this college can claim. Bubba Macy, John Leibrock (state champion high jumper), John Klein, Warren Morgan, Joe White, Dwight Reagan, Sam Ferguson, Ray Nye (SFC wrestling champion), Harry Burnette, Tom Ickes, Mike Parks, Bill Postler, Tom Piper, Joe Kozel, Jim "Toe" Cannon, and Brad Beck are all known on our campus and on other campuses as very outstanding athletes. BUT WAIT!!!! All is not lost! Maybe some of the freshmen will be able to conform to your standards of a superior jock in about 3 years if they get plenty of practice, study their English, and eat their Wheaties!!! And then there is our one and only English major–a truly superior jock. Where is your (courage?)? Obviously, you aren't an athlete or else you wouldn't have made your statements. And it is also plain to see that you do not keep up on M.C. sports activities. So why not crawl out of your hole in the ground and open up your eyes to some of our athletes instead of cutting them down without even knowing what you're talking about.

Signed,

This letter to the editor is not going to be favorable to the college. I do realize that in spite of its shortcomings, the school does have a lot of fine points. Please bear in mind that I am not neglecting the good side of Maryville in this letter. I am not mentioning it this time. Where should I start? There are so few areas to criticize. Oh, now that someone just brought it up, the food in the dining hall could be considered a problem area. The other day I heard someone mention to Miss Ware that the meal he had just eaten was the worst meal that he had ever eaten anywhere. Miss Ware's reply was that she didn't like the person's beard or mustache, either. Whether this meant that the supper reminded her of the beard or vice versa, I do not know, but it does serve to show that a person with a beard should not argue with Miss Ware.

There are some of us on campus that do not wear beards, whose feelings, after juggling our food to our seats on a Sunday evening, are the same, if not expressed more strongly. However, unlike our bearded hero, we whisper these sentiments under our breath. Have you ever wondered what would happen if you went and asked Miss Ware for another hot dog roll? I have, and the reply made me feel like Oliver Twist asking for another bowl of porridge, or was that Goldilocks? After four years, I realize that Miss Ware is not the problem. She really is quite concerned about our food needs. I suppose it will take me another four years to figure out just who the culprit is, but when I do, that's another story. This leaves the question, "What can we do to improve the quality and variety of the food?" That's simple, the food will get better if you pay more money for food. In part, I am inclined to agree with this argument, but not completely. It appears that better arranged working would alleviate some of the problems. I have seen Army cooks on field ranges prepare better pork chops for twice as many people, with only two-thirds of the help. This would prove that it can be done, if the proper methods and procedures were used, regardless of the poor equipment and crowded working space.

I am inclined to think that I could write on a problem a week, like a regular column, you know the kind, like what's his face's Korner, but I don't have the twenty years to waste, and besides someone else would come along and write for the next fifty years on what is right with Maryville College. I wonder if we would write on the same things?

Dear Me, Dear You, Oh Dear, Dear Us;

We have been aware for years, now of our violence in Indochina, but now we grow increasingly aware of our violence here. The question implied by violence and non-violence is the essentila question of our existence. Violence negates life and non-violence seeks to affirm life, and a man must choose between life and death, between affirming or negating life.

Before making such a choice we must ask many related questions. What is our concept of Christianity? Does it allow killing in self defense or otherwise? Can a Christian feel threatened enough at any time to hate and kill in defense of anything? Does the Christian's world require defense, or has Christ removed the need for weapons? Can you love and kill in the same breath?

There have been no deaths at Maryville, no killin, yet, but we are not aware of whether we kill or not in any situation. Maryville College has not taken either a violent or a non-violent stand, but this is not our ultimate question, the question is whether you and I have made our ethical choice. We cannot rely on an institution which has no consistent ethics as an example for us to follow, for we know that the individuals which constitute this institution, as a whole, have not taken a significant stance. This means that we of Maryville College have totally ignored the question of violence and non-violence.

In a question of life and death does a Christian choose death? This is a Christian institution. Can Christians continue to support a philosophy of death, a policy killing, in order to maintain a government's inconsistent ethical policies, inconsistent Christian ethics, for we know that Christians have chosen life over death. It is not a-ethical, not a-Christian, but it is anti-ethical, anti-Christian, because it holds death over life.

It is not simply apathy, not just a non-ethical stance we take by killing. We maintain that we are agnostic in knowing no answer to the question of violence and non-violence. Still, we as citizens, allow our government to decide for us, and they kill, and we are no longer apathetic when we don't evaluate our government's actions, we have become the atheists of ethics. We are aware of the killing, and aware of non-violence, yet we believe that either violence or non-violence must be our ethical stance, not consciously, but because we have refused to take an ethical stance. What other ethical possibilities are there? Can you say you love while you kill, can you, then kill and love in the same breath? A man cannot be violent and non-violent at the same time, yet we are faced with the confrontation of non-violence by violence (and the reverse of this) today. Violence is clearly the ethics of our government, accounting for its method of confronting non-violent resistence to its violence-oriented authority.

Life demands an ethical stance. A man must choose between life and death, there are no other possibilities. So, our government for one reason or another, has chosen death, violence for its ethics. Yet we founded our ogvernment on the principle that it should represent us, and we are our ethical beliefs, as they constitute our existence. But, being in general the atheists of ethics, we have given the government our freedom and our need to choose the ethics by which to live. We have ceased to Be and let the government become our Being. It is not that the government represents us, but that we have allowed it the virtual freedom to determine the very nature of our Being. By externalizing our ethical choice to such a degree, we have lost the freedom and ability to determine the nature of our Being. We are no longer alive to ourselves, we are the Living Dead!

TWO VIEWS

Here are two different responses to this week's events received by the paper. The paper feels for that reason they deserve special note.

I am frightened. For me to make such a statement is very serious. The events of this past week have left me stunned and confused. Being basically a cautious person more adept at arm-chair philosophy than active revolution, the position in which I find myself at this moment is terrifying.

Certain basic beliefs I have always held have been so shaken as to crumble and I am left with the useless pieces. I had always considered "the military," i.e. the police, national guardsmen, and men in national service as protection as security, national service as protection, as security. They were there to aid me if I was in danger. Suddenly that feeling of security is gone, irrevocably and finally. I look with horror at the armed men patrolling the campus at Kent State that I see on the television. I cannot express coherently the fear I feel that every person involved, the students and guards alike, were caught up in a system which is no longer in our control.

Another belief which crumbled before my eyes this week was that I, miniscule as I am, could make a difference and could make a choice in the running of this country. It struck me with full force that this is not the case.

President Nixon was not elected by popular vote. For almost two years he has studiously ignored the visible evidence of discontent in the thousands and thousands of students who have protested the war. Surely these thousands of students are not all "campus bums"! I cannot conceive of the fact that the most demanding and influential position in the United States is held by a man who cannot or will not consider such a large segment of our population. Certainly there are factions as the Weatherman, whose tactics I abhor, but they are such a minute percentage of mostly middle-class intelligent American man and women.

Knowing that President Nixon's decision to invade Cambodia was obviously influenced solely by the military interests, because Congress found out the same time I did, Monday night on national television, leaves me stunned. This country cannot be a military dictatorship. Its economy cannot be based on war for its profit. I cannot sit back in silent disapproval or justify President Nixon's actions. Perhaps later, when I get back to "business as usual" will I rationalize and justify it. Right now, I am sick, way deep down.

GOOD SALARIES

Dear Editor,

Here we go again.

It is times like this we get emotional and upset and go into a frenzy of activity. I would suggest some of us slow down and reason a few things out.

First of all let's get the facts straight. When I arrived on campus Monday night I was told by a number of different people that anywhere from 3 to 7 students were killed by the National Guard, and that two Guardsmen were also shot by snipers. With these rumors in mind it was decided action must be taken. It would have been better to go easy until we knew what actually had happened.

My next question is Why were the students "in the streets"? What good is mob or large crowd action? Most students demand the rights and freedoms of our Constitution but they are not willing to accept that this same Constitution declares that the majority of people in this nation have the right to rule—EVEN IF THEY ARE WRONG! By virtue of the fact that they are the majority, they have the right to hang themselves if they want.

If the majority is with you, then I assure you the Congress and President will listen and act on your views if you let them know through letter, telegram, or telephone. If they don't then you must make sure they are not re-elected by casting your vote for those who feel the way you do. That is the way this government works. President Nixon has stated that if the people don't agree with him he is most willing to be a one-term President.

I think we must then consider the National Guard for a few moments. These men had been suffering abuse for about two weeks at the hands of the Kent State students. This was not a one-day affair. As later reports became available it appears that the Guard may not have been provoked by sniper fire but that missiles had been hurled at them on numerous occasions.

But let's suppose that the Guard was not provoked in any way. We then should consider how many of the Guard did fire on the crowd. 100? 50? 25? 10? 5? I think we all realize the answer lies in the smaller end of the list. Suppose those few men were not provoked but just panicked, got scared, over-reacted, became irrational and their action resulted in the death of four people—should be rush to condemnation? Should we condemn the whole Guard for the actions of these few? Can we condemn them for making mistakes that we all make all the time? Or don't we ever over-react, the time? Or don't we ever over-react, become irrational, or make such comments that hurt kids on campus so much that they might just as well be dead?

If we condemn these men for their panic that cost the life of about 1 person per firing Guardsman then we must also condemn Ted Kennedy who panicked and therefore cost the life of one young girl.

But should we condemn and judge or should we admit that we too make mistakes and be quick to forgive? Peace!

Sincerely,
Bob Eickelberg

ACC QUALIFICATIONS

Wisdom, understanding, knowledge, counsel, fortitude, and fear of forgetting a meeting are the ideal qualifications for being a member of the All College Council. Unfortunately, this member, i.e., myself, is rarely in control of any specific one to an efficient degree, and most of the time sadly deficient in all. The answer to "what is it like to be an All College Council member?" is a nebulous and subjective one. The only thing I feel qualified to do is give my personal observations from the experiences of this year. Questions are the first thing that come to mind.

The first time that I sat at that formidably large table I thought "Oh, my God, what am I doing here?" and "what makes you think you know enough to feel you can represent the students?" Slowly, things started falling into place. As far as representing the students, it would mean listening, questioning, listening again. That's the easy part. The hard part is coming up with a coherent, logical point of view, and then acting on it. The other thing that I learned very early was how dependent the Council was on the committees. Take Visitation for example.

It really hit home to me in October that what the committees do in terms of the amount of work, compiling information, etc., determines how the Council works. It's discouraging I know, and a great deal of red tape is seemingly involved. But when I realized that the lives of 700 people were involved, and future 700's (hopefully 1000's of people eventually), and that that sort of work is necessary. However, the discouragement was outweighed when the policy was adopted, smoothly and intelligently, because, as we say, "the committee did its work."

The Visitation policy was fairly easy to grasp because I was personally involved from the student point of view. It's when things like understanding the budget, and trying to apply my Webster's dictionary definition of "proliferation" to the number of courses offered being changed with the argument against that it is not keeping in step with the philosophy of the new curriculum (got that?) that if innate wisdom doesn't persist, fortitude will.

It's this fortitude that is the most important. Wanting to understand and make decisions I think will change things for the better require an open mind. And if I don't work at it, I won't have it.

The discouragement of apathy on the part of some people (for example, only one student member of four regularly attended Instructional Program meetings —one of our most important committees) is outweighed by the hard work of the Residence Hall committee and by other interested students.

Being the political creature that I am, I have to admit that it's been (one helluva) an experience for me. I guess I have to put out to take that kind of experience in.

SHAKESPEARE PLAYED

The Theatre Group is now in rehearsals for the production of William Gibson's "A Cry of Players" to be presented in the Theatre, May 15 and 16.

"A Cry of Players" is the story of young William Shakespeare, admittedly, largely conjecture since little is known about the Bard's early life. The play opens with Will and two companions barely escaping the clutches of a gamekeeper who has caught them poaching. Although Will is 22 years old, married and the father of three, he is a rakish, prankish, irresponsible boy. The management of the family falls upon his wife, Anne, eight years his senior, who is by turns a wife, lover, and mother to Will. She is a tough, sensible woman whom he loves but feels oppressed by her insistence that he take a job as schoolteacher. He fights her by committing adultery. This so spoils his reputation that he is unable to get the schoolteaching job which he didn't want in the first place.

But his rebellion is really not against Anne, but the drab life to which he was born—his family's skinning-and-tanning business and the petty viciousness of small town society. When a group of actors passed through town on their way to London, Will sensed this as the only chance he would ever have to escape his small, humdrum existence and realize his vision.

Tom Jones has announced the following leading roles: Ernest Foster will play the young Will; Patty Coleman, his wife, Anne. Mark Mertz portrays the role of Sir Thomas, the puritan town official.

In tradition with Highland Echo policy the candidates for editor of this publication put out a copy of the paper. This week's Echo is done by Jim Showalter.

Editorial

A quiet has settled over us, one of sorrow, one of realization, one of death. The past two weeks have been tragic ones, with much loss of life, and of hope, within our nation.

President Nixon moved us into Cambodia, an extension of a war which has already torn the nation asunder. He has re-extended the war to North VietNam from the air, another extension to the war. In the reaction which followed these events, Kent State University provided the tragic backdrop to a renewed surge of campus unrest. Now, a pall hangs over many mens' minds, for they are wondering, what has become of us?

A democracy is supposed to be a responsive form of government. It is designed to make each man a lever on the controls of government if he so desires. When the responsiveness has gone, so has the democracy. When a large segment of the country has been protesting a war for a decade, and the government extends that war, where is the responsiveness? When 500,000 people can go to Washington and march for peace, showing by their presence their concern, and the man who should be most concerned points proudly to 50,000 telegrams supporting him as his justification for ignoring the protesters, where is the responsiveness? And when non-violent demonstrators are shot into, killing and wounding many, by panicky troops called in by an equally panicky governor, has not responsiveness in a democratic form been swallowed up by "Law and Order"?

Many claim that violence is the only way to obtain reform in America. I am dead set against that course of action, because violence only breeds more violence. But I can well understand their frustration at a government which won't listen, a government which forces one to kill others to obtain "peace, freedom, and justice," a government which can only respond to dissent with repression, violence, and the call for "Law and Order."

I can only hope violence doesn't occur. I can only hope that a responsiveness, in our government, and to each other, can replace the polarization and angry words now occurring. For too long, we have destroyed men by violence. For once, let us try to destroy violence by men.

Comment

I took a test the other day that talked to me. No joke, it talked! And that test is not the only one that has led me into conversation during my stay at Maryville. You might say though that it was the detonator of the dynamite slowly stored within me by the other quizzes I've been taken by.

He (the test) looked innocent at first glance but as I proceeded to delve deeper into the depth of his content he began to cry. Now, being the person I am I hate to see anyone upset so I asked him why he was unhappy. At first he was indignant; said if I didn't know he sure wasn't going to tell me. When I protested with the statement that I'd never even seen him before he cried even louder. Well, I didn't want the whole class to find out what was going on so I apologized for saying the wrong thing and asked him if he would mind just telling me what was bugging him so I could go on about my business.

"I don't know who I am," he whined.

"Big deal," said I, "few of us ever really do." (That was the Philosophy major coming out in me.)

"But you see I want very much to be something different," he continued. "I want my short life here on earth to have meaning."

This was just too much. Who ever heard of a test wanting to have meaning? None of them had ever complained so desperately before. Hoping to find out what had motivated this desperate cry for life, I asked him what he thought he was now if he was so sure he wanted to be something different.

"Well as I see it there are three aspects to my present state of existence." (He'd become very formal and factual sounding. I sensed that he'd slipped back into his old identity momentarily to better describe his dilemma.)

"A—I represent my creator's refusal to recognize that each person that meets me is different. Anyone that has half a brain can guess what I am going to ask before I get the chance to ask it. Not only that, I never get to ask questions with any personality. Everyone has only one way to respond to me. The biggest problem that creates is that I have to die after meeting only a few people. Sometimes they tell their friends what I'm like and my creator believes that if too many people have met me I'm useless.

"I have a cousin who is virtually eternal. His entire content is 'How is what you have read relevant to you? Do you feel that the reading was a positive or negative experience for you? Why?' He gets to meet different people all the time. He really gets to know them and what they think. And he feels like he's being helpful and is loved. But I've already missed my chance now and can never be as happy as he is.

"B—I'm a product of tradition, the refusal to change, a closed mind to anything other than the 'standard' forms of education. There is nothing unique about me at all. In fact, I strongly suspect that I am a reincarnation of the 1953 test on my subject matter. And after two or three years of limbo parts of me will be brought back to life if you can call it that. Don't creators ever change? Isn't the world different than it was in 1953? Doesn't my subject matter need to be applied differently every year even if they won't let me be different things to different people?

"Don't get me wrong, I love life but this continual chaos of being subdivided and viciously attacked leaves me feeling very alienated. Doesn't what people want to learn vary from year to year enough to just let me die a final death if I can't have an eternal life?

"C—I strongly suspect that the motivation behind my creation is an egotistical one on the part of my creator. I think he feels powerful when he can make me so complex and precise that no one can respond to me with all the parts of the one way he thinks I should be answered. I even overheard him laughing when I was only half created. He was mumbling something like 'I'll teach those kids to complain about their courses. I'll give them something to really get upset about.' It's hard for a being to admit but I'm ashamed of my creator. I feel illegitimate.

"Only yesterday I was on the top of the pile and got a notebook slapped on me real quick like. Then I overheard him telling someone not to memorize facts before meeting me; just to understand the general concepts. Why I don't possess one question dealing with trends or basic themes! See for yourself—I'm nothing more than a list of words to be defined and essay questions about isolated lectures and reading assignments.

"I tried to push the notebook off and give whoever he was talking to a chance to see for himself what I was like. But my creator saw what was happening and leaned his 160-pound hand right on my mid-section.

"So you see I have every right to be unhappy. Just by looking at me for half a minute you should have been able to figure out what was wrong!" His face then took on a look of resigned self-pity.

I was ashamed to say the least. Finally I'd understood what all those other talking tests had tried so desperately to tell me. Then I knew what I had to do. Without even thinking what the consequences would be for me I turned him over and wrote:

1. How is what you have read relevant to you?
2. Do you feel the reading was a positive or negative experience for you? Why?

As I started to answer my own question the crying stopped and I'm sure I heard a final sigh of contentment before I began writing. According to his creator I failed my test. It was the least I could do.

THE ROLE OF A FACULTY MEMBER IN OUR PRESENT COLLEGE ADMINISTRATIVE STRUCTURE

(a strictly personal view)

A. Randolph Shields

A few statements of general premises:

At no time in the recent history of higher education have basic concepts been so openly questioned as at present. We simply have not been called upon to defend our activities by the clientele.

We must continually examine our philosophies, our techniques, our disciplines in light of relevance (l) to a society that is growing more complex daily; (2) to a society that will experience population stress greater than anything we can imagine; (3) to a culture that has leap-frogged generations ahead of basic concepts of our educational structure (technology is basically responsible for this.)

Our present students will be reaching the peak of social activity by the turn of the 2lst century - before that time they will be face to face with population problems that we can in no way anticipate.

What is the relevance of my discipline to these problems? - Do we really know the problems?

The classical liberal arts concept went by the wayside (except for a few "dregs") Is it now not time to seriously look at our present degree requirements in light of the foregoing ?

Competition for mere existance will force a stronger "relevance" demand on our education system in the next three decades - a "relevance" to "making-a-go-of-it."

The knowledge explosion of the last 25 years has negated the concept of a basic core of knowledge for every B.A. degree holder.

Of what relevance is

l) a smidgen of foreign language in a world community?

2) a notebook full of historical data?

3) a notebook full of scientific data?

4) a memorized list of works of various authors, poets, composers, artists?

Now, what are my opinions of my role as a faculty member in OUR set-up?

I think we have an excellent, if not the best, structure for coming up with some of the answer to the questions I have posed or indicated. To take advantage of this opportunity as a faculty member I

l) Must adapt to being faced with alert students on planning committees and (most of all) in the classroom;

2) Must become an active participant in realizing the goals of the college--this means a conscious effort to recognize myself as a member of the community, not just a hireling to perform a certain job;

3) Must be willing to participate in debate--not just administer authority;

4) Must make an effort to keep aware of what is going on: I can no longer remain secure in my narrow discipline and hope someone else will "keep the boad trimmed";

5) Must formulate ideas based upon experience (personal and wide reading);

6) Must be willing to "stick-my-neck-out" in the presence of student and peers (as I am doing here);

7) Must defend my personal concepts with "Chapter and Verse" but remain willing to change in face of convincing arguments;

8) Must stop being an "authority" and start being an "advisor". This is a learning era, not a teaching (or preaching) one;

9) Must recognize that I am but a fellow learner to my students, but with more experience;

10) Must keep abreast of what is taking place in all higher education (or in fact, in all education), and in my discipline (research as well as teaching);

ll) And, last but not least, I must listen to my students with compassion and an open mind.

I am convinced that true education for interhuman relationship does not come from books, seldom from the class room, but from day to day contacts with the problems of a community. And the earlier this process is allowed to function normally, the better educated the individual becomes. Ther person (student here) must not be handed answers, but must face the problems to react on his own experiences. Freedom to react in this manner is a right we must give the students if we expect them to become adults. We have the organization to permit this, I hope we can take advantage of it.

SKRINAR RETURNS

Geoffrey R. M. Skrinar, alumnus and candidate for the Episcopal priesthood, will present a Community Issues and Values program on Friday, May 22 at 9:20 a.m. in the chapel. His topic will be "Patterns of Religion in the 2lst Century."

Geoffrey graduated from Maryville in 1968 with a B.A. in Philosophy and Religion, and is now finishing his second year at General Theological Seminary in New York City. Last summer was spent working at Coventry Cathedral in England, and this summer Geoffrey will be involved in a rehabilitation program for drug addicts and alcoholics in Hartford, Conn. While he was a student at Maryville, Geoffrey initiated and participated in many experimental forms of worship, and since then has done more work in this area and the field of experiemntal art forms.

In viewing last Friday's activities, when we called off classes and went to special seminars, many of us were, I suppose, liberals, but of a quite conventional sort. We were self-consciously intellectual, trying to consider an American society that would stand up under the most rigid standards of both students and professors. We may have talked about revolution, but few of us actually believed in taking to barricading the streets. Still, we became aware that the direction of our society was basically wrong, and that minor adjustments in the system would effect little change. We are skeptical when we hear defenses of the Vietnam war, and the old worries of Communism. It seems that we are harkening in reverse to the Black Panther cheer of encouragement—"Right On!" when we continue living in a death society. The saying of the moment is that "Man has been reduced to a commodity." Can we afford to let this happen? I'm not attempting to be a Paul Revere, but I think we should have more awareness of what is happening around us. The fact that students slept in, or went to the mountains last Friday, rather than participating makes me wonder if being a commodity may not be the easiest route to take.

To The Editor:

I have heard of the activities on campus in reaction to President Nixon's order of the invasion of Cambodia and the terrible slaughter of four college people at Kent State. Of course I did expect that there would be some demonstration of anger and remorse on campus but what I hoped for was something tangable to stop the war.

We student have learned a lot in the past few years but the most important thing that we have to learn is that we can no longer depend on the good consciences of America and its fat and sassy middle class. People have educated or at least tried to educate the people of this country on the facts of the Indo-China war but obviously it has been of no avil. We now must work to force the end of the war and not waste our energy on cathartic experiences as demonstration and arm band wearing. Political revolution is out of the question...now. To ever believe in a revolution of the left is naive and foolish. The fact of the matter is that the only revolution possible in this country now is a revolution of the right. Just open your eyes to see that. So what we have to do is to keep good men in Congress and silently work on the tactics of our cultural revolution (See Marcuse An Essay on Liberation). In Tennessee, working to keep Gore a senator is imperative. We, as students, have to swallow our pride in the face of Gore's statement about student demonstrations and fight to get him re-elected. Let's face it...Gore holds a key position in the senate and wants to stop the killing. Who else in Tennessee is running for the senate that feels that way? The answer is clear..so Gore must win, especially now since we have lost Yarborough in Texas.

One comment on the Kent State killings. Nixon was correct in saying that we students learned a lesson from the actions of the National Guard. Now more people know of the overt brutality of our government and its police forces. We white middle class people were shocked and angered by what happened. I, however, was more shocked at the shock of so many. When this brutality finally hit us we have become enraged. Why have we not been equally enraged by the systematic killings of people in the black community. It has been happening for years and years.

Yes, we have much to learn and a great deal to do but we must do it all well because the problem we face in the country is a question of life or death.

Sincerely,
Brian H. Childs '69

My friend, you're acting more and more like a lemming that is getting ready to dash into the sea. You say you've lost confidence in the system, but I know why. It's all because you never really understood American History. You read the Constitution, but between Harriet Beecher Stowe and Boss Tweed you missed the point. The story of the United States is the story of a two hundred year struggle to make the Constitution apply to all. You remembered the sordid details about slavery and capitalism, but you forgot the Emancipation Proclamation and the Social Security Act.

Now, with Cambodia and Kent State, you feel a loss of confidence. In lieu of the facts you'll always believe the worst. I'm not surprised. Like the bull that charges the man only to hit the red cape, you think the Administration and the System are the same, and you despair of things ever changing. To compensate for the loss, you steep yourself in disgust for everything American. Patriotic expressions are labeled as "absurd" or "naive," You can't get through the day without damning yourself and the nation.

My point is this: You'll never get anywhere if you are forever stopping to kick yourself in the ass.

Tom Bennett

I would like to say something about "Ribs" cartoon last week. It is an obvious crack at middle class society of which I hope to be a member someday. I don't think anyone believes that middle and upper class America were not touched by the incident at Kent State so obviously John is lying in his art work. One of the dead girls is lying on the ground next to her school books. How Cute. If she were studying or attending classes she would not have gotten killed. The "child" next to her has his fingers formed in a peace" sign. Way to be peaceful! If he had seen his classmates throwing rocks at the guardsmen, he should have left because he was supporting violent protest which brings a violent reaction. I think "Ribs" gives the wrong impression of these "children" who knew what they were doing when they let their classmates get out of hand. As for the couple with the Chevy, don't lose faith in them, Ribs. We're slowly taking their place.

VESPERS

The vesper service on Sunday evening will be a special festival service involving many parts of the college community.

Dr. Campbell, the College Chaplain, will speak on love in what will be one of the last opportunities for the community to hear him before he leaves Maryville. A celebration of the Lord's Supper will be conducted by Dr. Donald Stine, chairman of the department of Religion and Philosophy. The college concert choir, under the direction of Dr. Harry Harter, will sing the "Missa Luba," in the folk style of the Baluba of the Congo.

The occasion of this special service is the ancient feast of Pentecost, which is taking on new meaning in contemporary society. The Jewish festival of Pentecost commemorates the giving of the Law, and it was on this day that the early followers of Christ received the gift of the Holy Spirit. Since then it has been celebrated as a festival of the Holy Spirit with the emphasis of love being very strong.

The celebration will be in the college chapel at 7:00 p.m., Sunday.

PHYCHEDELIC SUB–CLUTURE COME ALIVE

At the first annual art exhibit judged this past Saturday, Harold Gillespie was awarded the "Best of the Show" prize. The juror was Fred Moffatt, assistant professor of art history at the University of Tennessee.

John Ribble was named for second prize and third prize went to Dave Stiffler. Debby Forgey was recommended for an Honorable Mention.

The exhibit can be viewed in the Fine Arts Center Colonade through Saturday, May 30th.

OH DAD POOR DAD–ONCE AGAIN ONCE UPON A GREENER HILL TOP

The theatre will present Paul Crabtree's play "Once Upon A Greener Hill" in the Theatre Friday and Saturday, May 29 and 30 at 8:15 p.m. This will be the final production of the play, which was written as part of the College's Sesquicentennial year celebration. For those who haven't yet seen this "folk-musical" on the history of Maryville College, this will be the last opportunity as the College finishes out its 150th year.

Led by an old caretaker (played by Bill Beasley) through the halls of time by the magic of the theatre, Charlie and Elizabeth Digger (played by Harr Robertshaw and Carol Fisher) see the strong-willed people who made Maryville a reality.

Salty, determined Isaac Anderson (played by David Nighbert) opens the College to those who want to study and work hard, and the College stays open until Dr. Samuel Robinson (played by Stuart Smith) closes it during the Civil War.

Through many crises and successes, the College survives and flourishes, all this depicted in the play in fine style, with some excellent dancing, singing and Maryville philosophy rounding it out.

Tickets can be purchased in the theatre office. Make sure you get yours before the alumni buy them all.

FAY DAY ACTACTIVITIES

The University Christian Movement invites you to join in "Fay Day" activities this Sunday afternoon from 3:00 till approximately 5:00 p.m. in the College Woods Picnic Grounds. The afternoon has been planned as a surprise in honor of Dr. E. Fay Campbell. We are asking a $1.00 donation (or whatever amount you prefer) when you come so that a scholarship fund can be established, enabling an African student to study at Maryville College. The fund will be named in honor of Dr. Campbell as a small token of our appreciation to him. The afternoon will include entertainment and will conclude with a picnic supper.

Come and honor Dr. Campbell and ontribute to the Campbell Scholarship Fund.

MAXI –MUSIC FROM THE MINI–CHOIR

Eighteen members of the mini-choir to Europe will tour with Dr. and Mrs. Harry H. Harter from June 3 through June 24.

During the 21-day tour the mini-choir will give evening concerts in nine historic churches in Amsterdam, Frankfurt, Munich, Zurich, Paris, London, Edinburgh, and Glasgow. They will also provide the music for the morning worship services at Gnadenkirche (Grace Church) in Frankfurt and the International Protestant Church in Zurich. The choir will give an informal concert at Coventry Cathedral at Coventry, England.

EICHELBERG WINS

In the elections for editor of the Highland Echo, the editor for the 1970-71 academic year will be Bob Eickelberg.

EDITORIAL

In a world that is seemingly preoccupied with making machine-like people, Maryville College is advertised as a haven of humanity. For a school that prides itself in the amount of individual attention it showers on its students, it really astounds one to discover the runaround one receives in Anderson when making schedule changes. A problem arises; we talk with the Registrar, but she does not have the ultimate authority; she sends us to the Academic Dean. Our Academic Dean offers a prime example of frustration to students with schedule difficulties. Dean Daniels' standard reaction to a new situation, where dropping or adding a certain course is involved, is "But there is no precedent for this." All of us realize that M.C. has standards to uphold, but these guidelines (the in word this year) have become rigid, and quite unyielding. Besides, we have come to M.C. because we wanted to be considered speical. If we wanted indifference, we would have gone to a large institution. No one could deny that at a larger school there would be more course offerings at a cheaper price. There comes a point when the dichotomy of what's been printed in the catalogue, or told by the recruiters, and what's really happening here on campus becomes frustratingly absurd. One precedent has been set, and that is a student body of "under 1000." There could easily be another precedent; where there is no academy, there will be no need for academic guidellines.

LETTERS

This letter appeared in yesterday's Maryville-Alcoa Times. It seems a harsh condemnation of M.C. The editor feels that there should be some sort of response to this commentary.

Protests flat desecration
May 7, 1970

Dear Editors:

It is hard to determine if thanks are in order — or a protest on the protestors.

If all red-blooded Americans react as we did to the picture published Thursday, May 7, in both the Journal and Times, showing student demonstrators ripping apart an American flag, there will be a patriotic rally to our country and its needs.

If this happens, than thanks are in order for the publication of this picture which accurately shows the DECADENCE of many students, who so glibly aid Hanoi and continue to prattle the COMMIE LINE, while their COUNTERPARTS, the finest young AMERICAN manhood dies on the battlefields of Vietnam and Cambodia.

Their own red blood makes arm bands for these heroic young men, far away from family and loved ones, while the motley, misguided students tear up a flag to make red arm bands — ugh.

Then maybe, those of us who have fought in previous wars to provide the freedoms, which students as protestors now choose to abuse, should rise again and this time defend America from its enemies within.

Certainly the action of the All College Council at Maryville College in lowering the UNITED STATES FLAG on Anderson Hall to half-mast, to fly this way they say, until the end of the term of college to denote "sorrow for the violence which exists in the world today" is a far, far cry from the love of country and patriotism demonstrated by Dr. Isaac Anderson, founder of the historic old school. Anderson served his country as an Army chaplain during the War of 1812.

Dr. Anderson was neither a coward nor yellow, he did not turn his back on his country when he was a young preacher, in the prime of life and was needed in the Army.

The college pleads to be accepted today as a part of our community — yet it falls prey to the well-known COMMIE TOOL, protest and tear up from within — how can this be either condoned or accepted?

Very truly yours,
Lake V. Smith and 53 other citizens

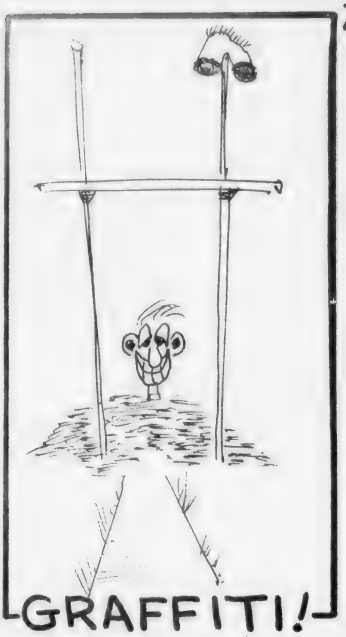
Dear Editor,

I would like to make a few observations on recent national and international events. As a result of Cambodia and the ensuing reactions across our country, groups have become more vocal, more violent, and increasingly polarized. There is also among many, a trend towards political involvement as opposed to symbolic, public demonstration. Although this type of involvement demands more work (and is of a less glamorous nature), it perhaps should have been the main thrust long ago.



Here are some of my thoughts: Conflict is inevitable, between individuals and corporate groups. There is no way you can convince me that man is not naturally prone to greed and selfishness. So many people are crying that the evil lies in the institutions. (At the memorial service for those killed at Jackson, someone read a passage as to how America had killed such and such number of people last week.) Irradicate the institutions–via revolution or whatever means are possible–amd we will sible–and we will finally know peace on earth, good will towards men. How naive! Do we not hear the echo of Rousseau and 19th century humanism in all this? Much technological and even moral progress was made on the crest of that wave of optimism. And no one really thought World War I would happen–at least to the ex tent that it did, not to mention World War II, not to mention the bomb--. Some people have perceived the futility and despair; Albert Camus, Jean-Paul Satre, and maybe even some of those in our own generation who have copt out on drugs or mystical withdrawal. In huamn history humanity will never approach perfection. Neither our generation nor any other can or will issue in an Age of Aquarius. Our institutions have made progress through evolution, politicing, and compromise. Anyone who has seen "Anne of a Thousand Days" can verify this.

For peace on earth, good will towards men, we must either give up in despair or look beyond man and his institutions. Christ was murdered by man and his institutions, yet He embodied perfect love and peace. How is this possible?

Sincerely,
Joan Gates

Dear Editor,

Enclosed you will find a sample of a letter being circulated in the general community by students here at the School of Law, University of California at Berkeley. The letter is an attempt to start a massive phone call/telegram, and letter response to the President's action in Southeast Asia. Our concern, I'm certain, is your concern and we would like to request that your campus begin a similar action in your community. Ten phone calls x ten letters x ten phone calls and on and on till the Senate and Congress dare stand and say " NO MORE WAR." Please help us, help our Country now before it is really too late.

PEACE,
Boalt Hall Students

SHOW CONGRESS OUR SUPPORT

You can effectively voice your outrage at President Nixon's abuse of presidential power by calling and urging 10 of your friends, either in the Bay Area or in other parts of the country, to write to:

1. Richard M. Nixon
   White House
   1600 Pennsylvania Ave., N.W.
   Washington, D.C.

2. Senator J. William Fulbright Room 1215
   New Senate Office Building
   Washington, D.C. 20002

3. Your own Senator or Congressman
   Senate (or House) Office Building
   Washington, D.C. 20002

President Nixon claims that mail and telephone response to his Cambodian invasion speech ran 6 to 1 in favor of his actions. Je, of course, did not reveal that the RepublicansNational Committee organized a campaign, at great expense, to flood the White House with support.

Congress is at a turning point. Strong public reaction now could play a crucial role in ending the war by persuading Congress to exercise its constitutional control over the war power (U.S. Const. Art. I, Sec. 8).

Act now. Telephone 10 of your friends whereever they are and urge them to:

1. Write letters to the above officials.
2. Contact their friends and ask them to write letters. In addition, you can send a Western Union telegram to any public official at a special rate if you state that it is public opinion telegram.

If you pass the word to your friends, and if they pass the word to others, we can flood Washington with the real will of the people, and we can have an impact on Congress. We can end the war if each person will do his part.

Dear Editor,

Here's an excerpt from a letter from VietNam for some of those around the campuses who 'think' they know what it's all about:

The paper didn't have much abou the riots tonight. That's funny in a way. You're reading about one war while I'm reading about the other one in the States. Wonder if they would like to trade places? I could probably get a couple thousand guys to return to the States and go to school and I could probably guarantee that there would never be a demonstration while they were there!

Name withheld

Dear Editor,

The following seemed to me quite applicable to many of us who are presently graduating:

O Lord, as we leave this University today and take fleeting glances backward, we are painfully aware of unopened books, of valuable classes that we cut, of opportunitiies we wasted, of times when our effort was poor. We confess our sins and ask in repentance for pardon. We are thankful for blessings which were unpleasant–a deservedly poor grade, a merited rejection, a rebuff. These taught us decency and discipline.

We thank Thee for the professor who really cared, for the teacher who opened new windows in our minds, the one who gave us wisdom as well as facts. We are grateful for the student who accepted us for what we were, who listened when we poured out our troubles, who encouraged us to believe in our possibilities. We thank Thee for fellow students who were righteous without being rude, who were able to see the difference between improving a university and destroying it.

As we go on from this place, we pray Thee to keep us from captivity to ideas that have lost their force, but help us to remember the lessons of history we have learned here so that we may not be doomed to repeat the mistakes of history. As we go out into the world, show us how to be responsbilty involved in its creative improvement. Help us to find the right mixture of a serious mind and a light heart. May each of us have scholar's approach and everyone remain teachable. We pray in the name of the great Teacher of Nazareth. Amen.

TRACK

The track team closed out its season with a 77-67 loss to Emory College of Atlanta. Senior distance runner Dave Wiley, who holds all the College distance records, won both the mile and two mile as he closed out a fine career. Other winners were Dick Maloney in the shot put, John Leibrock with firsts in the high and triple jump, a second in the 440, a 3rd in the discus and a 5l flat in the mile relay. Tom Piper ran a 5l-l in the 440 which was his best time of the season.

BASEBALL

With one game left in the Scots baseball schedule the record is 16-8. Recent action was 12-6 victory over Tusculum, a 14-l defeat to Carson-Newman, a split with Temple, losing 5-0 and then winning 9-8, a 7-0 victory over Cumberland and a 10-2 victory over Knoxville College.

Kent Smith got the win in the Tusculum game. The Scots scored 6 runs in the eighth to get the win. The big hit was a bases loaded triple by Joe Kozel. Kozel and McKinstry were 2-5 and Larry Stephens and Lynn Dildine each pounded out three hits.

Carson-Newman routed the Scots, scoring nine runs in the first two innings. Stover had two home runs and Bostic had one for the Eagles.

Temple's Rod Glasgow shut out the Scots the first game and drove in two run for the Crusades in the opener.

The Scots gained a split by edging Temple 9-8 in the nightcap. Larry Stephens and Mark Brookes had three hits for the Scots. One of Brookes was a home run which ignited a five run rally which brought the Scots the victory.

Rob Randall pitched and batted the Scots to a 7-0 victory over Cumberland. He scattered 6 hits and hit a home run to aid his own cause. Lynn Dildine had three hits and Larry Stephens and Bubba Macy had two each.

Tuesday the Scots beat Knoxville College 10-2. Lynn Dildine had 2 hits and 4 RBI's and Dan McKinstry had 2 hits and 2 RBI's and Junior Maietta added 2 RBI's. Rob Randall notched his seventh victory for the Scots against four losses.

TENNIS

The tennis team finished their season 7-9 after losing to Western Carolina 8-l last week. The lone victory was recorded by Ferguson-Abel, the number one doubles team.

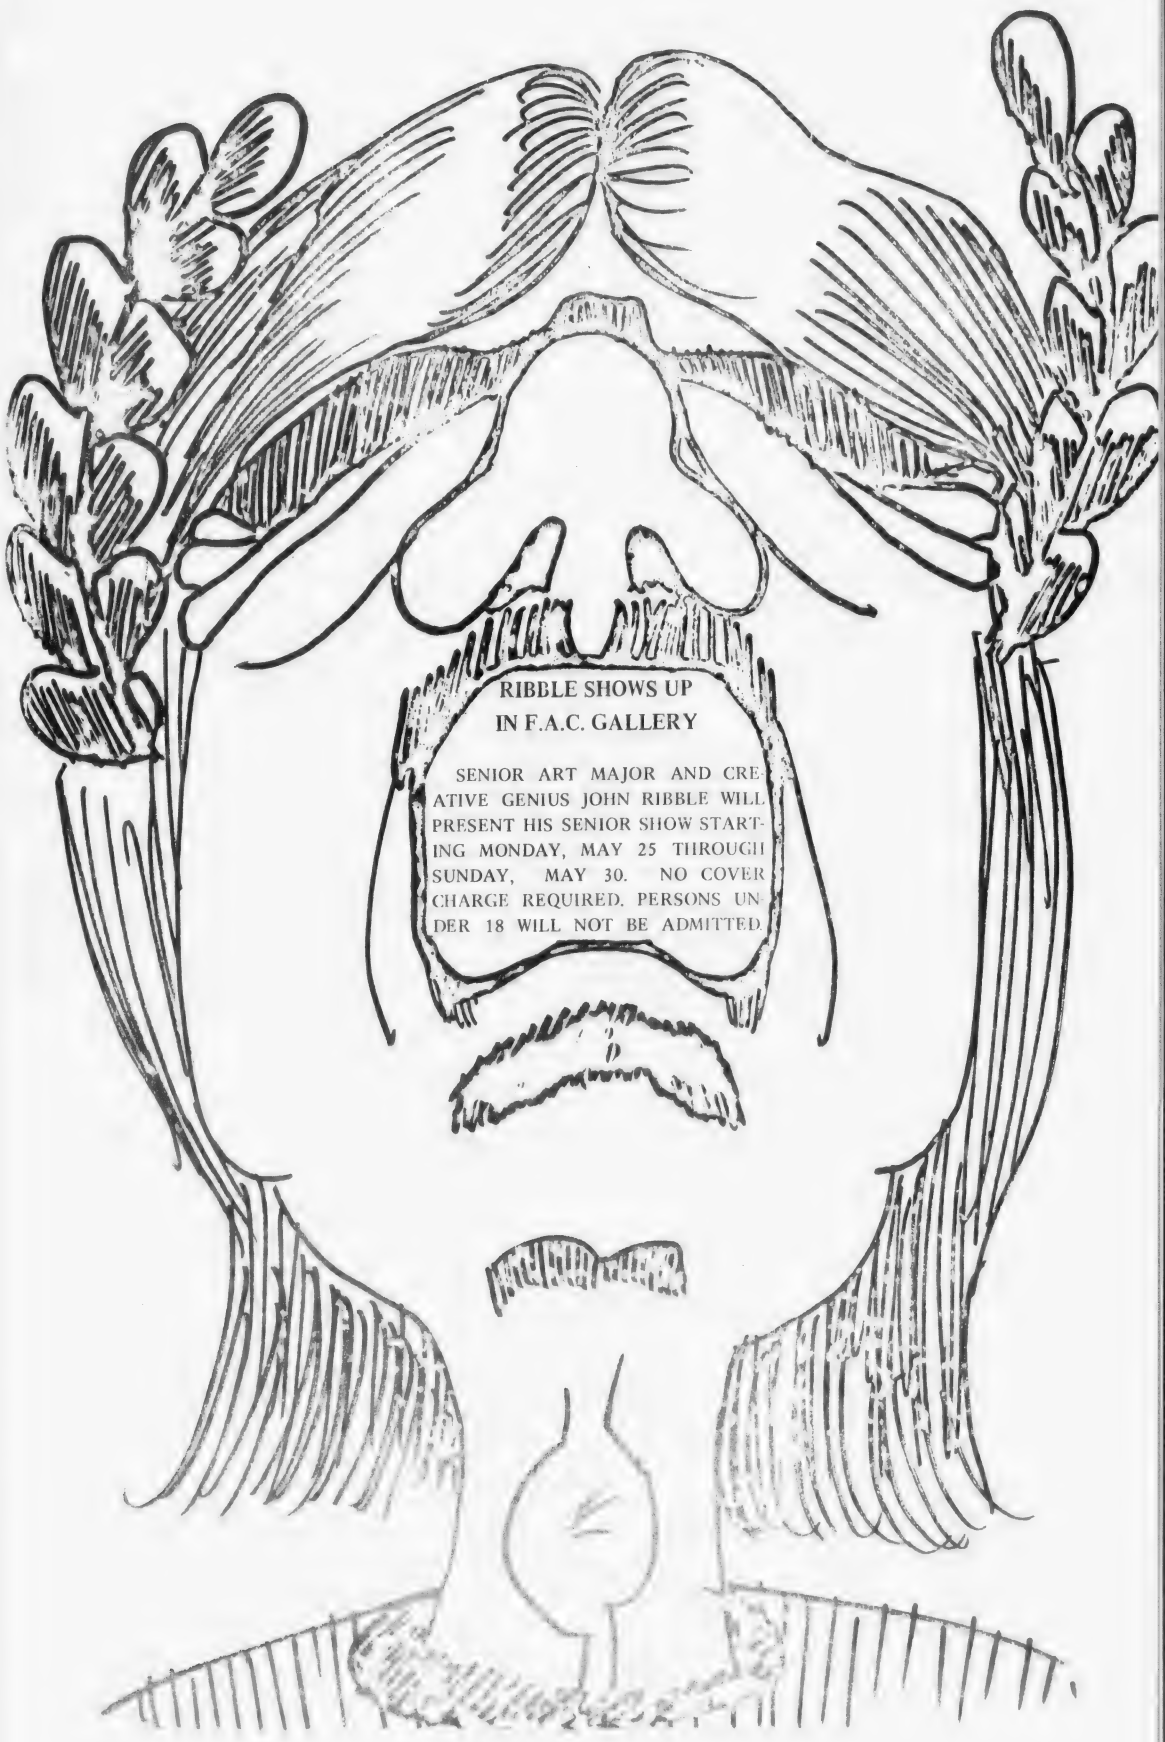
WHAT 'S HAPPENING ?

William Gibson's "A Cry of Players" is not a particularly enduring play. The Playhouse production of it on Saturday night, however, was quite good. Although some in the audience were grossed out at the particularly colorful descriptions in some instances, the majority responded enthusiastically to the actors. The one exception occurred when the arm with the ketchup bottle (Del Monte brand, I believe) appeared miraculously out of the tree. Unfortunately, it lost the ketchup race (perhaps water could have been added?), and poor Jenny had no "blood" on her leg. The audience was understandingly amused.

Luckily, the rest of the play was more successful. For the first time in several years, everyone in the play--even the extras–was very good. Special commendation, however, must go to Ernie Foster, Patti Coleman, Steve Horning, Marian Erdman, and Steve Smith for their remarkable performances.



In short, if you didn't go, you should have!

Dr. Commager, who holds the A.B., M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Chicago, will address the commencement convocation of 155 seniors on the subject "The Nature of the University." This event brings to a close a year-long Sesquicentennial Celebration begun last June with the general theme, "Man's Search for Patterns."

Dr. Commager carries a distinguished record of teaching and lecturing not only in American universities (Harvard, Columbia, Chicago, California) but also at the University of Santiago de Chile, Cambridge, Oxford, University of Copenhagen, University of Jerusalem, University of London, and Upsala University. A noted author, Dr. Commager has published more than 20 major works. Among them are Heritage of America; Majority Rule and Minority Rights, The American Mind; Freedom, Loyalty, Dissent; Europe and America since 1942, Freedom and Order; and Search for a Usable Past. He is also a recognized authority on the Civil War and has written extensively in that field.

Maryville College will confer the degree, doctor of humane letters, on Dr. Commager as a part of the 1970 Commencement.

ANOTHER VIEW OF THE WAR

Lloyd Kramer

Everybody has opinions about the war, and what it means for America. A lot of us have a vision or dream about building a better world, where we can all be more completely human. We are especially interested by what our woldiers in Vietnam think. We wonder how they respond to the war and what their hopes for the future might be. There are, of course, many different ideas among our men who are in Southeast Asia, but the following excerpts from two letters reveal what some of them are thinking:

Somewhere in the central highlands

"I'm still opposed to Basic American foreign policy...The communists are pretty cruel people--blowing people up in their sleep and stuff. But Americans over here haven't always been the paragon of virtue either.

If you place people in the 'jungle' they have to act like animals or they don't survive. That goes for us as well as the NVA and VC. We can afford to be nicer because of our weapons and movement capability. The enemy cannot afford the generosity of humanity if he wants to win...

The people of the worl are at war with themselves. People are starving, people are breathing polluted air and drinking polluted water. They are procreating themselves into extinction. Few people desire war but millions die.

What we need:

A world where there are not national, religious or ideological wars.

A world where people can be true individuals and not insignificant digits or a mechanistic bureaucracy.

A world with a stable population which is committed to maintaining ecological balance.

Solution: A strong but flexible world government which outlaws all wars, which guarantees each person the right of his individuality and whose only goal is to better mankind and his environment.

We have to be ambitious because we are aware! We have to change the world economically, socially and politically... We have to apply the sum total of man's knowledge in an effort to achieve a new world...We must not forget the past but we must work to separate ourselves soc-

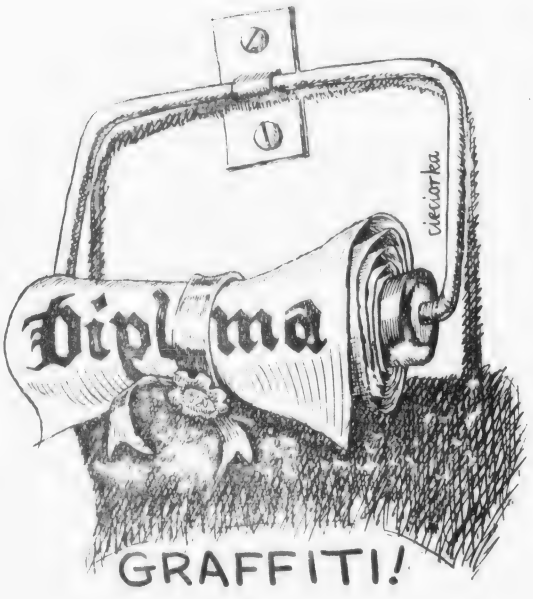
FASCISM



Last night 5 M.C. students went to hear Billy Graham. They found out there was going to be a demonstration and they decided to take part, holding signs and chanting as the President came in. They sat with the peace group, but when members of that group became disruptive, and militant, the 5 didn't feel it was effective. They yelled no obscenities. After Nixon spoke most of the peace group left, but the 5 remained to participate. When the service was over, and they were leaving, Rick Miser was hauled off by plainclothesmen for yelling "Bullshit" at Nixon. When Lloyd Kramer exclaimed there was some mistake, he was arrested, also. They were booked for Disrupting a Religious Service, and Public Obscenity, and put in $2,000 bail; trial set for June 5th. Presently they are attempting a meeting with Billy Graham in order to straighten things out.

Communication. What a difficult approach to life. How weary have our wanderings become at Maryville, trying to find one and then another also in search like us. We have tried in the chapel, and on the football field—but we have not been satisfied with the results. Our methods of communication must be wrong. We still are divided. People at M.C. are departmentalized—put into little boxes—and kept in an almost certain niche for the four years they remain here. Every so often someone raises the fact that we have secret societies on campus and that they are called DUDS and SPADES and DUKES and LADYBUGS and what the hell. It's time that we realize that it's their trip, the fact that almost anyone who runs for any prominent office will be silently questioned/knifed in the back is one of optional hazards. What about our football team which, itself, is divided along lines of group loyalties- will these same guys work together in September, when they find it hard to communicate now? If you have ever tried explaining to an outsider what a DUD is you'll have a hard time. First of all the name is ironic, and then explaining the group's validity becomes almost absurd. Actually these secret organizations must have a certain value for so many have joined them. But I cannot help but think that the M.C. community would be a healthier place if people knew where each other stood. You cannot ask a Dud or a Spade if they are one because they cannot answer you. They are sworn to secrecy. Really now, if they are worthwhile organizations why be ashamed of it? But our class has really been factionalized by all these little societies and the mistrust they breed. Too many friendships have been destroyed or mutilated because of the lack of trust between people.

Education is moral training by example from human experience, so if our secret societies are an integral part of M.C., then people should be conscious of them. There has been some fear of these organizations taking over politically. This fear must not become an obsession; it could become the tool for a closer unity here at M.C. For those of us graduating, we will leave the pettiness of secrecy behind, and hopefully remember the really good things M.C. had to offer. Those of you who remain—don't wallow in Maryville's problems, try to remedy it.

LETTERS

Dear Editor:

As a self-proclaimed Saviour of Mankind, I feel that I must call attention to a shocking situation on our campus. In my never-ceasing vigil to protect the morality and purity of this student body, I have noted a deplorable lack of decency in regard to feet.

Yes, dear Editor, there are, on this very campus, at this very moment, students with (and I blush to tell it) EXPOSED FEET!!! Alas! It is true! Furthermore, it obviously all stems from a COMMIE PLOT!! Yes!!! For the man who invented the shoe with the heel cut out surely the precedent for exposing the feet has been proven a Communist! Why else would he undermine the morality of every young person in the United States today. He subversively introduced this product on the market and, growing bolder with his success, actually manufactured (gasp!) SANDALS!!!

But the real horror of this conspiracy lies in the fact that, through exposed feet, our students have become COMMIE TOOLS!! What is worse, some of the more radical group have actually (oh, I can scarcely bear to speak of it) exposed the soles (souls?) of their feet BARE FEET!!!

O, Editor! Where is this taking us? What future is there for Maryville College when our students go BAREFOOT??

Ah, but there is hope! All you students who truly love your country, wear high button shoes! Bring back the morality upon which Maryville College was founded and squash this commie conspiracy!! Where feet are truly covered, communism cannot exist!!!

Fanatically yours,
Janee Elmore

The analytic thought of day
Would separate our moment's parts,
And show in scientific way
Methodic madness of our hearts—

Employ the light of truth divine
To hide the night of reason's mind.

But (our) unreasonable whole
Was born of darker casual fact
And moves by mystery's deeper role
Than psychologic laws exact.

Then celebrate our destiny.
To know our moments let them be.

Commencement Address—1970

The following message was published by the Warner and Swasey Company of Cleveland, Ohio, all across the United States. We reprint it below in the hope that someone will listen.

Is it too much to hope some college president might address his graduating class this way next month:—

"As you Commence your new life I wish to remind you of some of the things you carry into it from your past here.

"First, you owe your parents (or, if you were on scholarship, you owe Society) on average about $15,000. As you begin earning I hope you will repay parents or society for the things they did without, to send you here.

"Second, you owe to your country the freedom which enabled you to come here and learn preparation for — I hope — a full, happy life. If you want your children to have that same privilege you must repay that debt — by military service, or a life of political service, or an earnest, honest citizenship devoted to preserving and improving this nation.

"Finally, you owe your years here to the profit system. People first built and now maintain this institution out of profits they have made in business or out of taxes they pay from business income.

"Most Commencement Addresses are all about the glories awaiting you. Whatever those glories are, you yourself will create them. And if you will repay those debts of yours I have listed, you will be building a character which will make your future very glorious indeed. That, I promise... Be on your way!"

WHEN THE DRAFT BOARD CALLS

James Stewart

The following transcript is of a real occurance which I experienced. I find that necessary to say because, reading it over and thinking back on it, it is incredulous. I was asked (ordered) to this meeting because the board had some questions to ask me, or so the secretary said. The information gained was in the files or in the law books. I may be very naive, but that is o.k., for it is the obligation of the bureaucrats who apply the law to know both the law and the case. In an administrative application, I am not to be a defense lawyer presenting a case in trial. Or so I thought. In my shoes, consider your own reaction.

Personal Appearance at Board 39 April 14, 1970 – Recorded April 15.

Draft Board Chairman: Sit down, Mr. Stewart. These are the members of your draft board, and I am the chairman of it. We're here to consider your request for Conscientious Objector status. I will turn you over to the Reverend Canon to handle the questioning.

James Stewart: Thank you. Good evening.

DBMember: I'm confused by all this. (thumbing through his files) You've had 5 years of college.

J.S.: No- Four and one-half, when I finish this year.

D.B.M.: You've had five years of II-S deferment.

J.S.: No- 4 years.

D.B.M.: Wait - You've been to about three colleges - Wesleyan, a school out West somewhere for a year, and...

J.S.: No. Only 2 colleges. Wesleyan and Maryville. Three and one-half years at Wesleyan, one year at Maryville, and I worked for half a year.

D.B.M.: There. Five years.

J.S.: Five years of what?

D.B.M.: Five year of II-S.

J.S.: Oh no. Four years of II-S deferment - Four and one-half years of school. Five years since I began college. I'm not deferred now. I've been I-A since July.

D.B.M.: WHAT! What status are you? Where do you find it (thumbing through the file).

Secretary of Board: Look on the front.

D.B.M.: I-A July, I-A August, I-A October.

D.B.M.: If you've been I-A, how come you weren't picked up?

Secretary: He appealed, and then he couldn't come for the appearance.

J.S.: I did come for an appearance in October.

D.B.M.: What are you going to do when you get out of school?

J.S.: I'm planning on working this summer, because I need money, and then in the fall I expect to go to Farel House in Switzerland, a religious studies institute that my father has suggested, and then when I return about December I thought I'd start my alternative service.

D.B.M.: Your waht?

J.S.: My alternative service. You know - like peace corps work, only in this country. I've wanted to do that.

Another D.B.M.: You can't just do what you want to, when you feel like it.

D.B.M.: If you're I-O, we put you in a hospital and you work there for two years. You don't get to choose.

J.S.: I understood differently. I thought that I-O's were drafted the same way I-A's were, so I figured it wouldn't be right away.

D.B.M.: Who's right?

Secretary: With the random selection system, I-O's are in the same pool that everyone else is, so he won't be drafted until his turn comes.

D.B.M.: What's your number?

Secretary: 312.

D.B.M.: What's the use? (He and two other members throw up their hands - an expression of disgust arose from the table).

D.B.M.: So you expect to go to Switzerland?

Perhaps we should be ashamed of ourselves when we despair. Here is a lonely voice speaking from the chaos of a bitter war and developing an answer, a hope and a vision for a disintegrating world. One has to admire such persistent idealism. Maybe we can join with him in the struggle to build a new world in the fertile soil of dying civilization.

J.S.: Yes sir.
D.B.M.: You were just over there, weren't you? And you spent a year out west, too?
J.S.: No sir. (startled)
D.B.M.: I don't know how you can expect to go overseas. We won't let you go.
J.S.: Sir, I've never been overseas, and as I said before I wasn't out west for a year.
D.B.M.: And you won't go.
D.B.M.: That was his brother, not him.
D.B.M.: Oh. Note: My brother was in Switzerland,and is still in Europe, but he wasn't out west for a year recently either).
D.B.M.: What do you expect to do when you get out of school?
J.S.: I've already said, I'm going to work this summer, and...
D.B.M.: No, I mean work, after all this.
J.S.: Oh. My major is political science, and I was thinking of some aspect of government work.
D.B.M.: Like the Diplomatic Service?
J.S.: Yes, that interests me, or domestically. I was an intern in Congressman Sandman's office for three weeks last year, and I was very much impressed with the...(my draft board is located in Sandman's Congressional District).
D.B.M.: Well, that's the last time he gets my vote. (interrupting explosively)
J.S.: Sir??
D.B.M.: You won't fight, yet you want to run the Government?
D.B.M.:
J.S.: Sir, I've tried to say there is much that can be done in the government...
D.B.M.: Do you know the most recent Bible translation says "you shall not commit murder"?
J.S.: Yes, sir, I know that the recent Jewish translations say that.
D.B.M.: Yes, and its the old King James Version that says "thou shalf not kill." (with glee)
J.S.: To murder is to kill with intent, and that is what an organization like the army...
D.B.M.: I know what you're going through, I was a C.O. in World War II, but when they bombed Pearl Harbor, I gave up my ministerial deferment and joined. I know your problem but I went to fight for my wife and kids, for their safety, and I'd fight any government for that. (pause-then his voice still climbing) I realize your problem, but we fought...
J.S.: I know Hitler was a bad man, but that is your world, and I have to live in the world that confronts me, and World War II is over. It's not what I face.
D.B.M.: Would you kill to prevent a murder? ...If you say a man about to kill someone, and you could, would you kill him?
J.S.: Perhaps - it would depend on the circumstance...
D.B.M.: Would you stand by and watch him get killed?
J.S.: Probably not, I'd probably interfere.
D.B.M.: And kill him? (shouting)
D.B.M.: Would you kill tp protect your Mother? ...If there was a threat to your mother, would you kill to protect her?
J.S. (after a pause): It would depend on the circumstance. If some one broke into the house and I was thre, I probably would. That's a rather ambiguous question.
Chairman D.B.: Well, Mr. Stewart, we're going to vote now. And we will decide whether you get your I-O or not. I don't mind telling you that I will vote against you, and for three reasons. First, you had chances to ask for a C.O. and you wanted till now, when your II-S is about to run out. Second, you were quite different from most who come in here, they are much more lengthy and specific on different points than you were, and you don't convince me by waiting till you've had five years of college. So if you will just step outside while we vote.
J.S.: Sir, I do have a letter of support from my father which I'd like to read and add to my file.
D.B.M.: Go ahead.
(here I read the letter, then left the room)
(called back)
Chairman: We've voted 6-0 no. You do not get your I-O and we do have your appeal on record so your file will be forwarded to the State Appeal Board.
(I left).

Veterans at Maryville College who are looking forward to receiving monthly G.I. checks this term were offered several suggestions by the Veterans Administration this week.

(1) Turn in your Certificate of Eligibility to the college registrar when you register--or as soon after as possible.

(2) See to it that this enrollment form is returned promptly to the VA by Miss Lightfoot, Registrar.

The law requires that the VA must be notified that the veteran has actually enrolled before processing his check, and, in practice, this means most Maryville veterans should receive their first check in October.

If the VA is not notified of the veteran's enrollment early enough, it will not be able to get out his first check until November.

If a veteran does not receive his check within a few weeks after the school registrar returns the enrollment certificate to VA, the veteran should notify his nearest VA office.

The VA also explained that the veteran must have returned his Certificate of Pursuit card for the last semester if previously enrolled under the G.I. Bill. This is normally done during the last month of the semester, but is often forgotten.

The VA also offered several other suggestions for Maryville veterans:

If you change your college or course of study, apply immediately to VA for a new Certificate of Eligibility.

If you change the address to which your checks are coming, notify the Post Office as well as VA.

FROSH REACTIONS

Depressing was the word used to describe Maryville College by one of our frosh. However, this description was later followed by a frank statement of "I really like it here." This seems to be the general opinion of all the freshmen who were asked to relay their first reactions to Maryville College. For some it was depressing at first but this is an expected initiation paid by anyone newly exposed to a different environment. "Great," is the one word summation of Kathy Colyer, a freshman from Florida. Amy Wood, another frosh who was somewhat acquainted with Maryville through members of her family who attended previously, remarked on the friendly, informal attitude which the professors maintain toward the students. She has noticed that the concept put forth in high school concerning the impersonal and formal relationships of teachers and students at college does not apply at Maryville College. Carol Johnson, a native of Tennessee, stated, "The atmosphere here is friendly." This same opinion is shared by Charlotte Bush who added that this friendly feeling shared here "Makes me feel at home." One girl claimed she liked the college but she was concerned about the lack of certain "basic courses" such as home economics.

Although the male members of this new class wished to remain anonymous, their comments coincided with those of the girls. A few of them were impressed by the size and structure of the new gymnasium but one mentioned, "I'd appreciate it more it I could see it from the inside." One young man stated his approval of the new student center and mentioned the fact that it reminded him, in portion, of the student union buildings which are popular in colleges all around the country. Even the kids who were not really excited about Maryville seemed to have some appreciation for it as shown by one comment - "Anything is better than home."

Not only were the freshmen impressed by the college but it seems that the upperclassmen are equally impressed by the new students. For instance, in the field of athletics alone, the freshmen have been said to look very promising. One upperclassman stated, "These guys are anything but mediocre jocks." It is reassuring to know that the freshmen have found that contrary to the conclusion drawn by Ernest Thayer, author of "Casey at Bat," -- There is Joy in Mudville.

Peace. What a frustrating word. We hear it on the lips of thousands of people all across the world. Peace. But at the same time the world situation makes a mockery of the term.

We look at Viet Nam, Cambodia, and Laos and it takes no expert to realize that there is no peace in South East Asis. We look at the hatred between the Arabs and the Jews, we read about alleged breaking of truces, and the hijacking of planes. Yes, when the Arab commandos destroy 28 million dollars worth of aircraft, we know there is no peace in the Middle East.

Here in America and around the world thousands of people are starving to death, and there is no peace for them. Earthquakes play havoc with Peru and the people look anxiously for the day when peace returns to their land.

Right on our front doorstep the police are being attacked and killed like never before. University laboratories are being bombed and Kent State students have been killed. And how can anyone convince the lonely freshmen on campus that peace is anything real and tangible? How can we look at the hate, dissention, envy, and jealousy that often divides our campus, and still really relieve in peace?

Patrick Henry's famous words "Gentlemen may cry 'Peace! Peace! but there is no peace..." gain new and larger meaning as we go into the seventies. But what is the problem? Why is there no general peace? The answer is simple. Man. The above paragraphs have really only dealt with the outward symptoms, not the cause of our lack of peace. As long as each and every one of us continues in our natural, self-centered, greedy and egotistical life there will be no hope for peace anywhere, anytime.

It is our hope that as we begin this new school year that there could be some peace on the Maryville College campus. However, this will take a change of heart, not a change of mind. In order to effect this change we must turn to the One who was crucified two thousand years ago and accept his teachings and his example. It is there that we will find the meaning of true peace.

The only way we can begin to have world wide peace is for each of us to accept the peace He offers and then work to spread it here on campus. Among other things this will demonstrate our sincerity and dedication. If you are not willing to try this...I guarantee your peace efforts will fail.

Due to technical problems beyond our control the ECHO was forced to make this small change in our format. The staff appreciates your patience.

The Echo is now beginning a new year. We on the staff recognize one overriding fact: the Echo will not be read if it does not have anything to say. It will be read if it does have something to say. It is all as simple as that.

But is it that simple? It is simple to state the matter, but it is very difficult to produce a readable newspaper regularly. We are expecting all members of the community to help make the Echo the great newspaper we know it can be.

A newspaper's responsibility is to the community it serves--to its readers. It is just as important, however, that the community actively support the newspaper. The two must work together for the benefit of both.

Few of us can express ourselves in a brilliant manner, but each of us is an individual and has his own distinctive way of expressing what he thinks or feels. Each person's method of expression is valuable.

This year the Echo will experiment with the idea of having regular literary contributions from the community as a whole. This will be an opportunity for anyone to submit almost anything of possible literary value. Poetry, short sketches of character or situation, and essays are only several possibilities. You can probably think of many more. This feature in the Echo will not be a space-filler; it will represent a sincere attempt to present some of the genuine literary talent on campus.

This newspaper, as the primary channel of communication on campus, can be made into an articulate outlet for literary expression. It can become both a sounding-board and a clearing-house for ideas. We are counting on your help.

RIGHT ON!

United we stand, divided we sit. I would just like to take this little space to welcome my brothers and sisters, and my enemies and friends to Maryville College be you old or new. I hope that this institution will be as significant to your education as it has been to mine. Maryville College has given me three years to see with my own eyes and to hear with my own ears the type of people in my generation that are going to go out to be leaders, go out to bring up their children, and go out to be good followers. Maryville College has given me a lot of free time on my hands to think...to think. This is very important to a college student in a time that the "space age" is going by so fast that we don't take the time out to think. Maryville College gives a student a chance to express his views to the President personally; to the Dean personally; to the President, the Dean, and the faculty through town meetings; to MC's administration through and in the All-College Council; to his fellow students through discussions at "Forum" meetings; to guest speakers in CIV programs; to thousands of people through the "Focus" television series; and even to the Board of Directors (right on! Don and Penny). MC is a liberal arts institution for speech is an art in itself, and when a student has so many opportunities to express that freedom which is part of the constitution then the institution is liberal. Maryville College is a liberal arts institution. Less teaching (indoctrination) and more dialogue is moving into the class rooms, and the subject of "relevance" is slowly melting the wax in the ears of our instructors, and some have been and still are listening to the student's views.

MC has given me three very important opportunities that, from my observations are not offered in many other institutions: "time to think" and "time to ask questions" due to the new curriculum set-up, and "time to express". Some students join movements, organizations, and marches to express themselves; some take over the President's office, start fires, and encourage riots; and some students work in campaigns to support the candidate of their choice, and try to work within the system. Many students today are expressing themselves through various means, and what is important is that students think before choosing the method of his expression. A student must think, ask lots of questions, express himself, and then he is ready for an organization. The type of organization that a student joins expresses his thinking or non-thinking, and the organizations on this campus expresses the student's thinking (the social organizations, the newspaper, etc.). Even those students who follow the same pattern everyday, "breakfase, lunch, class dinner, room, bed, breakfast..." are in an

HELP WANTED

This summer I worked with children in inner-city St. Louis. Many of them come from family backgrounds where there is little stability and direction. Most of these children will fall into the pattern of life which surrounds them, unless some kind of outside influence is strong enough to broaden their horizons. Anyone interested in starting a "penpal" relationship with one of these children let me know or leave a note in Box 2201. This could be a very rewarding and refreshing experience for both parties involved!

TEACHERS' TEST

PRINCETON, N.J., Sept. 14. College seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of the four different test dates announced today by Educational Testing Service, a nonprofit, educational organization which prepares and administers this testing program.

New dates for the testing of prospective teachers are: Nov. 14, 1970, and Jan. 30, Apr. 3, and July 17, 1971. The tests will be given at nearly 500 locations throughout the United States, ETS said.

Results of the National Teacher Examinations are used by many large school districts as one of several factors in the selection of new teachers and by several states for certification or licensing of teachers. Some colleges also require all seniors preparing to teach to take the examinations. The school systems and state departments of education which use the examination results are listed in an NTE leaflet entitled "Score Users" which may be obtained by writing to ETS.

On each full day of testing, prospective teachers may take the Common Examinations which measure their professional preparation and general cultural background, and a Teaching Area Examination which measures their mastery of the subject they expect to teach.

Prospective teachers should contact the school systems in which they seek employment, or their colleges, for specific advice on which examinations to take and on which dates they should be taken.

The Bulletin of Information for Candidates contains a list of test centers, and information about the examinations, as well as a Registration Form. Copies may be obtained from college placement officers, school personnel departments, or directly from National Teacher Examinations, Box 911, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

If you have ever considered studying a little Greek, you may be disappointed to learn that no courses in Greek will be offered this year due to lack of demand. If you are really disappointed about this, however, you may be glad to hear that an informal group, meeting on a non-credit basis, could be organized this term. Drs. Stine and Cartlidge have expressed interest in directing such a group. If you have any interest, even casual, about reading and learning some Greek, contact either professor immediately.

FRESHMEN FROLIC

The realization bombarded the freshmen immediately upon their arrival; the academic year had definitely begun. The new students were labeled, taken on tours, dined, and became the captive audience for innumerable talks and lectures. By mid-Saturday morning they were even in the midst of their first battery of exams.

The freshmen weren't however, given time to despair. At three o'clock Saturday afternoon the upperclassmen and new students boarded busses for a drive through the mountains to the environmental center at Tremont for a picnic.

After a short, informative talk by Ranger Foster in which he discussed the facilities of the center including several well-marked trails (on which no one could be lost for more than 2½ weeks), a democratic vote by those present was taken to determine which way was north and which was west. The freshmen were then turned loose to entertain themselves for a couple of hours. There were trails to hike, a waterfall to see, streams to wade, volleyball to play and pure air to breathe.

At 5:30 hot, hungry students ate their meal on the lawn aided by plentiful insects coaxed from their hiding places by the aroma of chicken, baked beans, potato salad, rolls, and cupcakes. There was some speculation on the contents of the cold beverage, but thirsty judges finally decided that it, alas, probably contained nothing more than pineapple-grapefruit juice.

The one big flop of the day was the scheduled record hop which did not attract many participants. Whether the students were music haters or they were just tired and overfed was never decided. The real reason could have been that they were enjoying conversations with new acquaintances too much to bother.

After picking up the trash and fluffing up the grass to help protect the environment, the weary students returned to Maryville. A few insect bites, some wet or torn clothing and many newly-formed friendships were the souvenirs or the day.

JUST THINK...

Consider the recent statistics compiled by two Pittsburgh economists, Dr. Lester B. Lave and Eugene P. Seskin of the Carnegie-Mellon School of Industrial Administration. Their study indicated that if air pollution were cut by 50 percent in major cities,

- --a newborn baby would have an additional 3-5 years life expectancy.
- --deaths from lung cancer and in fact all lung disease would be cut by 25 percent.
- --death and disease from heart and blood vessel disorders might be cut by 10-15 percent.
- --all disease and death would be reduced by 4.5 percent yearly, and the annual saving to the nation would be at least $2 billion.

OCEAN DUMPING

The mid-August furor over dumping several hundred tons of nerve gas off the Florida coast overlooked the fact that the United States has been using the oceans for years as a trash can for noxious wastes.

This fact was highlighted later that same month when the Navy dumped several tons of surplus TNT off the Maryland coast. Originally, it was planned to drop the explosive off the coast of New Jersey at the spot where mustard gas had been dumped three years before. When that fact became public knowledge the dumping site was shifted. Good thing, too, since ships five miles away felt the explosion when the TNT hit bottom.

But surplus military weapons and explosives aren't the only things the U.S. has been pouring into the sea at the rate of 48 million tons per year. Included in that ghastly disposal are sulfuric acid, arsenic, napthenates, cyanides, mercury and other heavy metals, pesticides, refuse--from municipal sewage to plastics and cannery wastes; radioactive wastes, chemical warfare agents, construction and demolition debris and various rejected or contaminated products--from foodstuffs to appliances.

The ocean off the East Coast and the Gulf of Mexico are dotted with dumping sites where the throw-away society has cast poisons and problems in the belief that out of sight is truly out of mind.

This attitude underwent brief revision last winter when it was discovered that the ocean off New York harbor where the city had been dumping its sludge was dead. Dead. Not dying; dead. Scientists studying the content of bottom sediment in the area were horrified. A Bottom sample from one station included cellulose cigarette filter tips, band aids and aluminum foil. The same items have been found in the stomachs of fish. Oxygen in the water in the dumping area was found to be less than one part per million. A concentration of 2.5 ppm is usually considered essential for marine life. In fact, nothing live was found.

And even a clam with a snorkel would have to contend with excessive concentrations of lead (151 ppm), copper (60 ppm) and chromium (40 ppm), not to mention everyone's favorite pesticide DDT (150 ppm) These figures were recorded at Station 59 in the dumping area--in the open ocean 10 miles south of Rockaway Inlet, 9 miles due east of Sandy Hook.

What is most disturbing about the extent and variety of dumping is that so little is yet known about the effect of sludge, chemicals, poisons, and junk on the marine environment. There is some evidence that materials break down very slowly on the ocean bottom. There is considerable evidence that marine organisms can concentrate pesticides, poisons or radioactive wastes in their systems to a point that can kill a man if he eats them. But ignorance of effects and conditions is so great that caution particularly in light of such evidence as that found at Station 59, ought to be the rule at the moment.

GRIDDERS FACE TIGERS TOMORROW

The 1970 Maryville College football team has been steadily preparing for its first game against Hampden-Sydney, Saturday, Sept. 19. Head Coach Howard (Monk) Tomlinson and his assistants have been working feverishly to prepare the Scots for this season.

Eighty-one players reported Aug. 27 for pre-season practice and the squad has been reduced to less than 70. The first three days were light workouts in shorts, basically a conditioning period. Wed., Sept. 2, the team began full speed practice in pads. Coach Tomlinson reported that the upperclassmen returned in good shape ahead of last year at this time.

During pre-season several players were singled out by Coach Tomlinson as deserving notice for their play. Sophomores Mike Butler, Pompano Beach, Fla., and Leon Hart, Mansfield, Ohio, played well in the defensive secondary. Soph. Larry McDowell, West Palm Beach, Fla., and freshman Dave Clinton of Knoxville also showed progress for the defense. In the offensive line, junior Gary Moore and soph Dan Blevens, both of Maryville, have been playing steadily. Freshman Mike Brown of Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. is a good prospect for the offensive line. Progressing well are running backs Richie Snyder, junior from Nazareth, Pa., and Bill Corbett, sophomore of Pompano Beach, Fla.

The coaching staff conducted two scrimmages to determine starting positions for the opening game. The offensive unit seored two touchdowns in the first scrimmage, both one yard runs by freshman Ralph Hodges of Knoxville. Senior Rick White of Maryville and junior Joe Kozel of Uniondale, N. Y. each had four receptions to lead the team. Mike Green, junior of Ft. Pierce, Fla. and soph Joe Costner of Maryville shared the quarterbacking duty. The defense played well with Paul Lefkowitz, soph from Stanhope, N.J., and junior Mike Parks, Lawrenceville, Ga., making numerous tackles.

Intercepting passes were Mike Butler, junior Larry Stephens of Knoxville, soph Robert Calloway of Maryville, and freshman John Drewery of Knoxville.

The defense remained strong when the Scots participated in their second scrimmage. The secondary picked off six passes, returning two of them for touchdowns. The only score by the offense was a 12-yard pass from Mike Green to Rick White. Ralph Hodges ran excellently, while soph Randy Minor, Jacksonville, Fla., led the receivers with three catches. John Drewery led the secondary with two interceptions, returning one 95 yards for a touchdown. Leon Hart also scored on a 45-yard return to open the scoring. John Weston, junior of Maryville, Larry Julian, freshman of Knoxville, and freshman Brad Hague, Glens Falls, N.Y. each added one.

Coach Tomlinson has called 1970 the "year of the sophomore" at Maryville College. Thirteen sophomores are potential starters this fall for the Scots. The defense is solid with nine lettermen returning. The offensive line must be rebuilt and a quarterback developed in order to have a successful season. Coach Tomlinson's assistants are Lauren Kardatzke, backfield coach, Don Elia, assistant line coach, Bob Berrong, defensive line coach, R. Michael Dalton, end coach, and Dannie Webb, assistant backfield coach. Co-Captains for the 1970 Maryville College Scots are juniors Tom Ickes, Alliance, Ohio, and Mike Parks of Lawrenceville, Ga.

REV. HARRISON NAMED CHAPLAIN

by Carla Hulce

One of the newest faces on the Maryville College campus is that of the Rev. Richard Harrison, who has taken over the office of Chaplain (subject to Presbytery approval), a position vacated by Dr. E. Fay Campbell at the end of the 1969-1970 year. Rev. Harrison comes to the College from New Providence Presbyterian Church in Maryville, where he was Associate Pastor and Director of Christian Education.

Since his ordination into the ministry in 1952, the Chaplain has participated in a number of projects which dealt with community involvement, including the March on Montgomery from Selma, Alabama. Rev. Harrison feels that a more total involvement between the College and the community is the only way to close the communication gap between the two groups. One of his first and long range plans is to get the students involved with the surrounding community through the individual churches, while making sure that the students do not become concerned with only one church. Both the College and the community must stop thinking of the Church as a stereotype before a meaningful relationship can be achieved.

The Chaplain wishes the entire College to know that his office is always open for both personal counseling and for students who have ideas for worship services.

Rev. Harrison will be working with both the religious life committee and UCM. Since neither group has had an organizational meeting, no definite program plans have been made for the coming year. However, the Chaplain plans to get all the different groups on campus involved in the vesper services, including those dealing with music and drama. He feels that if more fun is put into worship, more students will become interested in participating in the services. The services should express the total community life, and not just the religious aspect. When asked about programs other than vespers, the Chaplain said that the chapel services held on Tuesday and Thursday during the break in the Little Chapel will begin in a week or two. Plans are also being made for a Bible study group on Tuesday and Thursday nights.

In summing up his long range plans for the College, Rev. Harrison replied, "I have basically a three-point program. It deals with concerning ourselves with the important issues of the day, reaching out to the community, and becoming more involved in worship."

We welcome Rev. Harrison to Maryville College and wish him much success with his plans, which will succeed only with student cooperation.

COFFEE HOUSE OPEN

A Coffee House for all Maryville College and commuting UT students will be held this Saturday night, 8:00-11:00 in the Chilhowee Club House on Elm Street.

Special feature of the evening will be discussion following the showing of a 27 minute color film, "SYZYGY" (pronounced "Sizz'ih'gee'). "Syzygy" produced in 1969 is a film about reconciliation. This film-within-a-film treats, in a highly symbolic way, three broad areas of conflict: Global conflict with nation rising against nation with their hatred and violence nutured by political, economic, and idealogical differences; national conflict with its destruction of cities as bitter prejudice and vast inequalities fan the flames of racial turmoil; and individual conflict as human relationships are strained to the breaking point when mistrust and suspicion create misunderstanding between people.

"SYZYGY" raises issues; it offers no solutions. The discussion group within the film is faced with the responsibility for reacting, each in his own way. There will be plenty of time after the film for discussion and reactions to these issues and to each other. Several local churches have worked together in opening this Coffee House.

ALL COLLEGE COUNCIL WORKSHOP

by Susan Hayba

On the Wednesday afternoon before school opened the members of the All-College Council were on campus to begin their annual workshop. By the close of the session at noon on Thursday the Council members had discussed a great many topics including the importance of community in a liberal education, efforts to vitalize the town hall meetings, evaluations of several committees, the role of the Chaplain, and the agenda for the year. An item of special interest to be aired at the next meeting will be Maryville's secret societies.

One result of the workshop was the abolishment of the unnecessary intermediary program councils which were merely duplicating committee work in reporting to the ACC. The committees will now be advised by the president, deans, and chaplain serving as coordinating officers. Renovations were also made in our judiciary system and in procedures in selecting committee members. A group was chosen to organize the program introducing students to our campus government. In order to increase attendance at ACC meetings, the time was changed to 2:30 p.m. on the designated Wednesdays in Anderson 304. The town hall meetings, however, will vary.

Those who participated in the workshop felt that it not only got the council off to a good start business-wise, but that it also established a rapport among the members which should be the basis of a sound working relationship.

Do You Smoke Grass?

Wondering about the other side of "turning on, tuning in and dropping out?" Hear what the world of drugs is like from someone who has been there and came back at CIV September 30 when the College presents Robert Moorman, former drug addict turned lecturer and singer.

Mr. Moorman began using drugs in 1961 as a college freshman, and became associated with Dr. Timothy Leary in 1962, remaining with him for almost two years. While with Dr. Leary, Mr. Moorman experimented extensively with marijuana, became addicted to morphine and heroin, and also tried such drugs as LSD, mescaline, amphetamines, and barbiturates.

With his arrest in Tampa, Florida, in 1966 for grand larceny and possession of narcotics, Mr. Moorman began a painful rehabilitation while spending fourteen months in the Florida State and County Prison System. After his release from prison, he joined the teaching staff of a karate academy, where he is a black belt instructor.

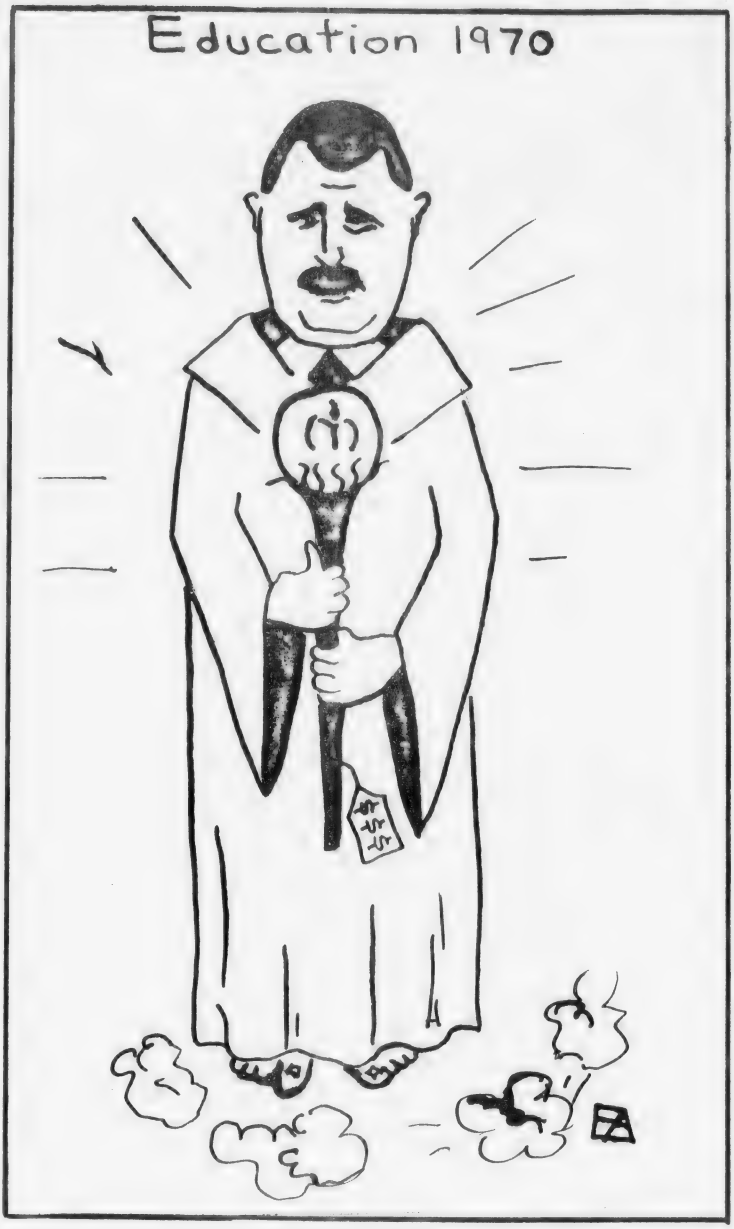
Mr. Moorman was married in 1969 and he and his wife Timmaris formed a singing group called "The Autobiography." They will present a free concert in the Chapel on Tuesday evening, September 29, at 8:15 p.m. Their style is contemporary rock influenced by folk, country, and rhythm and blues.

Come to CIV on Wednesday, September 30, as Robert Moorman speaks on "The Burning Issue," a general lecture telling the truth about drugs, and relates his personal experiences.

EDITORIAL

There is at present among some upperclassmen a fairly widespread feeling of disenchantment about the structure and purpose of the committees of the All-College Council. Most of these attitudes are rumbling below the surface and the ECHO feels obliged to bring them above ground.

If I have understood correctly, a lot of people are wondering about the usefulness of the present committees. One example that leaps into mind involves the former Student Center committee. This committee under the direction of Miss Lesko and Dave Russell put in literally hundreds of Man Hours in an effort to determine the best possible use of space in Fayerweather. They had conferences with the President and Dean, they inspected the upper floors with members of the maintenance staff to see what alterations were needed and were feasible... and finally they drew up elaborate and specific plans. These plans were approved by the SCR Coordinating Council and recommended to the All-College Council.



From here on in the sotry becomes a little muddled. When the members of committee returned to school this fall they found that their plans had been for the most part disregarded and the committee had been disbanded. Their feeling of frustration would certainly seem valid. What happened to the hours of study and research by the committee? Was their work in vain?

In the broad outlines for the ACC it was stated, "...the desirability of providing in the legislative process for the coordinating councils and committees to be concerned primarily with STUDY, RESEARCH and INITIATION of new measures; and the All-College Council to be free to hear debate, to deliberate, to make impartial decisions, and to devote tlime to long range plans for the College." We feel that at least in this specific example the outline was not followed.

It has also come to our attention that the SCR Coordinating Council voted last year to ask to be disbanded. There was the feeling that they were just another complication in the red tape of getting things done. The ACC spent hours discussing what the SCR had discussed for hours and the result was often rejection and disregard of the recommendations.

We hope that the ECHO will now become a sounding board for discussion on the above problem. We hope people of all views and persuasions will give us enlightened feedback. We do recognize that there have been cases where the committee structure had worked satisfactorily, but the inequities are too flaring to be passed over. The ACC dispatch in the present issue is of some help, but we ask again what is the purpose of a committee, and is the time devoted to them worthwhile in the light of past ACC activities.

Support your school! Support your team, your cheerleaders, your class, your political views! Support, support, support! Every student at Maryville College is subjected to the "United we stand, divided we fall" idea in one way or another. Some groups and organizations are getting more support than others. Such a fact is not surprising, for some of these organizations hold more benefits for a student than others. There is at the present, however, an organization that deserves a great deal more support than it is receiving. That organization happens to be the Highlander Band.

The Highlander Band that marches and plays for each home football game, appears at all the pep rallies, and supplies the "Porkies" for a change and lift of spirit during Saturday lunch also provides over half the cheering section at football games. It not only supports every type of student, but also that thing we call our "community" as well. Needless to say this band is neither famous nor fantastic, but it is dependable and hard working. Besides, consider the facts as they stand. The band is kept on a limited budget and is restricted in certain instances from making its own money. Its campus recruiting system is failing, mainly because students claim, "It's too small. I was in a BIG band in high school." These students should realize that if every one of them who used this excuse would give the band a try, the band would increase over one third its present size.

Furthermore, most sutdents are overlooking an important example. The band might very well represent this college itself. What is beginning to happen to both: Neglect! Take away the caring and you may as well take away the quality.

What can you do as a student: Give the band some recognition, don't be a deadpan audience. When you see the new drill team, and it will be appearing soon, give them a hand. They've worked for it. Smile at the marjorettes. They're performing for you. Most of all, show some spirit. It's your fight song our band is playing!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Letters to the editor will be printed if submitted typed and double spaced. No anonymous letters will be printed. Give any letter or article to any of the staff members or to the editor, Box 2234.

Dear Editor:

While thanking the Alpha Gamma Sigma committee for their scholarship award (which is based on point average), I would like to take this opportunity to remind the committee and the remainder of the college community of the inherent weaknesses in our present system of student evaluation. Grades, unfortunately, measure neither intelligence, creativity, nor interest in a given field; yet they are all too often interpreted in this manner. The "almighty grade" also creates unnecessary competition in classes causing negative rather than positive goals and accomplishments. Finally grades tend to divide the college community by defining the individual on an artificial yardstick in relation to his fellow students.

For these reasons I wish to point out that other methods (pass/fail, self-evaluation, etc.) certainly would not weaken our present educational system—perhaps they might improve it.

Sincerely,
Bill Postler

FRESHMEN. . .MEET CHI BETA

Chi Beta is an organization with many facets. Not only is it active in service projects but we also have a lot of fun.

Last year the girls worked with the Brownie Scout troop and the Blount County Girls' Club. We visited patients at the Eastern State Mental Hospital to talk and work with them. These and other projects enabled us to meet people from many different backgrounds, providing us with enjoyable learning experiences.

But service is only a part of Chi Beta. Intramural sports play a major role in our society, in fact we won the school trophy last year for the most victories in various sports.

Service is great and so are sports, but just having a good time is also important. The 1969 pledges enjoyed a picnic at Sandy Springs and a camp-out at Laurel Lake. The rest of the year was filled with ice cream and skating parties, dances, camping trips and more.

For rush this year Chi Beta planned a Greek night on Thursday with food in the Greek style and entertainment including slides of Greece and a take-off on an ancient myth. Friday the Kappa Phis will join the Chi Betas in giving a hayride (after the movie on campus) followed by a marshmallow roast and a hootenanny led by the Gazebo Singers. Rush this year should be better than ever.

MC'S EMANCIPATED WOMEN

Awareness of the Women's Liberation Movement and their striving for equal rights for women has recently become nationwide. Women all over the country are demanding equal job opportunities, children's day care centers for working mothers, and laws legalizing abortion. The House of Representatives passed a resolution in August calling for a constitutional amendment guaranteeing "equality of rights under the law" to women. Despite the large amount of publicity the Women's Lib is receiving, many women do not agree with them on the major issues involved.

Twenty-five freshmen and twenty-five senior girls on the Maryville Campus were chosen at random, and a poll was taken of their answers regarding the controversial ideas being tackled by the Women's Liberation Movement. Below are the results:

25 FRESHMAN GIRLS

	Yes	No	Undecided
Engaged	3	22
Plan to enter profession after college	19	3	3
For legalized abortion	14	1	10
Condone the pill before marriage	11	9	5
Should Miss America Pageant be agolished?	4	21	0
Want a woman President	3	16	6

25 SENIOR GIRLS

	Yes	No	Undecided
Engaged	4	21
Plan to enter profession after college	17	3	5
For legalized abortion	16	5	4
Condone the pill before marriage	14	7	4
Should Miss America Pageant be abolished?	6	13	6
Want a woman President	10	10	5

The facts that one freshman girl and approximately 9 senior girls are married may also be of interest. The answers given by this small number of girls seem to indicate that members of the Women's Liberation Movement might feel very much at home on our campus and might gain some support with the exception of the one question, "Should the Miss America Pageant be abolished?" Perhaps most women get a little secret pleasure from seeing those all-American girls on stage and maybe wishing that they might be there too.

ETS ANNOUNCES GRE'S

Princeton, N.J. Educational Testing Service announced today that undergraduates and others preparing to go to graduate school may take the Graduate Record Examinations on any of six different test dates during the current academic year.

The first testing date for the GRE is October 24, 1970. Scores from this administration will be reported to the graduate schools about December 1. Students planning to register for the October test date are advised that applications received by ETS after October 6 will incur a $3.00 late registration fee. After October 9, there is no guarantee that applications for the October test date can be processed.

The other five test dates are December 11, 1970, January 16, February 27, April 24 and June 19, 1971. Equivalent late fee and registration deadlines apply to these dates. Choice of test dates should be determined by the requirements of graduate schools or fellowships to which one is applying. Scores are usually reported to graduate schools five weeks after a test date.

The Graduate Record Examinations include an Aptitude Test of general Scholastic ability and Advanced Tests measuring achievement in 20 major fields of study. Full details and registration forms for the GRE are contained in the 1970-1971 GRE INFORMATION BULLETIN. The BULLETIN also contains forms and instructions for requesting transcript service on GRE scores already on file with ETS. BUTLER'S RUN PACES MARYVILLE OVER HAMPDEN-SYDNEY

Sophomore Mike Butler returned a punt 98 yards for the only score as Maryville College shut out the Hampden-Sydney Tigers 6-0 Saturday night at Honaker Field. The victory was marred by the loss of starting quarterback Mike Green who left the game with 2:40 remaining in the first period with a knee injury. Although the extent of the injury is unknown, Green may be lost for the season.

The entire game was a defensive battle as neither team could muster an offensive attack. The Tigers' pass defense proved tough, preventing Green and his replacement Joe Costner from completing a pass. The first half ended in a scoreless tie with no scoring threats from either team.

With 6:01 left in the third period the Tigers' Bobby Woltz boomed a 58 yard punt which Butler fielded at his own 2 yard line. Butler fumbled the ball, broke two tackles, and then picked up key downfield blocks by Phil Ziglar and John Weston. The conversion attempt by Hal Ferst failed, but the Scots' defense made the touchdown stand up. The leading rusher was Hampden-Sydney's Bobby Long with 69 yards. Quarterback Ricky Beale was 12-26 for 100 yards and two interceptions. For Maryville, Hal Ferst led the runners with 56 yards. Defensively, John Weston and Leon Hart had interceptions, while Mike Parks and Earl McMahon recovered fumbles.

The Scots carry their 1-0 record to Georgetown (Ky.) September 26. The next home game for Maryville is October 3 against Sewanee at 7:30 p.m.

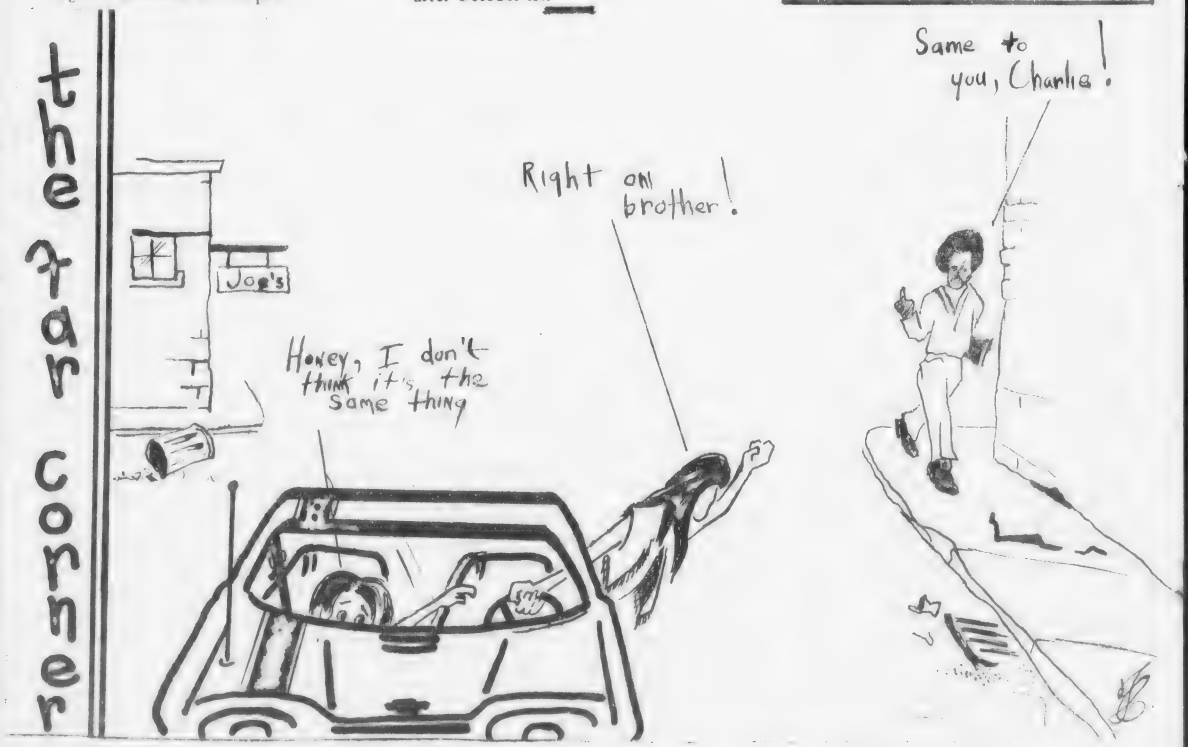
The first Intramural sport for this year will be a co-ed tennis tournament. Sign up sheets will be placed in all dorms, the Post Office, and Intramural Gym. So find a partner (faculty included!) and sign up before Tuesday, September 29 at 5:00. The tournament will begin after October 1st.

M CLUB OPENS DOORS

FRESHMAN GIRLS: Do you have a particular interest in or liking for sports? Do you like homemade ice cream? If you can answer yes to either or both of the above questions, then read on! M-Club will sponsor an ice cream social in the basement of Lloyd this coming Sunday night at 6:30. There will be a very short meeting explaining what the organization is all about, and lots of good eating. YA'LL COME!



REMINDER: Dorm softball is presently underway. Great skill is not necessary, just spirit, a keen sense of fun, and a desire to break away from the humdrum of an otherwise typical afternoon.

VESPER SERVICES

Reverend Harrison has earmarked the vesper services of this year for special goals. Specifically, through vespers, it is hoped that all the various religious factions of this campus can be brought together, that vespers can be a step in demolishing many of the barriers between all such differing groups.

The ecumenical presentations of the vesper service are being planned by the worship committee of the All College Council and are held each Sunday night at 7:00. The committee, headed by Dr. Bloy and Kathy Snatchko, offers a wide range of representatives from the Christian organizations on campus. Even so this committee is anxious for ideas from individuals concerning the make-up and presentation of vespers. In addition to the regular 7:00 service, smaller worship programs are held on Tuesday and Thursday at 10:40 in the Little Chapel.

This coming Sunday night, The Biblical Concept of Peace will be the focus of the vesper service.

KIRK TO ADDRESS C. I. V.

Ken Smalley

Do you think that physical fitness is only for football players, wrestlers and other athlete types. Are you content with the fact that walking to class and messing around on week ends is your most strenuous physical activity? Maybe you ought to reconsider. Get the facts from Dr. Robert Kirk, the CIV speaker for October 7.

Dr. Kirk comes to us from a widely varied background of scholarship and physical activity. Besides a B.S. from Fisk University, he holds several graduate degrees from Indiana University. When Dr. Kirk was in school he was an All-Southern Conference football center. He has also coached high school and college atheletic teams.

Dr. Kirk, interested in the total approach to health and safety will speak from an ecological perspective on his subject "Will Every Man Continue to Destroy Every Man?" His interest in ecology and education in health have culminated in the form of a textbook written by Dr. Kirk, Personal Health in Ecologic Perspective.

SCOTCH BRIGADE INTRODUCED

by Linna Schotter

The latest rumor circulating on the campus grapevine is that the band has a new secret weapon known as the Scotch Brigade.

In the past the Highland Lassies served to devastate and astound the spectators. What fieldish plot has the mighty Maryville Marching Band devised this time?

Could the Scotch Brigade be a new drink to be sold at the refreshment stands to generate good feelings among the multitudes? Is it a new song with a beat designed to hypnotize even the most ardent music hater? The answer to both questions is negative, so what does that leave you with, sports fans? Women! That's right, 16 of MC's own coeds.

Many people felt that a new boost to school spirit was necessary and that a different form of entertainment at football and basketball games might just do the job. The Scotch Brigade Drill Team, made up of sophomores, juniors, and one lone senior, tried out last spring and have been practicing hard since September 12.

The drill team was also formed to relieve the band of some of the marching burden so their talents could be directed toward their music. Some of the band members are hinting, however, that the real reason for the drill team is as a protective shield for the band to hide behind in case the fans get nasty.

THE ACC ON SECRET SOCIETIES

by Susan Hayba

The secret societies which have caused sinister undercurrents at Maryville for years were discussed at Wednesday's All-College Council meeting. Several times during its three years of existence the ACC has considered these groups, whose very presence is a contradiction of the Council's basic philosophy of a healthy, open campus community. Some members wondered whether the persistence of closed organizations indicated an insufficiency in our community, although we already have two sets of social societies. The general consensus was that the secret societies are maintained by the power of the excitement of the mystery surrounddin them to attract members from among students unaware of the social pressures and influence on elections they probably exert. To advise students of the nature of these groups before they become entangled with them and hopefully to eliminate these detrimental institutions, the ACC will soon publish a statement on the matter.

Also included in this meeting's agenda was a report from the Freshman Orientation Committee. Grievances of last year's frosh ranging from the breakfast hour and research papers to dorm segregation from the other classes were noted.

Race relations at Maryville were the last major item to be discussed. To prevent racial tension from becoming a problem, a committee to work with the chaplain will be established.

MC GRAD WINS SCHOLARSHIP

Nellie Elam, has received a $2,500 scholarship grant from the South Carolina State Library for graduate work in Library Science. She will begin her studies this month at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor.

A cum laude graduate of Maryville Nellie participated in the State Library's intern program at the Horry County Library at Myrtle Beach, S.C. during the summer of 1969.

Nellie's study, which will lead to a Master's Degree, is being co-sponsored by the Aiken County (S.C.) Library, and upon completion of her studies, she will return there as Reference Librarian.

The South Carolina State Library provides scholarships for graduate study in librarianship as part of a continuing personnel program for public libraries.

CLASSICS FOUR RENEGE

by Bob Eickelberg

Last night the 1970 Homecoming Committee told the Echo that Dennis Yost and the Classics Four who were originally under contract to play were forced to cancel out on Wednesday morning. The Classics Four are scheduled to give a concert the night before in a small town in north central Montana. They were scheduled to fly to Maryville via Northwest Airlines, however Northwest has gone on strike and the group would not be able to get here since Northwest is the only Airline serving that area of the state.

Mr. Brahams and the committee have been making every effort to contract another group but have run into problems due to the Jewish New Year. However, the concert has not been called off and Classics Four tickets will be honored at the door.

Last night the committee announced the finalists for Homecoming Queen. The girls are Joan Gates, Lynn Gillespie, Rosemary Johnson, Chris McCormack, and Sharon Plumb. The Queen will be announced next Friday at the Pep Rally. All five of the girls will appear next Thursday on the WTVK Good Morning Show at 8:00.

Mike Barrows also announced that there would be a dance on Friday night in Bartlet Hall. Music will be provided by the Rich Mountain Tower featuring Dana Paul. The dance will start at 8:30 following the Pep Rally. The cost will be $1.00 stag and $1.50 drag. Randy Calhoun is in charge of ticket sales. It was stressed that dress would be informal because the dance would follow the Bon-Fire Pep Rally.

Other Homecoming Events that should be noted include the parade Saturday morning, the 5:15 Barbecue and of course the 1:30 P.M. football game against Emory and Henry.

POETRY PRIZE OFFERED

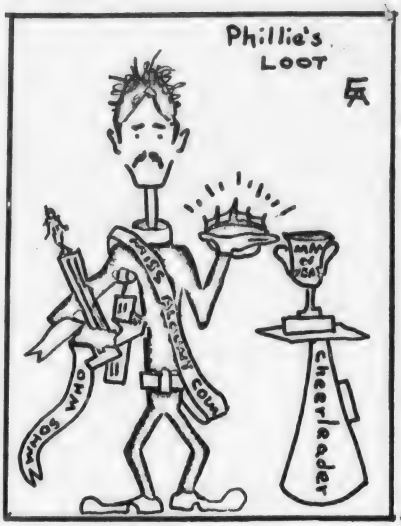
Beginning with the Spring 1971 issue, Alkabest: American College Poetry will award annually a first prize of $100.00 and a second prize of $50.00 for the best undergraduate poems published in Alkabest that year. Published by Wesleyan University Press in Middletown, Connecticut, Alkabest is a semi-annual magazine of superior poetry written by undergraduates in American colleges and universities. Poems are selected by a committee of undergraduate judges, each distinguished in his own school as a poet or perceptive critic. The deadline for submissions for the Spring 1971 issue is November 1.

EDITORIAL

This week MC students have been humored and disgusted by some of the elections that have been held on campus. We feel that certain irregularities, inconsistances, and errors must be pointed out and hopefully action will be taken to remedy the situations.

For instance, there was a widespread lack of knowledge as to who the candidates were. As a matter of fact a large number of people who's names were on the ballot did not even know they were running until they received a ballot that had their name on it. Among the freshmen there was a general ignorance of WHO was running, even though the candidates made their names well known, THEY were not known.

There was also a general ignorance of what the candidates believed, why they thought the way they did, and what they would like to do if elected. This ignorance is not isolated to these past elections. It is also characteristic of every election that has been held on this campus for at least the last two years.



There has also been a general lack of desire on the part of the candidates to hold any office. The welcomed exception to this was seen in the enthusiasm of the freshman class candidates. However, their spirit will probably be quenched by the upperclass Maryville apathy. But then the question presents itself: why should there be a desire to hold office? What do the officers of any class actually do? What kind of class spirit or unity is there? What constructive competition has there ever been between the classes to foster a class spirit? Is this a concept that left the colleges with panty-raids and the sixties?

But let's suppose there is a valid reason for having elections and let's assume that they will continue. We have a few suggestions.

Let's slow down the election process. Let's give the students a chance to know the candidates. The Echo is more than willing to establish itself as a forum for presentation of the candidates and their views. Another possibility is that the break following a C.I.V. (when all the community is together) could be used for a formal presentation of candidates to the community. But these are only two possibilities, other people have more and possibly better ideas.

The fact remains that MC needs election reform desperately. The ACC and its committees need to give attention to this problem now, before the next elections roll around.

LETTERS

Dear Editor,

My tour of duty here in the Republic of Viet Nam, RVN, started last May and it seems like Maryville is so far away. The time I spent at Maryville College represents my fondest memories and they mean so much to me now. I found the care-free college life was all important and felt isolated from problems existing outside the college community. Those problems such as the Viet Nam "CONFLICT" did not directly involve me until I graduated and faced the dilema known as the Armed Forces. I always felt the "CONFLICT" would be over by the time I graduated, but how naive I was! I read about the troop withdrawal, but I have not seen it at its projected level. I process men in and out of Viet Nam each day and our troop level has not dropped to any great extent in this area. Thei "CONFLICT" does not bother one too much until he is personally touched by this poor state of affairs. If people on the college campuses are not worried now they will be once they arrive in this "paradise" known as South Viet Nam. It is a rude awakening! American lives are being wasted each day over here, but the news media plays it down by reporting "a new low was reached this past week for ONLY ninety people were killed!" That is a relatively low number, but one life is too much to lose in this war-torn country.

You ask what you can do to voice your opinion on a wide scale for your efforts seem futile. The answers come in November when the students not only have the right but the responsibility to vote. Do not say the country is sick and you do not want anything to do with the politicians. You may find your lack of interest will take its toll when you find yourself either pounding a typewriter, if you are lucky, or pounding the boonies waiting for "Chuck" to engage you in a fire-fight. This atrocity will continue until the politicians realize they must act to end the fighting if they intend to continue as our elected representatives. Elect people who will help get the American soldiers home, for believe me, Viet Nam is very far removed from Maryville College and the good life you are enjoying now.

Do not neglect this opportunity to protest, by ballot, those government policies that disagree with your own beliefs. No one should feel remorseful that they did not fulfill their responsibility in determining the path of our developement. Do not let the security for Maryville over-shadow your concern for those happenings outside your immediate community.

We, (let me qualify that to a large I) the members of the Maryville College Community wish to extend sincerest thanx to you and your wonderful staff (particularly the PHOTOG-FROG) for the really big show of manners, professional ethic, and undue objectivity at our gathering with a nasty long-hair, dope-peddling, social drop-out during the Community Issues & Values program of September 30, 1970.

As before we are all grossly indebted to you (and other members of your fraternal media) for presenting an unusually talented spectacle of the hippie-commie enclave on the hill. Dear Editor,

There are quite a few of us in the sophomore class who are mystified as to when nominations for our officers took place. Not to put down the people on the ballot but I feel that a more representative slate could have been offered had the majority of our class (including some of those nominated) been aware of the time and place of nomination. We saw signs for every class but ours and I'd like to know who was responsible for letting us know, why they didn't, and who selected our candidates.

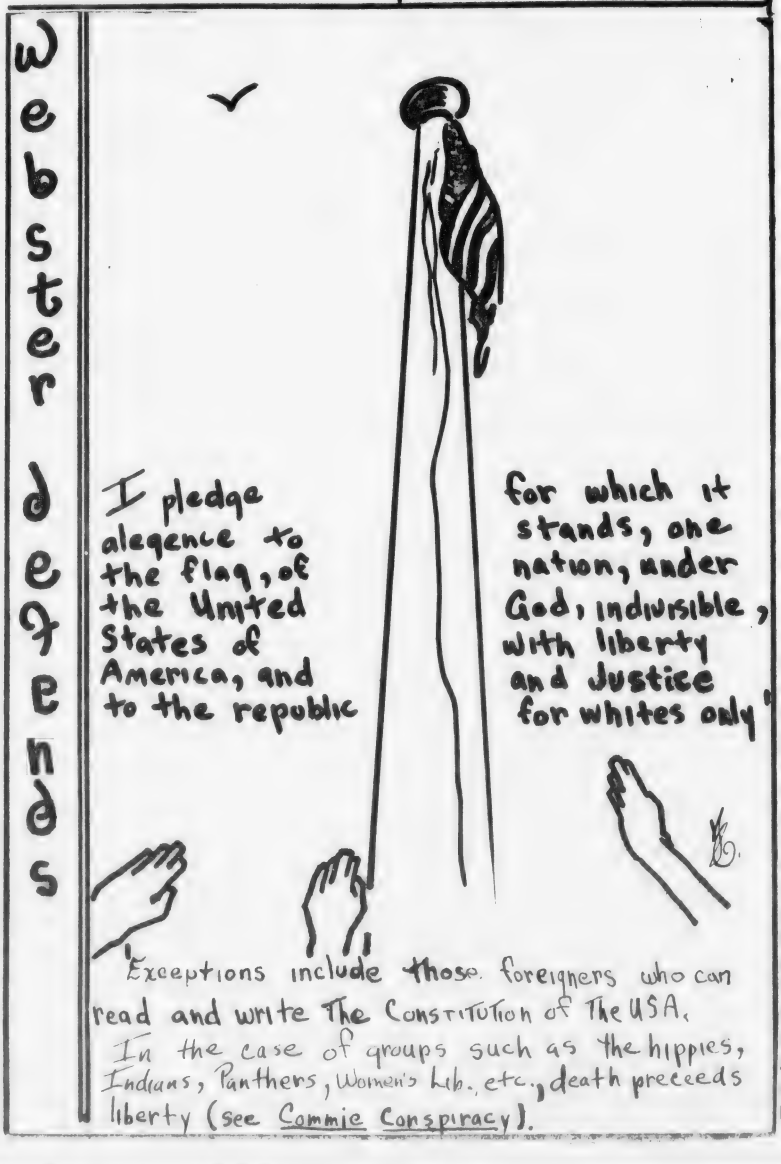
SIG – THETA RUSH

Alpha Sigma & Theta Epsilon began their rush Thursday night with a smoker for the guys and a formal tea and fashion show for the girls. Both of these events went very well - but. . . more is coming!!

Tonight, Friday, October 2, they will be presenting a skit, "The Wizard of Morningside" at 7:30 P.M. in the chapel. The skit will be followed by a free dance featuring the well-known band, the Supreme Court, in the Intramural Gym, at 9:00 P.M. Both of this evening's events promise to be very entertaining and the Sigs and Thetas invite all to come.

OLD LANTERN TO BE RELIT



by Carol Veltman

Hoping for a more active campus participation, a committee headed by junior Judy Green met Tuesday, September 29, to discuss plans for reopening the Lantern Coffee House.

The Lantern, located in the back of Thaw Hall, has previously been sponsored by the U.C.M. Folk singing, poetry readings and discussions with C.I.V. speakers have been included in the Lantern.s entertainment.

A new location for the coffee house has been selected at Fayerweather in room 204. The decorating is underway and it is hoped that the new lantern will open in the near future. Cokes, coffee, and hot cider will be served during a series of planned programs and plays. Individual entertainment by any students who wish to participate will be welcomed. The success of the Lantern will depend on the demand of the students on campus. With its reorganization, the coffee house hopes to provide a place to go for people who desire a change of atmosphere.

The Black students of Maryville College will present each week in the Echo either a column or a cartoon.

NEED FOR VISITATION RESPONSIBILITY SIGHTED

by Emily Dowdy

The outset of this new school year, with its new students and the consequent introduction of new values and opinions, would seem to be a good time to review the policy of visitation entails and to examine the existent mood of the campus concerning it.

The intention of visitation, to be sure is to break down artificial barriers and to provide a better social and academic atmosphere for our community. In order to secure this hoped for state, however, each person must be willing to assume some personal responsibility in seeing that the few rules governing the policy are carried out. This new found freedom of ours did not come easily, but is the result of much hard work by many interested parties. It is important to realize than that in a sense visitation is still being tried and is subject to re-evaluation before the Board of Directors. In addition, it should be noted that the hours now in effect for each dorm are by no means final or irrevocable. Any resident detecting a mood of dissatisfaction among his fellow residents may work through his house chairman and council to change the time of his dorm's visitation. New hours may be set through secret ballot by a simple majority vote.

In trying to establish the mood of the community concerning the policy of visitation and its impact upon campus life, following individual reactions were recorded: A transfer junior said, "With so much emphasis being put upon the concept 'the courage to be', visitation helps to encourage the building of individual personalities within a community where artificiality does not need to exist." Christy Rogers, a concerned sophomore described the policy as "an effective aid in bettering the social attitudes on campus by creating a more relaxed atmosphere for study discussion, and friendship between men and women." A senior woman had this to say about visitation: "In this world (which is coed living) we shall have to know how to relate to and get along with people of both sexes. Isn't visitation a policy which can help us formulate our ideas and policies in regard to this, so that we son't be so shocked or bewildered when it comes time to venture forth from the womb and face life in society and the 'real world'? Coed living with visitation might be another aid for some of the more mature students on campus." Mosch, a sophomore aid, is a firm believer in the visitation system. She said, "I've seen all the hard work that was put into it, and I don't want to see it taken away because people can't abide by the rules set up to protect the dorms." Finally, Donna Heminway, a senior, had this to say: "We are fortunate to have the privilege of visitation. We. . . that is ALL students should, therefore, abide by its few simple rules. C'mon. . . we want to keep this program, don't we?!!!

SPORTS

SIGS LOSE OPENER

The Intermural flagball season began on Monday with the defending champs Sledgehammers (Sig) pitted against the Independents.

After Sig received the kickoff and failed to move it, they were forced to punt. Al Morgan blocked the punt and Ward Brooks picked it up and ran in for the score. The extra point failed.

Following a punt, QB Bill Cochran sprinted 65 yards for a score and Bill threw to Dan McKinstry for the point after.

The Independents took the kickoff of second half and marched in for a score with Bill Cochran hitting Dan McKinstry with a 20 yard pass. The point failed on an attempted run.

Late in the game Cochran hit Leonard Wood on a 40 yard pass for a score. The point was good and the final score was Independents 26, and Sledgehammers 0.

HANDBALL COMES TO M.C.

by John Powell

Instituted this year, handball is currently one of the lesser known areas of Maryville's new physical education program. However, the game is not likely to remain unknown long. Coach Baird, who teaches the sport, anticipates that once the new building is complete, handball courts will be in for heavy use. "We're eagerly anticipating getting into the new building. Probably, though games will have to be limited to half an hour each because of the demand," Coach Baird stated.

Originally the national sport of Ireland, handball came to America in the 19th century where it took its modern form.

The game is played in a four-walled court. Equipment includes a rubber ball and leather glove.

In some aspects handball resembles tennis and other court games. The server hits the ball against the front wall. On the rebound, the receiver must play the ball before it bounces twice. Play continues until an error is made. Two or four people may play.

SCOTS HANDED FIRST SETBACK

The Scots were handed their first defeat of the season at Georgetown on Saturday by the score of 3-0.

Before the game started a hard rain hit and flooded the field. The first quarter saw the Scots and the Tigers exchange fumbles.

The second quarter was much the same until about the last five minutes when the Tigers mounted a drive, which ended in a 25 yard field goal by Bernie Storer with 2:27 left in the half.

The third quarter was a defensive struggle with neither team making any serious threats.

The fourth quarter saw the Scots stopping the Tigers on their 7 yard line. From there the Scots moved to Georgetown's 15 where a pass interception ended the drive.

With about 5 minutes remaining another storm hit and made the field a total disaster. The Scots had one last chance but in the rain could not penetrate for a score.

On defense, Leon Hart picked off two passes and recovered a fumble. Tom Ickes and freshman David Clinton filling in for the injured Mike Parks also did fine jobs.

The Scots play Sewanee here this Saturday night at 7:30. Sewanee is 0-2 and were defeated by Hampton-Sidney 35-0 last week end.

Come support the Scots this weekend!!!

VOGUES IN CONCERT TOMORROW

THE VOGUES are coming to Maryville College! The four young men (each of them are 26 years old) who recorded the million seller, "Turn Around, Look at Me," will be in concert Saturday night, 9:00 P.M'

Young and old alike go for THE VOGUES. Although they have a sound which has been identified with the Rock sound, they have what some call the nice "Lettermen-ish" sound. They maintain however that their sound is distinctly their own—not Four Seasons, not Beach Boys, not Lettermen, but distinctly THE VOGUES.

In addition to best-selling recordings of "My special Angel", "Till," "Woman Helping Man," "I've Gotta Be Me," and "The Impossible Dream," THE VOGUES have also appeared on national television with Ed Sullivan, Red Skelton, Mike Douglas, Glen Campbell, Johnny Carson and Joey Bishop.

THE VOGUES also specialize in some of the standard songs like "Time After Time," "September in the Rain," and "Just in Time." They do satires on TV commercials and Nashville's Country and Western Scene.

They come from Turtle Creek, Pennsylvania and include lead baritone Bill Burkette, baritone Don Miller, first tenor Hugh Geyer, and second tenor Chuck Blasko.

Tickets for the performance are $2.00 and $2.50. You can get them in the ticket office or at the door. Remember, ALL Classics Four tickets will be honored.

DECLARATION

(This is the essense of a letter from President Ethel Ann Scruggs to the Senior Class)

A tradition-breaking idea which will involve each member of the senior class personally has been presented for the senior class homecomling float. Because the old queen's throne float annually thrown together in the bobbysock generation is not relevant in this era of student protests, women's lib, poverty programs, and integration, the seniors are using homecoming as an opportunity to challenge the Maryville community, the alumni, and the American public in general with the values and goals of their era. Using as its theme "Challenges 1971-Maryville U.S.A.," the float will be divided into the five challenges most important to this class: the environmental challenge, the educational challenge, a political voice, Christian concern, such as the U.S.S. hope, and international exploration.

All the members of the senior class are concerned with at least one of these challenges in their position as a graduating class and in their respective professions, so they intend to confront the classes ahead of and behind them with the action needed in today's world. By having the five queen candidates represent values, they will be more than just pretty faces--they will be the modern on-the-go women who encourage the spirit of social change and peace and will reflect their classes' pride in them as well as their challenges.

Please help strengthen this expression of determination and action as the seniors join in their last all-class project together.

LYNN GILLESPIE ELECTED HOMECOMING QUEEN

It was announced at the Emory and Henry Pep Rally that Lynn Gillespie was elected as the 1970 Homecoming Queen. Lynn told the Echo that she was very honored to be chosen and she expressed her thanks to the student body. The crowning of the queen will take place Saturday at half time.

Winning contests is nothing now to Lynn, who was chosen last spring as the 1970 Miss Blount County. In the Miss Tennessee Pagent, her singing won her a Talent Scholarship. She was also selected to participate in the Experiment in International Living to France during the summer of 1969.

Lynn is also active in campus activities. She has served on ACC committees, played in the Band, been a majorette, served as a New Gamma Leader, Sophomore Aide, and Senior Counselor.

Lynn is majoring in French and Education with a minor in Spanish. She is presently the President of the Local Chapter of the National French Society. After graduation she hopes to go to France and work with either the State or Defense Department.

When asked what she thought was the most pressing problem facing college students, Lynn responded that there was great difficulty in students having their opinions heard and respected. She further commented that more compromise with those in authority might be a possible way for the students to gain a hearing. Lynn does not agree with the U.S. involvement in Viet Nam and has expressed concern for the environmental crisis we are facing.

Lynn also feels that one of the best things about Maryville College is that the people are so friendly and that most always have time to stop and talk with you.

The entire court, consisting of Joan Gates, Rosemary Johnson, Chris McCormick, and Sheri Plum, indicated that they were also pleased, excited and honored to be selected to represent the school.

In interviewing the members of the court the Echo was impressed by the general feeling that, as Joan Gates put it, while recognizing that it is an honor to be selected, it is not really a measure of the whole person.

Sheri Plum and Rosemary Johnson said that they were glad that the Senior float was not going to just call attention to the

EDITORIAL

On Wednesday night President Nixon went before the nation and the world and made an extensive and comprehensive peace initiative. In his proposal of immediate cease fire in all of Indo-China we can easily see the sincerity of the President. He made it quite clear that the U.S. desires an end to the war and the settlement of a "just peace." His five proposals were received warmly on Capitol Hill by a large bi-partisan majority of the Congress, and this should aid in showing the North Vietnamese that we mean Business.

However, the President's speech won't do much good, and lives won't be saved unless the Communists respond favorably. As one Congressman said, this is the "acid test for Communist credibility." If the North rejects this proposal as it did the limited cease fire that the president presented to them last year, then the world will know without a doubt who is responsible for the continuation of the war. The guilt for the deaths of all soldiers and civilians in Viet Nam will be resting squarely on the shoulders of the communists.

It is with this in mind that we applaud the President's effort. We realize that his proposal may be rejected. But we do call for a unified support of his plan and an agreement that the United States is truly seeking an end to the war.

Dear Editor,

Last Friday the Supreme Court performed live in the gym at a dance sponsored by Alpha Sigma and Theta Epsilon as part of their Rush activities. The dance (maybe because it was free) went over magnificently. In fact, I believe it was one of the best dances since the ones in Baldwin my freshman year. There is one major reason. You. You, the student body came. . . and danced! There are bound to be some people who wish they would have had a better time and to these people I say, please don't give up. Keep coming to the activities we have on campus, what little we have. Everyone I talked to liked the band and they weren't even at full strength because they usually have three horns besides the two guitars, organ, drums and lead singer. Remember this name--The Supreme Court and next time we have them here on campus I hope we can pay them what they deserve and we will pick a night when everyone can stay out late--(football players, wrestlers, and basketball players). Keep up the good work, M. C.

H. E. vs. T. U.

by Lloyd Kramer

It's homecoming again. Some people care and a lot of others don't. I mean, what's going to be different about the world after homecoming weekend? nothing. But then what's toing to be the same after homecoming? nothing. It is clear that the universe is not going to be affected by the events on our campus during the coming weekend. Historians of the world will not bother to record what we did on a couple of days in October of 1970.

There are people who think that everything you do ought to have significance and meaning in a universal sense. They think that building floats, buying corsages and having barbeque picnics on the baseball field are totally irrelevant to the larger questions of life. And they are probably right. However, such transcendant universalists (a good name for them?) would be hard-pressed to prove them?) would be hard-pressed to prove that any of our weekends or any of our weeks at Maryville have assumed a position in the transcendent order of the universe. As the T.U.'s brood on the irrelevant characteristics of a "Maryville, U.S.A." homecoming, a lot of other people will be stuffing floats, wearing corsages, and eating a barbeque picnic. These homecoming enthusiasts (a good name for them?) will contend that the weekend is special because it gets everybody together, builds up our spirits, honors the institution and lets everyone cut loose with a wild weekend. And they are probably right. If the H.E.'s are wrong in thinking that the "U.S.A." cares about our homecoming, they are right in realizing that this place needs a weekend with some activity. A college student living on a couple days in October of 1970 has got to see the wisdom of liberating himself for awhile rather than brooding on his impending doom.

So the point of this whole discussion is that homecoming is stupid for some people and exciting for others. If you don't like homecoming don't worry about it. But if you really dig homecoming, don't worry about it either. Just don't worry about anything, okay. Because the whole thing is only a couple of days in October, and it would be best if we just sort of let it happen in its own little special, happy, far-out way. ALL POWER TO THE HEROIC HOMECOMING QUEEN; OFF THE WASPS; FREE ALL H.E.'S AND T.U.'S.

STUDENT HELP JOBS

by Linda Lou Blomeke

One of the special benefits offered by Maryville College is the opportunity to attain a student help job. About 210 students have jobs on the campus. These jobs range from library assistants to lifeguards at the swimming pool. Students also work as counselors and resident assistants in the dormitories, assistant discussion leaders in the Fine Arts and Science Thought classes, and as helpers in the Dining hall, Student Center and Book Store. There are many more offices and departments on campus which employ students part-time.

Recently there has been a rumor circulating that there has been a cutback in the area of student help jobs. Mr. Ribble, in the Student Aid Office, stresses that there has been "an adjustment, rather than a cutback." The budget has been cut approximately 10% due to the funds available for the program. What this adjustment amounts to is that there has been no reduction in the number of jobs available, only a limitation, in some cases, of the hours of work allowed. This may be an unhappy situation for those students who have had their working hours cut, but the adjustment is not really a drastic one. The student aid program offers much more today than it did several years ago.

Nothing adds color to our highways like a car crash.

And drunk drivers are involved in at least 800,000 crashes a year.

And drunk drivers are involved in the killing of at least 25,000 people a year.

Highways don't have to be this colorful.

It's up to you.

Drunk drivers, problem drinkers and abusive drinkers may be sick and need your help.

queen and her court—but was going to stress the up-to-date modern woman in her place in society.

The concern of the girls can be further shown by the occupations they hope to pursue. All look forward to some part of the edúcation field. Chris McCormick and Sheri Plum expressed special interest in working with various types of retarded children, especially the perceptionally handicaped.

All of the girls expressed ooncern over the war in Viet Nam. All agreed that killing is bad and should be ended if at all possible. Sheri noted a need for support for the country in this time of crisis. She indicated that there was a need for change and that those of differing opinions need to work hard and not just talk. The other girls pointed out that there are no easy or permanent solutions to this war or any war.

It was also cited that one of the big problems for college students today is the problem of finding one's identity in this seemingly impersonal world that is filled with turmoil. In connection with this, Joan said that objective truth has been passed off and observed. Her solution to the problem is Christianity and she feels it is necessary for there to be a sincere search for truth on the part of most people.

The Queen and her court stressed the need for the homecoming queen to be selected not only for beauty, but also for service and usefulness to the total school functions.

ten pieces of silverware in one meal; a meal which often consisted of marianated snails, raw hamburger or eel and gravy, washed down with sparkling--carbonated water?

On the other hand you might prefer tales from India by Mary Ellen. Not only did she not use ten pieces of silverware, she ignored it completely, eating with only her right hand (the left hand was for s omething i'll leave to her to explain). Her food ran to things like horseradish chutney.

Both girls emphasized what a totally unique and wonderful experience it was to live with Belgian and Indian families. Ethel Ann studied art history and related subjects in Belgium while Mary Ellen gave her time to the Gujarati langauge and the study of Indian thought. But their experiences were just as educational as classes at the university, for example, once at a Russian Easter celebration Ethel Ann was baptized with a bottle of vodka.

This CIV is special. It's informal, given by people we all know and minus slides, tapes and other paraphernalia designed to make you "feel as though you were there." Listening to Ethel Ann and Mary Ellen takes you there in a much more personal way.

By the way, did you ever perform bamba, the kissing dancd?

SCOTS DOWN SEWANEE

The Scots upped their record to 2-1 with a 3-0 victory over Sewanee here Saturday night. The margin of victory was a 26 yard field goal by Hal Ferst with two minutes remaining in the first half.

The first quarter was dominated by the Scots offense. The Scots moved the ball well, but penalties throttled the drives.

Late in the second half the Scots mounted a drive with the big play being a 32 yard pass from Joe Costner to Rick White. The Scots could not punch in a touchdown, but did the field goal.

The second half was mostly Sewanee's. They drove the ball but were stymied several times by the tremendous Scot defense.

The Scots defense held late in the fourth quarter on their 32, but the offense fumbled on the first play and the defense got the call on the 19 with 1:27 on the clock.

Sewanee got a first down, but the defense forced four wild passes to preserve the lead with twenty-seven seconds left.

This week the Scots will tangle with Emory and Henry, who has a record of 1-3, here at 1:30 on Saturday in the annual Homecoming game. Come back the Scots as they play the Wasps.

Indeed, age and experience must count for something, as Lloyd triumphed in the recent dorm softball tournaments. Members of the winning team captained by Linda Heinze included Judy Green, Barbara Law, Julie Mobley, Flip Sthreshley, Caroline Munn, Beth Kell, Judy Pike, and Emily Dowdy.

On the intramural scene, Lloyd and Dorm I were battling out for the Women's Softball Championship. Both teams have excelled in participation and skill--And the best Dorm won!! Women's Soccer will be starting soon and will prove to be a great time for fun and meeting other girls. Look for signs about signing up to play soon. For those of you who have never participated in intramurals, we encourage you to take advantage of the healthful exercise and fun.

Congratulations to our new cheerleaders--Karren Bryan, Nan Lantz, Julie Mobley, Sally Shivar, Pam Spoonamore, Ron Adams, "Frog" Burkins, Caleb Galsson, Richard Seipel, Philly Dog, and Jeff White (a later addition to the squad). They were selected by the student body on September 23rd. So far they have done a tremendous job backing our Scots, and we can look forward to a peppy, spirit-inspiring squad!

WINTER SPORTS OUTLOOK

This Thursday, October 15, marks the first day of practice for both Maryville's wrestling and basketball teams.

In wrestling, the Scots suffered heavy losses to graduation. Captain Ray Nye, Seniors Bob Evaul and Paul Grice, and Sophomore Randy Minor are returning lettermen who form the nucleous of this year's squad. Coach John A. David intends to rely heavily on a freshman dominated squad which includes Frank Sabo, Steve Lydick, Dave Goodnight, Fred Van Aken, John Poore, Jeff White, Leonard Guillarme, Dan Russel, Edward Johnson, John Alden, Dave Gaughan, Brad Kehler, Larry Bodine, Steve Lancaster, Dick Maloney, John Stevens, Steve Barrett, Mike Barberry, Stu James, Ed Bush, and Chip Pusey. Other wrestlers will join the squad once football season is over.

This year's squad faces a number of difficult opponents beginning with an away match with the University of Tennessee on December 11. The Scots first home match is scheduled for December 15 with the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga here.

Even before Thursday practice these Scots were enjoying pre-season conditioning including running, weight-lifting, and other assorted callisthenics.

BASKETBALL

Maryville's other winter sport, basketball, also starts practice Thursday. The 1970 basketball Scots wil have experienced leadership as four of last year's starters return. These returning starters are Warren Morgan, Captain; Dan McKinstry, last year's leading scorer,; Mike Barrows, and John Weston. Other prospective starters include Dusty Miller, Scott Thompson, Rick Frueh, Dale Morse, Steve Ayers, Jack Bender, John Curdiff, Bryan Harvey, and Bill Postler.

This year's basketball Scots face a twenty-one game season beginning with Temple College of Chattanogga on Thurs. day, December 3.

Hopefully, this game will take place in the new physical education building. Instead of the traditional hardwood floor, games this year will be played on the artificial Uni-tuf court.

Also new this year is the scheduling of Birmingham-Southern College of Birmingham, Alabama. The Scots will play both home and away games with Birmingham-Southern.

V.56 # 5 Maryville College, Maryville, Tennessee, October 16, 1970

THE BALLET DANCE GROUP

PLEASE CARE ENOUGH TO READ

by Susan Hayba

So often Maryville students praise concern and involvement in current issues; yet after CIV this week only a small group cared enough about our community to walk the few feet over to the All-College Council Town Meeting in the Theatre. These short informal Town Meetings are expressly for encouraging dialogue between the ACC and the campus it is trying to serve. At each session the ACC's recent activities are briefly summarized for those who have not bothered to read either the ACC minutes, the Campus News (both are posted all over campus), or the Echo. Then the floor is open for questions, criticism, and suggestions regarding Council action.

Wednesday, Doug Cox recapped such business as the streamlining of committee structure, the discussion on secret societies, the creation of a committee to decide upon what should be expected of a new dean for the school, and of a "preventive medicine" committee on race relations. He stressed the influence students can exert in effecting changes on campus, even in our food, through temporary investigative committees which the Council will willingly form on any issue in which interest is whown.

Dr. Ogren, Alan Childs, and Pres. Copeland then gave their impressions of the meeting with the Board of Directors last Friday. For them the rapport and mutual respect established between the two groups during the interchange of ideas was far more valuable than the items that were actually discussed. Both the Board and the Council representatives were pleased with each other's concern for advancement and receptiveness to suggestions.

At this point the most important and most emotional part of the Town Meeting began: student commentary. Shep Speare delivered an energetic critique of the lack of communication between the ACC and the student body, a fact proven by the poor attendance at the Town Meeting, and of which the Council is painfully aware. Shep directed this outcry of disgust with Maryville's apathy ignorance of ACC business at the Council itself. Bob Eickelberg and Bruce Birch criticized Shep for expecting the ACC to spoon feed information to a community that ignores the three publications covering its activities and the Town Meetings.

Lloyd Cramer said that he and the Rev. Mr. Harrison felt that a committee

BALLET GROUP TO PERFORM

The first presentation of the 1970-1971 Performing Artists Concerts will be a performance by the Ballet Dance Group of Memphis on Friday, October 16, at 8:15 p.m. in the College Theatre. This is a young company devoted to the presentation of ballet as a vital and enjoyable form of theatrical entertainment, and all members of the troup have considerable professional experience in television, Broadway, and company tours.

Yuri Chatal, the company's director and principal dancer, is of Russian and Armenian parentage and has appeared in many classical productions as well as the national cast of "My Fair Lady." He is presently director of the Memphis Civic Ballet. Other members of the group are Martin Fredmann, Linda Di Bona, Nancy Turpin, and Lynn Short.

This appearance of a group of young artists is typical of the concerts which will be presented this year. In contrast to series of presious years, every performance this year will be by an artist who is nearly the same age as Maryville students. Other such performances will be made by the St. Petersburg Boy Choir in March and the Kull-Marable-Schoen quartet.

General admission tickets for unreserved seats are $2.00 for adults and $1.00 for students per performance.

By presenting artists who are younger and more compatible to students, it is hoped that more of the College community will take advantage of these opportunities to hear some very fine performers than in previous years.

ATTENTION

On Saturday night, October 17, Playhouse Organization is sponsoring the showing of "Mr. Roberts," a World War II naval comdey starring Henry Fonda, Jack Lemmon, William Powell, James Cagney, and Betsy Palmer. Price of admission is $1.00; tickets will be on sale at the door.

EDITORIAL

Right Wing. Censored. Closed-minded. These words have been unjustly used to describe this year's Highland Echo by a number of students.

The staff of the Echo would like to take this opportunity to make a statement of policy, and at the same time to put an end to the vicious and untrue rumors.

The Echo is published weekly throughout the school year for at least three reasons. One is that the so called "community" can be informed of what has gone on, what is going on, and what will be going on around the campus. This is called news reporting.

Another reason for publication is that the Echo is available to all students, faculty and staff as a sounding board where various opinions on any subject can be aired and discussed before the whole "community". This can be found on the editorial page through editorials, cartoons, letters to the editor, and signed articles.

A third reason is that creative writing of M.C. students can be recognized. In the first issue of the paper a plea was made for submission of such writing. So far the Echo has had the privilege of printing poems by three students. Unfortunately more have not been submitted.

The Echo encourages anyone to submit material to be published. Beginning with this issue all artibles must be signed when submitted, however, names will be withheld upon request. The editing of articles and decisions not to publish submitted works will not be made by any individual, but by the editor-in-chief in agreement with at least one other subordinate editor. Material will only be withheld if it is felt to be of no "redeeming social value."

Once again, any person wishing to contribute to the Echo is encouraged to do so. Please submit any work (either typed or printed) in person to a member of the editorial staff. It is our desire to have a paper that is open, helpful, and interesting to all.

NO MAN'S LAND

by Debbie Branch

"No Man's Land" will appear in each issue of the Echo in hopes that relevant topics can be discussed with understanding from both sides (left and right). If you have an issue you would like discussed, please inform the Echo and we will try a stab at it in this column. The "stab" this week is directed at censorship.

Censorship is one of the most controversial topics in our modern society, yet I doubt that many Americans realize how much it runs our lives. Sure, there is the normal problem of war or western movies psychologically bothering the children, or nudity tearing down conventional innocence. But be honest, are you shocked anymore by "X" or "R" movies? Nudity, furthermore, along with the idea of sex, has come a long way in our society. Now that censorship is steadily going down the drain, won't producers be forced to present something less cliche-ist and maybe more important to the public? T.V. is proof that such an idea of more relevant information can be presented artistically.

Artistically speaking, the Smothers Brothers are T.V.'s prime example of a fight against censorship. Their argument with CBS over program content lost them their job, and they are now presenting their case in court for free speech. In Seventeen, March 1969, Dick Smothers says: "There's a need for a show like Glen Campbell's, which is relaxing and also for one like ours, which people can talk about and disagree with. Who owns the air? Can networks tell performers what to say? If we win, T.V. will open up. If we lose, there'll be a lot of creative people who aren't even going to give it a gry.

Finally, censorship controls our government to the point where it is fooling Americans. Underground terrorism, American spies and hostages trapped in foreign countries, and our own government's underhanded activities are daily hidden. On the other hand, some newsmen have no scruples to exposing a young soldier overcome with terror and pain, who is unaware that he is gasping horribly, much less that he is being shown on a nation wide news broadcast. Why must newsmen jump on helpless families whose member has just murdered someone or who has just committed suicide?

I am not advocating that Americans be told everything, for panic can often be a dangerous thing and can too easily strike, but it seems to me that many people would act much more sensibly and seriously if they knew all the problems we are really facing. Furthermore, isn't is our right as American citizens to be exposed to a little more of the truth? By

OCTOBER 15, 1969-OCTOBER 15, 1970

by Patti Shelton

Yesterday came and went–quiatly. How many people remembered that it was one year ago that people all over the U.S. participated in the moratorium for peace?

Whatever your political leanings, if yesterday passed unnoticed in your mind, take a moment now and give a little thought to, or say a prayer for, peace in the world, for the guys in Viet Nam, for your fellow man. Don't let the feeling behind the moratorium exist for only a moment in time, keep it alive here at Maryville.

Dear Fellow Students:

I have a question to propose to you. How many times have you attempted to read an article from one of the periodicals in our library and found it missing? Well Sunday night I was preparing a report for a class and became very discouraged when I looked for two articles on the topic and they had both been torn out of the journals. In the first place who would want the articles? One was entitled "Contemporary Mormons' Attitudes Toward Polygynous Practices," and the other was "Morman and Non-Mormon Divorce Patterns." Both of these articles were in the Journal of Marriage and the Family. In the second place, and this is really more important, who are you to deface property which doesn't belong to you? This is valuable property; if not by monitary standards, it is valuable by educational standards.

I hope all the children who have torn pages and articles from the periodicals and books will grow up. I really feel sorry for you because as far as I'm concerned, it is only little children who don't know better who would do something like this.

Sincerely,
Judy Pike

POLITICAL FOLDOUT

by Patti Shelton and Kathy Meier

Why should students not from Tennessee care who becomes governor? Does it really matter to you whether Albert Gore remains in the Senate or is ousted by congressman Bill Brock? Who are Roger Cowan and John Duncan?

Obviously the resluts of the senatorial and congressional races could have national repercussions. As students on a Tennessee campus it could most definitely be important to you who becomes governor (you know who calls out the old National Guard, don't you?).

Maryville College is located in the 2nd Congressional district, represented by John Duncan, a Republican who toes the party line. In the opposite corner is a challenger Roger Cowan, a Knoxville College political science professor. Polls show that Cowan may have a hard time unseating the firmly entrenched Duncan and this should be an interesting race with two such diametrically opposed candidates.

The gubernatorial race offers two politically inexperienced and relatively young candidates. John Jay Hooker, democrat, is a 40 year old Nashville businessman and lawyer. Winfield Dunn Republican, is a 42 year old dentist from Memphis. Hooker ran for the governor's chair four years ago; Dunn was chairman of the Republican Executive Committee in Shelby County, herein lies the entire political background of both candidates. Thus, in this race the choice would appear to be more between party than issues.

In the senatorial arena the fight is between encumbent Albert Gore and 3rd district representative Bill Brock. Senator Gore, who has been labelled a "peace candidate," is now serving his third term. Representative Brock, heir to the Brock candy fortune, is the favorite son of the Noxon Administration, in this state. Vice-President Agnew appeared in Memphis in August in behalf of the Republican slate and other Republican high-ups have come out for Brock. Meanwhile Senator Gore is making the rounds, covering as much of the state as possible, refuting the accusation that he has "gotten away from the people."

Tennessee's Campaign '70 could be described as the year the GOP is out to break the grip the Democratic party has held in Tennessee for several decades. In future articles we hope to present the issues, the candidates' stands and the campus political organizations and, in short, to conquer political naivete with the Echo foldout.

Meeting: M.C. Chapter – AAUP
Monday, October 19, from 8 to 9 p.m.
Speaker: Dr. Malcolm M. Willey
Topic: A Maryville College Faculty Handbook
Open discussion will follow. All faculty are welcome.

UCM IS RETREATING!

UCM will be retreating next weekend. It will be marshaling its forces for the upcoming year. Will UCM conquer the world? Hardly. What is UCM, anyway? UCM is the University Christian Movement, a group of concerned Christians who want to serve in the world.

Yes, UCM is retreating next weekend, and we invite everyone to come along. We can give you a weekend away from campus amidst the beauty of the mountains. We will be staying in the comfort of Tremont Environmental Center. Transportation and food will be provided. We will leave Friday evening and return on Sunday. The cost is only two dollars.

UCM needs people who have ideas and a desire to help change the world. It needs you.

POSSIBLE DREAM

Groans and laughter can be heard nightly coming from the theater as rehearsals have begun for "Man of la Mancha", which will be presented November 4, 5, and 6.

Mark Mertz, a junior is portraying Don Miguel de Cervantes and Don Quixote, with David Nighbert, senior, portraying Sancho, his valet. Aldonza will be portrayed by Debbie Branch, and the role of Antonia, Quixote's neice, is filled by freshman, Jean Tiffany. The abmoniable Dr. Carrasco will be portrayed by Shep Speare, and junior Howard Welsh portrays the Governor and the Innkeeper.

Rehearsals began a month ago under our director, Mr. Jones, choreographer, Mrs. Cheryl Van Metre, and conductor, Mr. Dan Stallings. They, along with the entire cast have been preparing what will be an outstanding blending of three of the fine arts, drama, dance, and music.

"Man of la Mancha" has been one of the most well known musicals on the Broadway scene for several years since it plumeted to the top with Richard Kiley as Quixote. With this kind of reputation already established for the show, you can be sure we will uphold its quest for the "Impossible Dream."

We feel that you will enjoy our first major production this year as much as we are enjoying bringing it to you.

on race relations with no specific problem to work on might create more tension than it would do good. For this reason they considered this committee, to which they had been appointed, non-existant. Pres. Copeland commented that the basis for the formation of the committee was to establish a better understanding and appreciation of cultures among the students.

A question was raised about the ACC's forthcoming position on secret societies. Ward Brooks assured the group that this would not be any kind of "witch hunt" with lists of names being published. Bob Eickelberg quickly responded that this was good because it would prevent causing embarrassment to certain Council members.

That afternoon the ACC did agree on a statement on secret societies. It reads, "The All-College Council is aware of the existence of secret societies on this campus. We feel that these societies are the antithesis of the philosophy upon which our campus life is based. By definition and direction they exclude themselves from our ideal of an open communtiy. We urge those who would consider affiliation with such organizations to choose instead to invest their time and talent in helping to achieve the goal of true campus communtiy."

Also discussed at the regular ACC afternoon meeting were student enrollment, employment placement services for students, and the terrible loss of library materials. Enrollment is improving and the suggestions made by the researchers last spring are being seriously considered by the Admissions Office. Great distress was voiced about those students doubly deny others access to learning materials through stealing books and magazines which have to be replaced with money that could have been used to buy new books. Please help save our library!!!

SCOTS GAIN THIRD SHUTOUT

The Scots last Saturday shutout Emory & Henry, 12-0 in the annual Homecoming game. The game was dominated by the Scots entirely as both the offense and defense did superb jobs.

The Scots and Wasps engaged in a punting duel for the first quarter and a half. Then the Scots moved down field steadily only to have a holding penalty styme the drive on the 12 yard line. The play Emory & Henry ran was a fumble recovered by C. F. Smith. The Scots absorbed an international grounding call which set the ball on the 24 yard line. From there Joe Costner hit Randy Minor in the end zone for the first score of the game. Hal ferst added the point and it was 7-0.

The second half was all Scots also. They moved the ball well, but penalties hurt their drives. Midway through the fourth quarter Hal Ferst kicked a 22 yard field goal. With a minute left, punter Robert Calloway punted to the Wasps one and Al Bisler on the first play hig QB Mike Fosler for a safety.

The offense looked good with the fine funning of Bill Corbett and the blocking of Dan Blevins and Chuck Cary.

The defense continued to shine. C. F. Smlith, Larry McDowell and George Boronow recovered fumbles, and Mike Butler had an interception. The rest of the defense also did an outstanding job.

MARYVILLE COLLEGE AWARDED

The music department of Maryville College recently received an award from the National Federation of Music Clubs and the American Society of Composers and Publishers. The college was awarded Honorable Mention and the Award of Merit for the performance and promotion of American music.

M.C. was entered in category I: privately supported colleges, universities, or schools of music. In addition to Maryville, two other schools received the award: Oberlin Conservatory of Music, Oberlin, Ohio and Carnegie-Mellon University Music Department, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The awards were issued in August. The panel of judges was led by Robert Pace, chairman of the Department of Music at Teacher's College, Columbia University, New York City. On October 9, the award was presented to Dr. Harry H. Harter, head of the Fine Arts Department, and Dr. Joseph Copland. The presentation was made by Miss Elizabeth Dunn, President of the Tennessee Federation of Music Clubs.

INDEPENDENTS LEAD INTRAMURALS

The Independents by a tough 14-6 win over the Sophomores on Monday are the league leaders.

Thru three quarters the Sophomores lead 6-0, but early in the fourth quarter, QB Bill Cochran moved the Independents down for a score and gaining the extra point. Following a pass interception by Tom Foxx the Independents went down and scored again with Cochran hitting Ron Robertson for the score and then Cochran added the point.

Kappa Phi entered the league last week and were beaten twice, the Sigs beat them 61-0 and the Sophomores did also 41-0.

Tuesday afternoon, the soccer field was the scene of the first rip-roaring soccer game between the two women's societies, Theta Epsilon and Chi Beta.

It was an exciting game with screams, collisions and even some girls limping off the field.

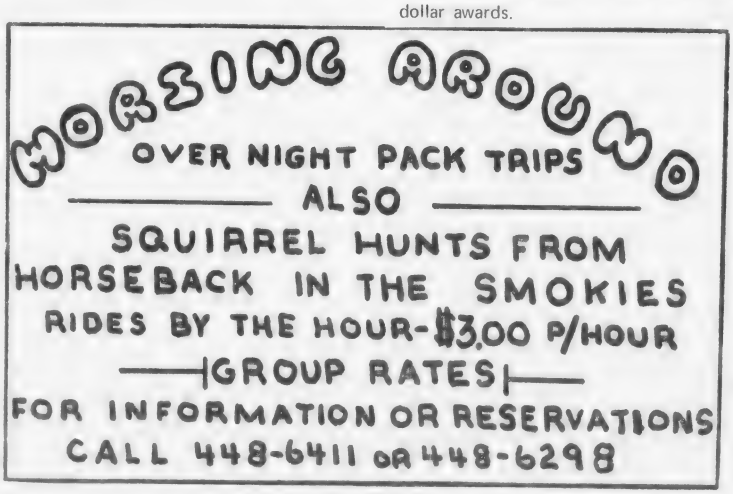
Up until the latter part of the fourth quarter, there was no score.

It was through the effort of Chi Beta's own Sue Jean Bradley, that Chi Beta was able to catch Helen Miller, Theta Epsilon's goalie, off guard and score. This was Sue Jean's second attempt at a free kick taken as the result of a penalty against Theta.

With thirty seconds remaining in the game, Theta tried to make a come back, but were unsuccessful. Chi Beta defeated Theta Epsilon 1-0 with the one kicked earlier by Sue Jean Bradley.

CONGRADULATIONS CHI BETA!!

The next soccer game is Thursday with Theta vs. Chi Beta.



Don't forget Chi Beta--Pride goes before a fall!

GOING TO EASTERN STATE???

by Linda Dimmick

Every Tuesday night, a group of students will be traveling to Eastern State Hospital in Knoxville. This is a service project which is sponsored by Chi Beta, and now is being opened to the entire campus. At Eastern State Hospital, the students will be acting under the direction of Jan Taylor who is in charge of the recreation program. On each Tuesday night, students will be participating in activities at the Lonas Hall Recreation Hall and in a community-sing at the Pearsons Recreation Hall. If anyone is interested in participating in this project, please contact:

Linda Dimmick, Box 2700 or Caroline Munn, Box 2460

This is quite a rewarding experience! It means a great deal to these people to have us come, and gives each of us the opportunity to share a part of our life with them. We leave from Pearsons Parking lot at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday night. Everyone is invited to participate!

HARP SINGERS HERE ON SUNDAY

If you have a curious bone in your body, you should check out a rare event on campus this weekend. The Knox County Old Harp Singers will be holding forth in the chapel colonnade beginning at 1:30 p.m. on Sunday. The atmosphere of a "sing" is very informal. The singers sit around in a circle and take turns leading songs. Anyone can join in, lead, listen, or drop in for a few minutes. There's no accompaniment, but considerable foot tapping, so ability is no prerequisite.

The Old Harp Singers preserve and enjoy a type of music which was sung through most of the 19th century. It takes its name from a hymnal, The Sacred Harp, which was first published in 1844. The music is sung in four voice parts with the melody in the tenor. Many of the tunes are old English, Irish and Scottish folk songs which were adapted to religious use during "the great awakening" on the frontier of the U. S. Historically this music represents a freeing of church music from the rigid strictures of the Calvinist psalm tune tradition.

The music is written in shape notes, a different shape of note for each step of the scale. A tune is first sung through using the do-re-mi syllalbes, and then the words are sung.

The southern appalachian area is the only place where this type of singing survives, and it will not survive long even here. So it's a unique experience, as well as good fun. Drop by on Sunday and see for yourself.

HAPPENINGS ON "THE HILL"

by Linda Lou Blomeke

The University of Tennessee, whose main branch is located in Knoxville, is served by the Student Government Association in a much different way than Maryville students are served by the All College Council. The difference between the two is that where the S. G. A. is formed completely by students, the All College Council is made up of both students and faculty. The Echo thought that it would be interesting to find out just what is happening on the UT campus and with what issues the S. G. A. is concerning itself.

The U. T. Board of Trustees has decided upon a closed campus policy, which will keep non-students off the campus. Many of the students are angry about this resolution. Some feel that the Board has established this policy in order to gain popularity with residents of East Tennessee who feel that "long-hairs" should be kept off the campus. Since there is so much disagreement with the closed campus policy, the S. G. A. is calling for a campus wide referendum to determine the general opinion of the issue. John Smith, the Student Government Association President, is taking U. T. to court to contest the constitutionality of the resolution and to get a completely open campus established.

Another resolution was passed along with the closed polity, authorizing random checks of I. D. cards. Apparently this has so far been in effect only at the Student Center. It has been noticed that the check is not truly random and that they check only those people who look suspicious because of their personal appearance.

A new differential housing plan will allow all women students, including girls who are under 21 but have parental consent, to be eligible for open hours. The S. G. A. wants to progress to no restrictions for girls who have the approval of their parents.

Academic reform is being called for at UT, and the Student Government is trying to obtain this reofrm. Students want to get rid of mandatory counseling. They want regular evaluation of teachers by students and hope to keep the library open all night. Some progress has already been made in trying to eliminate the Physical Education requirement. It is also felt that the University newspaper, The Beacon, should be run without censorship or faculty review.

The relationship between the students and faculty at the University of Tennessee leaves much to be desired. The students feel that the Board of Trustees is not communicative and that the students do not have a big enough voice in important matters. The S. G. A. is trying to help this situation by getting students on committees responsible for university affairs. The students and faculty are going to have to unite together and discuss problems before anything will be done to ease the tension on the UT campus.

CONCERT TONIGHT

Tonight the Maryville College-Community Orchestra will present its first concert of the 1970-71 season.

The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Lee Kull will present a varied program which should please all tastes. Included in the program will be the Andalucia Suite by Lecuona, which contains the famous "Malaguena," the Introduction to Act III of "Lohengrin" by Wagner, and the Great Gate of Kiev, from "Pictures at an Exhibition" by Moussorgsky.

The concert will be given at 8:15 p.m. in Wilson Chapel and is absolutely free of charge.

DEBATERS IN FLORIDA

Maryville College debate team is at the University of Florida in Gainesville to participate in the Gator Invitational Tournament. It began yesterday and will continue until tomorrow.

The affirmative team is composed of Jim Priesmeyer a freshman from Delray Beach, Florida and Kevin Russell a freshman from Colts Neck, New Jersey.

Mike Montgomery a junior from Knoxville and Mack Garner a senior from Maryville make up the negative team.

Alternates are Stuart Smith, Bob Cox, Cari Peeples and Judy Andrews.

WHERE WERE YOU?

LAST WEDNESDAY AT 10:30 a.m. IN THE THEATRE

A town meeting was held last Wednesday shortly after CIV. Approximately 50 people were present-- but were you? An announcement had been made by Dr. Willey during CIV.

Often one wonders what it really takes to get people interested and moving. This is not just my campus, or the fifty people at the meeting, but it is yours too! Did you realize that?

There are still knots in the line of communication--sure! But as Mary Ellen Barr and Ethel Ann Scruggs told of their experiences abroad, there are still experiences here today on the MC campus!

"There are people to meet and places to go." Hopefully, this can be done through the ACC, and each faculty and each student member of this campus taking action--move yourselves out! Show you really care. If you have complaints, voice them! Learn what goes on in the ACC, or in confrontations with the Board.

Remember: "There are people to meet and places to go."

WE NEED YOU!!

Watch for the next ACC town meeting.

KENT STATE

One week ago today a special Ohio State Grand Jury indicted 25 persons in connection with the rioting last May and at the same time exonerated National Guard troops who fired on students at Kent State. We agree with the report in a number of areas: (1) The M-1 rifles are not suited for campus duty, (2) Non-lethal weapons should be made available to the Guard, (3) the university administration fostered an attitude of laxity, over-indulgence and permissiveness with its students and faculty to the extent that it can no longer regulate the activities of either. . . (4) The campus police force is totally inadequate to perform the functions of a law enforcement agency, and (5) it is apparent that an apathetic university community has allowed a vocal minority to seize control of the university campus. This will continue until such time as the citizens, university administration, faculty and students take a strong stand against the radical element bent on violence.

MORATORIUMS AND DESTRUCTION

An obvious lack of political activity such as moratoriums, demonstrations, bombings, etc, is apparent to even the most casual observer. This appears to be a calculated effort on behalf of the "left" to keep from alienating the general voting public. Some respect that was held for the left is now lost because of these seeming efforts to hide their true colors until after Nov. 3. Why can't there be an honest presentation of political philosophy.

DOGS

A large number of people are becoming quite disgusted by the continued presence of dogs in the dining hall, the dorms, and the classrooms. The dogs in the cafeteria must be a flagrant disregard of health regulations (they have bare feet) and can be quite a nuisance if one happens to be allergic to and hates dogs. Somebody—please do something!!

CIV

This week's CIV was quite a change of pace from the lively presentation by Ethel Ann Scruggs and Mary Ellen Barr. It appeared that for some strange reason the attention span of most students was about 5 minutes this week. I can't figure out why. Did the thundering applause at the end mean that we enjoyed the address. . .or that we were glad it was over?

CONSUMPTION COMMENTS

by Ken Smalley

Much has been said lately about Maryville College's drinking problem and the disciplinary action taken in reference to it. Who decided what form of punishment should be handed out for violation of the rule on drinking? Why wasn't such policy arrived at through the channels of the Judicial Council? What exactly is to be expected if one is found to be violating the school's policy on drinking? Following are some of the "official" answers to some of these questions.

During the first three weeks of classes this year, the administration felt that the drinking problem developed at a much greater speed and to a much greater extent than in years past. It was decided that some type of action needed to be taken immediately, especially due to the numerous and rather obvious violations of the college's policy, involving at least one personal injury.

The administration, along with the head residents and house mothers consequently decided on the course of action presently in effect: If anyone is caught possessing and/or consuming alcoholic beverages on the Maryville College campus, he is to be fined up to fifty dollars and put on a twenty-four hour notification of dismissal. In addition, if one is discovered doing something else in violation of any other rule, not necessarily drinking, within the twenty-four hour period, one may still be dismissed.

These rules and regulations were not set-up by the Judicial Council because, at the time the action needed to be taken, the Council was not a functioning body. When the Judiciary does begin to function, it will have the right to review all the decisions of the administration and may make revisions and changes, or may instigate new rules. All the work of the Judicial Council is further subject to approval by the All College Council.

WANTED: Transportation to Eastern State Hospital.
PLEASE CONTACT: Linda Dimmick, Box 2700 if you can volunteer your car.

FOOTBALL

Even if the defense isn't officially number one this week in the NCAA, I guarantee you that we know that they are still the best around! The test of a good team is that it can pick itself up after a disappointing loss. Let's serve Centre college for lunch on Sunday!

ON THE WEATHER

Weathermen, weathermen way up in the sky,
why are you so much like birds dropping waste down in my eye?

And now you'll show your pageantry and pomp in fine forms that you learned so well from those you hate. . .my friend you hate.

What quicker way to devastate the faith and hope you wnat to make in your new country of the world,
United States of Fate?

The war machine and politics, pious hypocrites and such,
are all engrained in systems that crush or build or make one nil.

There was a time, I'm sure there was,
you must have tried to understand this thing that's called establishment, the red-eyed drunkard with no sense.

You, as fly, tiny and naive, must fling the mammouth off its ass by tingling bells of bombs in ears to make it hear at last.

A bloody christ you feign to be,
but neighborgood bully is all to see, who hides his hurt in shrouds concealing a maze of pain and tender feeling.

Before revolt or afterwards, the time is now who knows his hands.
Tread lightly on eggshell cinders that put themselves together again.

LETTERS

Dear Editor,

Undoubtedly the All-College Council is aware of the apathy on campus as are the members of the college community itself. It is my opinion that the major cause is from lack of communication and interest among the student body. However, when someone in the community is interested in some particular aspect of the activities offered, his chances of becoming informed of them are slim, thus discouraging any previous interests. As a freshman, I have been interested in becoming a member of some committee of the ACC. I have combed over every bulletin board on campus and have yet to find information on the committees pertaining to the recruiting of members and function. If this is an example of the efficiency of the government on campus, I'm not so sure I want to become part of it. THAT—is apathy.

'SINGING IS BETTER THAN ANY DOPE'

'Singing is Better than Any Dope' was written by Hubert Saal and published in the October 19, 1970 issue of Newsweek Magazine on pp. 124 and 125. It is reprinted with teh hope that if Janis and Jimi "spoke" to you in life, their message in death will come across too.

Janis Joplin sang the blues, a black man's music, even though she was white, because she was born with ready-made grief inside her. No matter how she tried, no matter what the anodyne, she could not quiet her devils. One song she sang summed up her life: the "Kozmic Blues."

She was something to see and hear. She couldn't have held back if she tried. "I'd rather not sing than sing quiet," she said. She sounded her barbaric yawp into a mike plugged into the world. She never hesitated to sacrifice the beautiful tone for the raw power of emotion, for the animal sounds that accompanied the animal sensual grace of her passionate body. Visibly flesh, she came across as pure feeling. "Look at me, man," she once said. "I'm selling my heart."

At least the stage channeled her abandon. "Singing is better than any dope," she said. But offstage her appetites went unchecked, for alcohol and men and fast cars. "Whatever you need get it now," she used to say. "The other way you end up old and who needs it?" She never sang anything she didn't feel. The lyrics of one song on her unfinished album go: "A woman left lonely/Will grow tired of waiting/She'll do crazy things/On lonely occasions." Last week in a Los Angeles motel littered with liquor bottles she was found dead at 27 from an overdose of heroin. Drugs had proved, if not better, stronger than singing.

Less than three weeks before, the brilliantly original blues guitarist Jimi Hendrix died a miserable death, choking on his own vomit in a London hotel after taking nine sleeping pills. There were striking parallels between Janis and Jimi, even if she was female and white and he was male and black. They were both 27, and they had achieved sudden prominence together at the now-legendary Monterey Pop Festival in 1967. Hendrix also embodied sexualty on stage- he could play his guitar between his legs, with his teeth, flat on his back, kissing, caressing and sometimes in the end smashing it to smithereens. He could also play it straight, flying fingers venting a surrealistic imagination, never more effective than when he closed the Woodstock Festival with an anguished version of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Destruction: Peter Townshend of The Who, the originator of guitar-playing destruction and, like Hendrix, an innovator in electronic effects, says, "He took what I was doing and turned it into music." Both Townshend and the great Eric Clapton freely acknowledge the brilliance of Hendrix. "From the time I met him," Clapton says, "my music changed incredibly." Like Janis, Hendrix offstage bounded from person to person, from excess to excess. Ultimately, the most tragically significant thing the two had in common was a reliance on narcotics as a way of life–and death. Wrote Hendrix in one song: "Purple Haze, all in my eyes/Don't know if it's day or night/Is it tomorrow or just the end of time?"

Who's next? Who else is good at handling drugs until he isn't good at it? Noel Redding, Hendrix's bass player, admits he is into drugs. "It's an escape from the hangers-on," he says. "And big success means no rest, do a gig, make a plane, do a press conference, make a recording. I've been involved in every sort of drug." So has Pete Townshend, who says: "They stopped my life, destroyed my adolescence. They're the worst things on the planet. Musicians like Hendrix, trying to find themselves spiritually, live in a world of cities and crowds. With drugs you can be in the middle of the action and a hundred miles away. But the real effect is to neutralize life."

Such great jazz musicians as Charlie Parker and Bud Powell took refuge in drugs from a world indifferent to their genius, hostile to their race. But pop performers today are rich and famous. Says Clapton, "The bigger you are, the more pressures, the more loneliness, the more fear." Bill Graham, rock impresario of Fillmores East and West, says: "Success comes too quickly and too richly to handle. Neither Janis nor Jimi ever knew failure or ever really struggled. How could they handle success? Did Liz Taylor ever perform before 20,000 or 50,000 live people?" The worst part is that the country's youth, emulating their performing idols, think it's a gas or a blow to the Establishment to smoke pot or drop acid or even mainline heroin. Says Graham: "They haven't got the guts to do something about the world they put down. So they get stoned and hope when they awake things will be different."

Death: Janis Joplin's manager, Albert Grossman, who also numbers Bob Dylan among his clients, prefers to draw a distinction between hard drugs of the heroin family and other drugs which, he suggests, "can be helpful when used by a mature person. Heroin is a form of death," he says. "Society only confuses people by failing to make the difference clear." But an eminent psychiatrist and narcotics authority condemns even non-addictive marijuana which, he says, "since it is a hallucinogen, can interfere with judgment." LSD, he says, is especially dangerous to latent schizophrenics–it can lead to suicide. Barbiturates are, in this doctor's scale, just below heroin and other hard drugs in riskiness: "They're very addicting, have side effects, and can cause severe withdrawal symptoms."

Janis Joplin was cremated last week and her ashes scattered along the Pacific. She leaves behind a contradictory recollection of an aggressively shy, coarsely sweet, belligerently vulnerable child-woman, not pretty, but beautiful when she sang, who even after years of practice still tripped over the obscenities tumbling from her mouth, who wore jangling bracelets, kooky dresses and floppy hats, and who almost literally sang her heart out as fervently as any black woman from the Mississippi Delta.

Superstar: Janis's friends called her Pearl. She liked that. She thought it was closer to what she was. She'd had no choice in her name when she was born in Port Arthur, Texas. "In high school, do you know they once threw things at me in the hall? I don't know why. I was strange, sure. It was like the whole environment turned on me, as if the trees said, go home. They hurt me in Port Arthur." She got out and made her way eventually to San Francisco during the incredible beginnings of the great acid-rock groups. Then she sang "Ball and Chain" at Monterey–where Jimi Hendrix set fire to his guitar–and she was suddenly in one great incandescence a superstar. She played the part, overeating, overdressing, overdrinking, overeverything. "I love being a star more than life itself," she said.

Janis liked it when someone wrote how sexy her breasts were. "She'd been called many things," says a friend, "but never desirable. Before, she was kind of a pig, never bathed or dressed. Now she was like a little girl playing dress up, crying out to be pretty, to be loved."

"Have you ever been loved?" she asked a friend after a concert in Michigan. "I haven't. I only feel it on stage. I'm going to write a song about making love to 25,000 people in a concert and then going back to my room alone." Sensitive and smart, she was in a fundamental sense anti-intellectual. "You can fill your life up with ideas and go home alone," she said. "When I sing, I'm just feeling that love and lust and warm-touching thing inside your body that everybody digs."

POLITICAL FOLDOUT

by Kathy Meier & Patti Shelton

This week we will explore the issues that challenge the senatorial candidates: Senator Albert Gore and Congressman Bill Brock. In a news release, dated October 5, Brock gave his support to President Nixon's strong anti-crime proposals. Among measures Brock favored were: fire arm legislation, court reform, and prison reform. Brock also came out strongly against drug abuse on campuses and pornography which "pollutes our mailboxes."

In announcing his candidacy for the Senate, Congressman Brock stated that he has fought hard against inflation and backed President Nixon's peace-with-honor proposals. Congressman Brock's stated reason for entering the race is because he believes in the people and principles of America."

"Peace" is a major issue in the Senate race. Congressman Brock's stand on this momentous issue is clearly defined: "In May or 1970 Congressman Bill Brock voted against resolutions which would have tied the hands of our President and of American troops now engaged in the defense of freedom in Southeast Asia." In fact his voting record shows 100% approval of the Republican Party line.

Senator Gore's voting record is his biggest weapon and worst enemy. Gore has been labled a leftist, however, the Committee for Constitutional Government ranks Gore as "conservative" on his voting record. Of interest to Tennesseans is Gore's fight to raise the amount of the exemption on Federal income tax which he accomplished almost single handedly. His voting record shows him to be an opponent of busing and a big business take-over of T. V. A. On the aye side of his voting record are; the support of Medicare, Medicade, and a boost in Social Security. Senator Gore has not always followed his party's line; he supported Senator George McGovern for President in 1968. During the campaigns of Adlai Stevenson '56 and John Kennedy '60, Senator Gore was seriously considered for the V-P. On the all-important issue of peace Senator Gore's position is well known. He has been an outspoken advocate of efforts at descalation.

"Bill Brock believes"–here's a sample:

> The real strength of our land lies in the people–in a prayerful mother, a devoted husband, a starry-eyed young girl. . .

Senator Albert Gore also believes. He believes in representing the common people, the taxpayer, the working man, and the ordinary citizen and 'not the chosen few'."

SCOTS HANDED SECOND LOSS

The Scots ventured to Ashland, Va. last Saturday and were defeated by Randolph-Macon, 34-12. Wayne Duncan was the star for R-M scoring three touchdowns, one on a 61 yard punt return.

In the first quarter Duncan scored on a four yard run and then, Decker, the quarterback, passed to Tolon for the two point conversion.

In the second quarter, the Scots scored when defensive end Paul Lefkowitz recovered a blocked punt in the end zone. The pass for two points was incomplete.

The third quarter saw each team scoring once. Following a fumble on the kick-off, R-M scored on an eighteen yard run by Duncan. Following the kickoff Joe Costner hit Ricky White with an 80 yard bomb to make the score 14-12. Again the pass failed in the attempt for the extra points.

The fourth quarter was all R-M. Don Hill broke free and went 37 yards to score to make the score 20-12. After R-M held the Scots, they punted and Duncan gathered it in on the 39 yard line and proceeded to go 61 yards for a touchdown. Later in the quarter Jeff Morris caught a short punt and ran it back 43 yards for a score. The extra points were converted and the score was 34-12.

In Saturday's game Fullback Tim Payne suffered a broken wrist. Quarterback Joe Costner received a shoulder injury and his condition for Saturday's game is doubtful. If Costner cannot go, Steve Gorden, a junior, will be in charge of the Scots offense.

This week the Scots go to Danville, Ky. to play Centre College. Next week the Scots return home to play Millsaps at 2:30.

THETA MAKES COME BACK

by Nancy Thompson

Thursday October 16 at 3:45 p.m., Theta Epsilon and Chi Beta met on the soccer field for the second soccer game of the season.

Theta's strength rallied forward, as the front line's great speed overwhelmed Chi Beta's team. Through some swift juggling of the ball, Theta was able to make the only score for the game, defeating Chi Beta 2-0!

Congratulations Theta Epsilon! Player of the week—Beth Kell—for her excellent maneuver of the ball.

Come out and cheer your team on!!

Excerpts from "The Renewal of Nationhood," the Baccalaureate Address delivered June 14, 1970 by Dr. Alan Geyer Editor of the Christian Century.

submitted by Scott Thompson

"No universtiy in America can have a routine commencement this year. Our nation is more divided in spirit, more broken in its relationships, than at any time since the Civil War. This brokenness is felt more painfully on and about our university campuses than anywhere else—except perhaps in the black ghettos of our cities.

"There is no religious faith worth having which does not speak directly on this brokenness among our people and in the world at large.

"We are. . . caught between. . . generations which have sullied the very word 'patriotism' with chauvinistic bigotry and a rising generations which is increasingly annoyed by the very symbols of national identity.

"If I have a main theme today, it is that there is no shortcircuiting the imperative of creating a new and more humane nationalism in America—not by flaunting the flag or by lpretending that nations don't count for anything any more.

"Pulling this nation together now calls for resources of mind and soul which no campus, no church, no community, no person or group, no political party or movemetn, no court chaplains in the White House can trifle over if they are to touch the depths of our brokenness.

"We sorrow now, as we must, over 50,000 American deaths and hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of Asian deaths in the futile Indo-China war. We morn the toll at Kent State, Jackson State, Augusta. But the bloody violence began with efforts to dispossess and exterminate Indian peoples, moved on to the enslavement of black Africans, ro violent revolution, to a national anthem which glories in the glare of rockets and the burst of bombs in the night and a religion of conquest, to civil war, to frontier lawlessness, to vigilante executions, to imperial adventures in Latin America and the Pacific, to world wars to atomic bombs, to assassinations, to organized crime, to urban chaos, to police riots, to napalm and anti-personnel weapons.

"I do not defend any act of violence by raging students or desperate young blacks much less by delinquents in police or National Guard uniforms- but what hypocrisy it is to pretend that violence has been invented in this generation and is somehow an unAmerican betrayal of our history! H. Rap Brown is too tragically correct in observing that 'violence is as American as cherry pie.'

"If we are ever to break this vicious circle of violence, it is not by supposing that our past is to be remembered in tranquility. It is to recognize that generation after generation of young Americans have been raised and nurtured in a culture saturated with violence.

"There is a very precious term in the British political vocabulary: the 'Loyal Opposition.' How quick we are to assume in American political dialogue, that opposition is dis-loyal- that the only proof of loyalty in times of crisis is to agree with government policy or to rally around the President.

"Freedom is always in peril, always partial at best, always painfully to be struggled for by men and women who love freedom enough to pursue it all their lives.

"Freedom requires a sustained involvement in politics. The distressing thing about the scorn for politics by some college students these days is that they sound so much like their parents who don't want to get contaminated by politics—either because their sentimental religiosity won't allow it, or because it has long been the silly prejudice of our business civilization to view government and politics as the most sordid evils, or because they are much too preoccupied wtih their private worlds of self-indul gence.

"Fortunately for all of us, the turmoil of the past six weeks on our campuses has led to a renewal of political seriousness on the part of thousands of students. The churches of the land ought to shout 'Hallelujah!' and tell their people to join in the politics of peace and racial justice throughout 1970 and beyond.

"In all of these tasks of reconstructing freedom, the churches are called to share the burdens of nationhood.

"Where churches do these things, we need not worry too much about their evangelical power to attract the younger generation. But this generation has become a plumbline for the testing of authenticity in the Christian faith.

"It seems appropriate to end a baccalaureate sermon, of all sermons, not with an answer but with a question:

"Is there enough faith, enough aspiration, enough love in all of us to create an American of authentic liberty and justice for all?

"Is there?"

for a new Dean. During the recent Board meeting on campus, The Board's Panel on Purpose and Program met with an Advisory Committee comprised of community representatives of the faculty and students, to outline procedures for the hiring of a permanent Dean. The representatives were Mrs. Schoen, Dr. Stine, Dr. Lewis, Linda Ballard, Lloyd Kramer, and Dana Rothey.

Since the first meeting, the committee has drafted a formal announcement of the existing Administrative vacancy which is to be disseminated to professional agencies, friends of the College, Alumni, and various other sources of applicants. The committee felt it was necessary to specify in outline form, Professional and Personal Qualifications the community would consider necessary for a future Dean to possess. The committee has after drafting these documents met with the President of the College, the Department Heads, the faculty, and the ACC so that a consensus of opinion could be expressed. Copies of these documents are posted on campus, and the committee invites discussion pertaining to them.

So that all possible sources of applicants be investigated, forms, with minimal information requirements, are now available at the Printing Office desk, for the community's convenience in submitting applicant's names for consideration by the Advisory Committee. Responses should be given to Dr. Stine or Dana Rothey, the Advisory Committee's co-chairmen.

VETERANS BENEFITS

Maryville veterans were notified by the Veterans Administration that they should have heard from the VA by now.

Veterans should have either received theri first check or a notice saying that their checks will be starting.

"If you haven't yet 'got the word,' start checking," the VA advised Maryville veterans.

First, the veteran should check with the school registrar's office to be sure that office has forwarded his certificate of Enrollment to the VA. The VA cannot legally send a check until it receives this form.

If the certificate has been sent, the veteran should check promptly with the nearest VA office.

The VA also cautioned Maryville veterans to let the VA know immediately if they have made any change which affects the amount of their VA check, such as a change in the number of dependents or dropping courses.

To keep checks coming regularly, the VA advised all college veterans to report any change of address to the Post Office as well as to VA.

LIGGIN COMES TO MC

New to the college community this year is Rev. Carl Liggen, pastor of St. Paul's African Methodist Episcopal Church in Alcoa. Mr. Liggin is the in-class coordinator for the Black Studies course and also co-sponsor of the interim, "Toward Racial Understanding."

Working primarily in the Alcoa community, Mr. Liggin takes time to serve as a link between MC and the larger community. Also, he is perhaps the closest thing yet to a black professor at Maryville.

One of Rev. Liggin's primary interests at Maryville is the interim "Toward Racial Understanding." Here, students will have the unique opportunity of living in the Blount area with a family of another race. Black participants will live in white homes, while white students will stay primarily with the parishoners of St. Paul's Church.

While being loosely structured, the interim will incorporate observation of social agencies, schools, and federal programs. Auditing of classes at Knoxville College is another feature of the program. The middle of the day is expected to be an inactive period concentrating on research. During evenings and weekends, students will get to know their family.

What results will this project have? Rev. Liggin states his goals: "We hope to develop activists to realize the American dream and make democracy a reality."

Home for Mr. Liggin is Louisville, Ky. He was educated in the local all-black schools. Later, he attended Tuskegee Institute, Kentucky State, and Wilberforce University. In 1950, Rev. Liggin was ordained a minister in the AME Church after attending Paine Theological Seminary. Since then, he has been both a minister and educator in the black community. As the first black, male teacher in the Clarksville, Tennessee, school system, he helped initiate schools and day-care centers. Coupled with an active interest in civil rights, Rev. Liggin has studied in recent years at UT, in Chicago on a Ford grant, and expects another such grant to study the Boston School system.

SENATE CONTROL

As the November 3 election comes upon us we would like to make a couple of final observations. As we all know there has been an executive push by the President and Vice-President to get their kind of men into the Senate. President Nixon would like the luxury of having a Republican and therefore supposedly co-operative Senate.

However, it is our feeling that what the President should really want, and maybe he does and just doesn't tell anyone about it, is a few gains in the number of "conservative" members and not control of the Senate by Republicans. If the Republicans should gain control it would mean a change in the powerful positions of the committee chairman. Let's take a look at a few and see how Republicans could hurt the President.

The Foreign Relations Committee's chairman J. William Fulbright has been a continual thorn to a number of past presidents. But I'm sure that it is more convenient for Nixon to have his opposition from the other party than his own. Senator George Aiken of Vermont is the ranking Republican on that committee and would inherit the chairmanship. Aiken is also an opponent of the Vietnam war and other aspects of Nixon foreign policy.

Margaret Chase Smith would replace John Stenis if the Republicans gained control, as the chairman of the Armed Services Committee. Senator Stennis has been a friend to the present administration and some would see his replacement as a great loss.

Other Republican chairmen would include Jacob K. Javits and John Sherman Cooper. These Senators have hardly been Nixon men, and would replace some Southern Democrats who are usually labeled as Conservatives.

So it appears that the best thing that could happen to Nixon would be to gain enough seats to give him strong influence, but not control of the Senate.

To the Editor,

Well it finally happened. Anderson Hall was entered and "occupied" on the morning of Monday, the 26th of October, 1970. The liberation of Anderson's hallowed halls lasted only a few short hours but I'm sure that for all involved it was a most meaningful experience. Some arrived (I am told) as early as 4:30 A.M. to take up their liberating ? vigil.

What does it all mean? Has the student body finally felt the overpowering need to assume a more meaningful position in the administration and affairs of Maryville College? Hell, no! It was only Interim Registration—and first to come are first to be served as is usual practice. So there they stood or sat or laid and waited to be served or serve themselves to their share of goodies in the upcoming interim. How many of those students sat there for how long in how many different areas of Anderson Hall only to see (as reports have it) from 2 to 5 to 30 people slip into line ahead of them in some other part of the building. Is this the most efficient and fair way that we can determine our course of study for the interim project?

ALTERNATIVES:

1. Upperclass preference and all cards to be registered by a certain date.
2. Random drawing and placing after cards are collected.
3. Expansion of those interims that are desirable to most students and elimination of those that appeal to virtually none. (The excess faculty members could be used to help in larger groups—it wouldn't hurt some of the faculty to get outside their major field for a little while each year. Who knows, they might even enjoy it.)

No, I don't have the answer, I don't even have fairly plausible alternatives. I'm just tired of seeing the student forced to assert himself as "the nigger" for unfair and unsatisfying results.

Respectfully submitted,
Charles Schwartz

by Debbie Branch

In approximately four weeks we will begin what we have all been looking forward to—Interim. If a student does not want Interim for an exchange of ideas, he wants it for a change from monotony. If he is not looking forward to taking a special subject, he is hoping for a unique opportunity. Apparently, all this excitement, enthusiasm, and hopefulness is dying down; that is, unless you happen to be one of the lucky people to have been granted one of your first three choices. In such a case as yours it is well worth waiting in line from maybe 2:00 A.M. until 8:00. By 7:00 the line was zig-zagging up through the 3rd floor. Oh, well—so the early bird catches the worm. But what "worms" that were left were just that, worms! If one is interested in Spanish Drama or Byron and Shelley, fine. If not, too bad. Or, what if he would have chosen the Appalachia Interim, had it not been for the required $40 or more?

Obviously, there is something dreadfully wrong with our Interim system. First of all, all we need for the beginning of such proof is the registration line. It began at 2:00 A.M.! Is it not clear what teachers have the best Interim choices? I am not attempting to distinguish the better teachers, but mean that the teachers with the best Interim subjects succeeded in student involvement where others barely did or came in at the bottom.

I ask, why must Interim courses be so exclusive? Teacher-student relationship is important, but I'm sure more students can be handled in an "S-U" grading system. Why, then, is it impossible to do something similar to this: 1. give out interim booklets and have students evaluate these particular subjects on a special form at registration. 2. according to this evaluation, pick the msot popular Interims (at least one Interim from each department). 3. drop courses students are least interested in. 4. have the teachers whose Interim courses were not approved of as greatly to join other teachers in their succesful courses. (A speech teacher, for instance, could join a English Interim, or an art teacher could explain to a history class why certain art was valuable in various centuries.)

Only when Interim is based more on equality will it become more totally effective an appreciated. Let's get together and make it happen, particularly if you don't wish to be disatisfied again next year!

Dear Editor,

I can't help feeling that there was something awry in your editorial "Moratoriums and Destruction." First of all I don't care for your general classification which covers riots, violent demonstrations and peaceful moratoriums. Believe it or not there are sincere people who believe in peacefully demonstrating and are as much against violence as you.

You also stated that respect for the Left was lost because they had cooled things for the election. I would think that, if anything, this would disprove that the Left is irresponsible. It is time now for careful consideration and helping candidates who can and will work for peace and individual freedom is well worth usblimating some of the many frustrations we are faced with. It would seem that respect is in order for a group which can come together and work from within to accomplish solid goals.

An honest presentation of political philosophy is before you—here, at U-T on many campuses, It may not be what you want to hear—but it exists.

Dear Editor:

Last week I wrote an article for the Echo. It was about the newly instituted punishments for infractions of the Maryville College drinking policy. An edited version of my article appeared in the Echo. There were two mistakes in the article. The first mistake was due to a misinterpretation of information on my part. The rules were made by administration and two head residents who were directly involved with the problem. Housemothers had nothing to do with the present rules. The second mistake is due to a poor job of editing on someone's part. Twenty four [hour] notification of dismissal does not mean that you are only in trouble for 24 hours, as implied by the edited article. It does mean, if you are caught violating a college regulation, you can be dismissed—and given 24 hours to leave.

Probably a part of the reason for the misunderstanding was due to fact that I was forced to get my information from someone outside the administration. I had an appointment with Dean Elia to obtain the facts firsthand. The appointment was made 2 days in advance. I waited 40 minutes—the dean never bothered to show up.

APATHY, Maryville College style is —When a group of TV watchers are too addicted to the tube to support their team a ¼ mile away.

—When only ? attend a town meeting.

—When a decent rock band on campus plays for only two dozen interested listeners, not dancers.

—When "jocks" have to entertain themselves by stoning people minding their own business.

THE GHOST

POLITICAL FOLDOUT

by Kathy Meier and Patti Shelton

As we stated in the first appearance of the Foldout, the gubernatorial race is not so much based on issues as on attempts by the Republican party to break up the Democratic monopoly of the Tennessee government. With both candidates approximately equal in experience and voicing many of the same opinions, the election shapes up as somewhat of a personality contest. One point in Winfield Dunn's favor is that he is not a hand-picked administration candidate. On Democrat John Jay Hooker's side is the fact that he has run before and is somewhat more familiar with the workings of the state.

The importance of the gubernatorial race to students can't be denied, yet neither of the candidates have given statements which would pin them down on the issue of campus unrest. In fact both campaigns have been fairly low-key.

On the other hand, the congressional race is anything but low-key. The newest development in this race is the possibility of a libel suit being brought against Congressman John Duncan because of certain allegations concerning his opponents's (Roger Cowan-D) private life. This entire campaign has been characterized by excessive mud-slinging.

According to the voting record of Congressman Duncan, he has been against educational improvements such as Head Start program and Job Corps. Cowan is an avowed supporter of these measures. But the incumbent congressman is popular in the 2nd District and has supported many measures benefiting his constituents. Cowan proclaims himself as a teacher who understands the nature of politics rather than a politician. On the matter of campus unrest, Duncan believes in a firm hand ruling our colleges and universities. Cowan says that he believes that the gap between students and administration should be bridged.

On the whole, Cowan has shown a much more liberal attitude and this has gained him a great deal of studnet support. On our campus Carole Christopherson and Allan Childs head a Cowan/Gore interest group. Dr. Wallace Lewis is a large part of the Cowan campaign in Blount County. Mary McCord is the MC liason with the Knoxville Backers of Gore and Cowan. There appears to be no Republican organization representative at MC.

Up until Tuesday, campaign's reach fever pitch—if you want to do some last minute work for the groups mentioned, contact Carole Christofferson. At any rate—if you believe in a candidate, believe enough to get out and work for him!

Dear Editor:

This is in regard to the article about Dogs that was printed in the last issue. From talking to many of our fellow students, we have come to the conclusion that Dogs and Puppies are of the necessity to make this community get on up. As far as the health issue is concerned, we solemnly swear to take a shower per week and wear shoes in the cafeteria every Sunday. Let's keep the Dogs on campus. Power to the Dogs.

FIRST STATEWIDE BLACK PARTY ORGANIZING IN ALABAMA

(CPS)—The fall election in Alabama will introduce a new but firmly organized and independent political party into the electoral arena. The National Democratic Party of Alabama (NDPA), the first Black statewide political party in American, is waging a political campaign of over one hundred seventy candidates. These candidates span the entire spectrum from governor to court surrogate.

The NDPA slate is headed by Dr. John L. Cashin, gubernatorial candidate and Issaih Hayes, candidate for Lieutenant Governor. The NDPA was officially inaugurated in 1968 when it challenged the established machine at the Chicago convention. It has been continually expanded its ranks from that initiation until it was able to realistically challenge the strong political organization that supports George Wallace.

Dr. Chasin is presently a practicing dentist with a very respected practice covering a large number of citizens throughout the state. But he has continually sacrificed his practice in order to coordinate his political and civil rights activities.

In addition to the large number of candidates under the NDPA banner is the far-reaching nature of their platform. Several of the provisions include:

—Restructuring the tax system to remove the heavy burden from the workers and poor and insure that the wealthy pay their share of taxes;

—Guaranteeing the rights of collective bargaining for all workers;

—Abolishing the Wallace-Carter Act and all other special privileges which the state grants to big business.

NDPA candidates state that their platform is attempting to create an alternative political structure for the state of Alabama with the expressed goal of wresting control of the state from "the hands of cynical, exploitive men like this would-be 'George the First' and returning it to the men and women of every political, racial and economic background who believe in Alabama and make her great."

Carl and Pam who have worked hard to make life for the freshmen in Dorm III fun, are constantly being kicked in the seat everytime some immature boy decides to act his shoe size instead of his age. Cut the rest of your dorm a break and grow up. Try and learn to be considerate of others. You are not the only ones who pay to live here, so please do not act like you own the whole building.

SCOTS DEFEATED

The Scots were handed their second consecutive loss last Saturday by Centre with the score being 26-20.

The game was tied at the half and in the fourth quarter the Scots led 20-19, but were unable to hold the slim margin.

The Scots opened the scoring in the first quarter when halfback Robert Calloway raced in from twelve yards out. Hall first added the point and the first quarter ended with Scots leading 7-0.

In the second quarter, Centre tied the score on a pass to Bill Allen from Jeff Block. The kick was good and the half ended a 7-7 deadlock.

In the third quarter, Centre scored twice, one on a 48 yard run by Greg Ely and a 34 yard pass from Chip Peterson to Mac Quarles. Both times the point failed. The Scots lone score of the quarter came when Paul Lefkowitz blocked a punt and teammate Larry McDowell fell on it for a touchdown.

The fourth quarter saw the Scots go ahead on a 32 pass from Quarterback Steve Gorden to Ricky White. However, the Colonels came right back and Jeff Block tallied from the one to sew up the victory.

The Scots had one final drive, but an interception ended the hopes of a victory.

This Saturday, the Millsaps Majors come here to play the Scots at 2:30. Everyone come back the Scots as they beat the Majors. Next week is Carson-Newman!!!!

ORPHANS MASSACRE IN DA NANG PROTESTED

Saigon—In a note sent to the ICSC headquarters in Saigon on September 3, 1970, the Vietnamese Mission in charge of relations with the ICSC strongly protested against the savage attacks launched by the North Vietnamese sappers on An Hoa orphanage in the early morning of August 30, 1970.

According to the note, this orphanage located within the perimeter of a buddhist pagoda in Duc Duc district about 35 km Southeast of Da Nang, was run by Venerable Tri Nguyen, a buddhist monk. After firing at least 40 rounds of mortars into the orphanage and a nearby hospital about 30 NVN troops stormed the target, smashing its wards with grenades and TNT charges and massacring the orphans. They dragged out Venerable Tri Nguyen, tied his hands and executed him in cold blood in the courtyard. The half hour of carnage left 15 persons killed and 45 wounded. Two thirds of the wounded were orphans and the rest were nurses and staff workers.

Moreover, before retreating into the hills where they came from they had stolen all of the orphanage's money, all of its chickens and three of its pigs.

The note observed that the extreme barbarity with which the Communist sappers attacked the defenceless orphans, the savage murder of Venerable Tri Nguyen and the systematic pillage of the An Hoa orphanage, demonstrated once again that the NVN Communists have spared no one and used any means to spread terror over the territory of the Republic of Viet-Nam.

The Vietnamese Mission indignantly protested against these acts of terrorism and banditry perpetrated by NVN troops without regard to the most elementary principles of humanity, in violation of the 1954 Geneva Agreements.

The ICSC was urged to immediately consider the afore-mentioned case and to formally condemn the Hanoi rulers who are responsible for these barbarous crimes.

PROJECT MC 70

As part of the Interim Program this year, several teams composed of two students and one faculty-staff will visit thirty-six different cities—from California to Georgia, from New Jersey to Florida—November 30 until December 12. They will be participants in a project called MC '70—What it IS And Where It's AT. These team members will not dwell on what Maryville College was, what it will be, or even what it ought to be. Instead, they will be seeking to interpret the College's present life and program in public dialogue. Though the teams will be briefed on all aspects of the College's operations so that they can answer specific questions, their primary aim will be to reflect living and learning experiences on campus. M.C. '70 is an experiment in understanding, an avenue for respect between its students and former students, its faculty-staff and the general public.

Each team member will spend the week prior to departure doing prescribed reading and study in current trends of higher education as well as Maryville College history, curriculum, government, and student interest. Upon return to campus each student will write a paper evaluating his or her effectiveness as a communicator as well as the effectiveness of the project.

STEELE IS AFFILIATE ARTIST

Maryville College is fortunate to have lyric bass Philip Steele, a graduate of Julliard School of Music and performer of concert music, oratorio and opera, as its Affiliate Artist this year. Mr. Steele will arrive from New York on Monday, November 9 and will stay through November 15 for his first visit to the College. He will be featured solosit for the 38th college-community performance of Handel's "Messiah" Sunday, November 15, 1970, 4:00 p.m.

This is the fourth year Maryville College has participated in the Affiliate Artist program. Mr. Steele is one of forty articulate artists who is becoming involved with audiences in college communities across the nation. This project is supported by the National Endowment for the Arts. Miss Karen Roewade was Affiliate Artist here from 1968-1970.

Mr. Steele has done bass solos, ensemble work and solo recitals in such works as "The Passion According to St. John," by J. S. Bach and Handel's "Messiah." He was featured singer in the Darlsrud Chorale's National Tour in 1965, performing 27 concerts, and was Judas in "St. Matthew Passion" by J. S. Bach, performed with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and the Collegiate Chorale in New York City.

His work in opera includes roles in the Brooklyn College Opera Theater, the Manhattan School Opera Theater, and the New York Community Opera as guest artist. He has performed with the Inwood Chamber Opera Players and the Julliard Orchestra.

Roles Mr. Steele has performed include Sarastro in "Magic Flute" by Mozart, Figaro in "The Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart, Colline in "La Boheme" by Puccini, Mephisto in "Faust" by Gounod, and Don Inigo and Gomez in Ravel's "L'Heure Espagnol."

Mr. Steele studied with Dolf Swing and Lotte Leonard in voice, and has attended City College of New York and Manhattan School of Music. He has three years of experience in the New York public school system as a teacher of music and choral conductor on the 7th, 8th and 9th grade levels.

VESPERS

The Rev. Tom Daily, pastor of the Rockford Methodist Church and Chairman of the Board of Directors of the FISH organization, will speak at Vespers Sunday, November 8 at 7:00 P.M. in the chapel lobby. Mr. Daily will explain how college students can relate to this community program which seeks to put people in need in touch with people who are willing to meet the need.

A TIME TO REJOICE

Dear Friends and others. It has been a long time since I've had a chance to gloat over anything in the political realm and so I'm going to take this opportunity to do so.

I am a legal resident of Maryland and a part time resident in Tennessee. It has been a good while since conservative Republicans have had much about which to boast in either of these two states. But now we do!

As far as I'm concerned nothing could be better than the defeat of two "liberal Democratic" Senators—Senators Gore and Tydings. Obviously the voters were fed up with the policies of these two men and the majority (that wonderful tool of democracy) abandoned them in favor of two Conservative Republicans that had been endorsed by the Nixon Administration.

Now everyone in Tennessee must realize that no matter what anyone says to the contrary, Most Tennesseans Do Believe like Bill Brock Believes!

One last comment—how in the world did Gore supporters decide it would be good to have out-of-state students head up efforts to get him re-elected? It I was from East Tennessee and I saw a car with a Maryland liscense plate and a "Gore" sticker right next to it. . .it would confirm the idea that Gore was a representative of the "Northern Eastern Liberal Establishment"--not of the local people! I'm confused!

Once again we are super-happy about Brock and Beal and the liberal Maryville College populace has to admit. . ."We've been shot down!" Sorry, try again next time!

Getting Paid—(your System)

Day in and day out. For two months. ONLY two months. But you do it for years. To retire. For Pension. To Live when you're Old.
AND FOR WHAT. . .

Like the serfs of what you might call the Dark Ages, who also worked day in and day out. Only They had no Pension. That's why you call it the Dark Ages. No Pension.

And we, the Civilised Ones, who ship
Our boys to fight for Our Freedom and Our Democracy (and Our Pension.)

"Tell me, Dead One, did you enjoy being killed for Our Pension?"

Two months into your System.
And i am still Sick.

NATURE LOVERS-ATTENTION!

Those of you who couldn't attend the snipe hunt two weeks ago just don't know what you missed! It's truly surprising to find such a stimulating interest on campus with such fun-filled events. Never before has there been such enthusiasm at Maryville College! (If you could imagine such a thing.) Because of the tremendous turn-out at our bird-catching extravaganza, this weekend--get ready for this- there will be a tree climbing contest on our very own frisbee field. Just come as you are, anytime, and enjoy the beauties of nature. After you've climbed your favorite tree, just record your time with C. F. Smith. The winner will have the privilage of carving his name into any tree of his choice. Show our lovely trees you care, and get out there and climb them to the best of your ability!

THE REAL THING

a very short story

Today is election day and a busy one for the Coca-cola man. Today he was exceptionally busy quenching the thirsts of men, and he himself was looking forward to that pause that refreshes. "But never mind that," he thought, "I cannot celebrate until my work is complete." So he continued. He knew that a pause implied nothing infinite.

Plastic Jesus stood at the door urging men to come in and vote. After all it was to Him, an important election. For the candidates had been narrowed and the only two remaining on the ballot were Freedom and Death.

The Coca-cola man, on his way to refreshing another, happened by the voting place. Plastic Jesus asked him to come in and vote, as only Plastic Jesus could ask. But the Coca-cola man refused. It was not that he felt his job was too important, even though he was considered by man to be of the vital profession of changing men's attitudes by refreshing them. He refused, as he tried to explain to Plastic Jesus, because he could see no difference in the candidate's positions. As he saw it, their difference was like that between Coca-cola and Coke. But Plastic Jesus could not understand, for he was of the Pepsi generation.

The end finally came and quite a beautiful end it was. The bomb had cast a yellowish haze over the whole world; it brought to mind a latent sun; it glowed an illusion of hope. But everyone had died. They had not understood but it was just as well, for now they were all Coca-cola.

"It's the real thing
In the back of your mind,
What you're hoping to find.
It's the real thing.

It's the real thing,
Thats the way it should be
What the world hopes to see.
It's the real thing.

Coca-cola is Coke."

ELECTION COMMENTARY

by Kathy Meier and Patti Shelton

"Tennessee is the bright state for the GOP," so said CBS newsman Walter Cronkite on Tuesday night, and with good reason. On the local congressional scene, incumbent John Duncan overran Democrat Roger Cowan. In his concession speech Cowan reiterated his disapproval of the type of campaign which Duncan conducted and left a door open for the next congressional race.

The Democrats captured many new governorships including one in Arkansas where Winthrop Rockefeller was thought to be an easy in (winner was Dale Bumpers). But Tennessee represented a major GOP Victory, electing a Republican governor for the first time in approximately 50 years. Loser Democrat John Jay Hooker was no great loss but Winfield Dunn was probably no great gain. The best hope for Dunn is that he is not so greatly committed to the Republican hierarchy for his win that Tennessee only switches machines.

Senate races all over the country were closely watched because of the pitched battle conducted by Mr. Nixon and Mr. Agnew to gain Republican majorities in the houses of Congress. This campaign was marked by vigorous personal stumping by the President and Vice-President.

Thirty-five of the Senate seats were up for grabs. The Democratic party retained or won twenty-one of these. A few of the key states which the Administration failed to win were: Indiana, which re-elected Democratic Senator Vance Hartke over Roudebush despite accusations hurled at Hartke last week by Spiro Agnew; Illinois, another democratic victory (Adlai Stevenson III) which Agnew felt deeply, and; New Mexico where Montoya pulled a victory off from his wealthy oilman opponent.

The Administration did manage to win a few prizes, notably Beall in Maryland, Buckley in New York, Byrd in Virginia and, of course, Brock in Tennessee.

Speaking of Tennessee, ti was, as we've pointed out, one of the few states to take into consideration the President's plea for a Republican congress particularly considering that Brock was a hand-picked Administration candidate. However there were drawbacks to this victory in that Tennessee now has no senator with any seniority and all the benefits that includes, (whatever you may feel about seniority, while it is in effect it is best to have it) and is represented by two senators of the minority party.

All in all it seems that the Administration failed in its efforts to gain support through a Republican take-over in Congress.

As a strictly partisan commentary and expressing no one's views but our own, we deplore the situation in which Tennessee has placed herself and believe that Tennessee voters may have committed political suicide for the state. We were happy to see that most other states rejected this possible conservative reaction.

THE END

YOU have not fulfilled every duty unless you have fulfilled that of being PLEASANT.

"HOW'D IT DIE?"

On the shores of the Snake River,
I sat fishing with my rod;
As I watched the cool brown water
Flow along the damp warm sod.
Then I snagged my line upon
A river bottom clod; so
I pulled it in and found it was
But a toiled paper wad.
Well, I threw it back and as I did
I saw a fish float by.
A Rainbow Trout Twelve inches long
And I wondered, "How'd it die?"

MATURITY--

Maturity is many things. First it is the ability to base a judgment on the Big Picture--The Long Haul. It means being able to pass up the fun-for-the-minute and select the course of action which will pay off later. One of the characteristics of infancy is the "I want it NOW approach," Grown-up people can wait.

Maturity is the ability to stick with a project or a situation until it is finished. The adult who is constantly changing jobs and changing friends is immature. He cannot stick it out because he has not grown up. Everything seems to turn sour after awhile.

Maturity is the capacity to face unpleasantness, frustration, discomfort and defeat without complaint or collapse. The mature person knows he can't have everything his own way. He is able to defer to circumstances, to other people--and to time.

Maturity is the ability to live up to your responsibilities, and this means being dependable. It means keeping your word. And dependability equates with personal integrity. Do you mean what you say--and say what you mean?

Maturity is the ability to make a decision and stand by it. Immature people spend their lives exploring endless possibilities and then do nothing. Action requires courage. And there is no maturity without courage.

Maturity is the ability to harness your abilities and your energies and to do more than is expected. The mature person refuses to settle for mediocrity. He would rather aim high and miss the mark than aim low and make it.

SMOKING PROVES DANGEROUS

All the people who would walk a mile for a camel and those who would rather fight than switch will find that the government is coming down harder on their habit in 1971.

By the middle of December the cigarette smokers of this country will begin finding a newer and stronger health warning printed on each package they buy. This is because Congress has ruled all cigarettes manufactured after November 1 must carry a stronger message. This same legislation forbids cigarette advertising on radio and television after January 1.

This legislation is largely the result of campaigns sponsored by societies, health organizations and other public minded groups. If it is true that a word to the wise is sufficient, then we will certainly have less people supporting the habit in years to come.

SPORTS

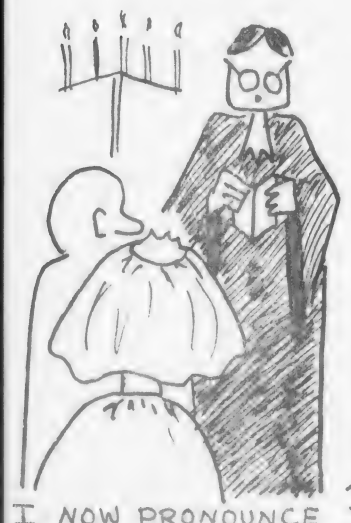
SCOTS DROP DECISION

Last Saturday here at home the Maryville Scots were handed a 13-6 defeat by the Millsaps Majors of Jackson, Mississippi.

The Scots were plagued by mistakes, a fumble and an interception which eventually lead to the Majors scores.

The first quarter was scoreless as neither team could generate much of an offense.

As the second quarter unfolded the Scots fumbled to the Majors on their yard line. Two plays later halfback Rick Adams broke free for a 51 yard touchdown run. The point was added and at the half the Scots trailed 7-0.



Early in the third quarter the Scots recovered a Millsaps fumble. Soon after Bill Corbett carried it over from the two. On the extra point attempt which was good, a penalty was marked off against the Scots. On the next try the kick was wide and the Scots trailed 7-6.

Late in the fourth quarter the Majors picked off a pass at their own 46 yard line. The Majors proceeded to march 46 yards in 8 plays with the touchdown being a 7 yard pass from Dale Keys to Mike Taylor. The conversion was missed, and the final was Millsaps 13, Maryville 6.

This week the Scots travel to Jefferson City to play their traditional rivals Carson-Newman. This will be the 50th game in the series with the Eagles having won 25 the Scots 21, and there have been 3 ties.

AGAHHHHHH!!

The Japanese newspaper Mainichi Shimbun has discovered that polluted river water can be used to develop photographs. The paper's September 4 issue printed a photograph developed not with a chemical developer but with water collected from rivers, ditches, and canals near Mt. Fuji. The resulting photo was fuzzy but recognizable.

INDEPENDENTS MAINTAIN LEAD

Due to the heavy rains of late, flagball action has been light. In the only game play of late, the Sophomores beat Kappa Phi 57-0.

Wednesday the Sophomores (5-2) played Independents (6-0). A win for the Independents would clinch the title, but if the Sophomores won then the lead would be one game with each having one remaining.

Friday the Independents play the Freshman. Monday the Sophomores play Sig.

Independents	6	0

CAGERS TO SCRIMMAGE

On Friday night the College Basketball team will travel to Madisonville to play Hiwausee College in a scrimmage game. The game begins at 7:00 p.m. The Scots have been practicing now for three weeks and are preparing for home opener with Tennessee Temple of Chattenooga on December 3 in the new gym.

ACC MEETING

by Susan Hayba

Qualifications for a new dean, an evaluation of teachers and courses by students, possibilities of enlarging our environmental education program, and a study of food services were among the topics discussed at Wednesday's All-College Council meeting.

Dr. Stein and Dana Rothey, co-chairmen of the advisory committee on the search for a new dean, reviewed the notice describing the general type of person the college wants. The discussion about the wording of certain phrases arose because of the Council's concern for being sufficiently informative about the position without appearing to emphasize only one area or be inflexibly specific.

Some of the opinions gathered last spring from freshmen by Carol Christofferson and Mr. Braharns have been of interest to the Instructional Program Committee. Dr. Willey noted that this group plans to begin the suggested evaluation of teachers and courses. Hopefully the college will receive funds from Title 3 to increase the depth of the study.

The same committee has encouraged Dr. Shields to apply for a grant from the new Environmental Education Act. With this money it would be possible to institute a post—B.A. program for elementary education teachers at Maryville's environmental education center. This exciting prospect for preparing teachers to increase their students' awareness of environment would be a great addition to the already impressive outstanding program at Tremont.

A member of the Standards of Residential Life Committee, Mr. Ramger, told the ACC of Mrs. Carolyn Davis' encouragement of an evaluation of the efficiency and quality of our dining hall.

WHAT'S GOING ON AT ACC

by Susan Hayba

One of the main topics of the discussion at Wednesday's All-College Council meeting was the depressing amount of theft on campus, especially of library materials. Periodicals and books have been disappearing at a tremendous rate because of a student attitude of thoughtlessness for the others who depend on those same sources. Because of this serious problem, the librarians have been forced to divert funds which were intended to be applied towards enlarging our library and instead use them in an effort to maintain the current stock. Measures used in other colleges to prevent stealing, such as having closed stacks or a guard at the door were discussed. However, most Council members believed that such negative action conflicted with the Maryville concept of community and that a group working to remedy this growing atmosphere of theft would be more effective. Robbery is spreading from the library, dininghall, and Davis dorm to include even such things as research notecards and class notebooks.

The Rev. Mr. Harrison, Dr. Stine, and John Campbell, members of the Religious Life Committee, were on hand to report on their plans for January Meetings. This year the annual two-day discussions with visiting ministers will be topped off with a retreat.

Mr. Brahams reported that 36 engagement cities had been arranged for the traveling MC '70 teams. Each of the faculty-staff and student teams will visit several of these cities throughout the country and speak with different groups about Maryville today.

The Board of Directors was on campus again last weekend to consider ways to utilize and balance academic and financial resources. Guest speakers and a consulting firm presented suggestions. Dr. Copeland also announced plans to review the effectiveness of the CIV programs in fulfilling the purpose of the college.

PUBLIC SPEAKERS TO COMPETE

The following MC students, will be competing in the West Virginia Individual Events Tournament today and Saturday, November 13 and 14, at the Parkersburg Center of West Virginia University.

ALL IS NOT WAR IN VIET–NAM

Ngoc Binh, SVN (MF)...A year ago the hamlet of Ngoc Binh, lying along the Lo Moi Canal, 400 kilometers southwest of Saigon, was abandoned and decaying, a victim of Viet Cong harrassment and isolation. Today, it is a prosperous, bright community of 1,100 farmers.

Under the 1969 rural pacification and development program, the South Vietnamese government gained control of over ten thousand hamlets, 94 per cent of the nation's total. Many were, like Ngoc Binh, isolated, virtually abandoned in the long years of VC control and guerrilla harrassment. This is the kind of news that doesn't make the headlines in the world press and usually doesn't even get reported.

Behind the protection of a Regional Forces Company, farmers returned June last year to find their homes looted and rotting, fields in weeds, and hamlet life at a standstill.

Living in still-standing pagodas, the villagers set about rebuilding, supplied with redevelopment funds. They rebuilt bridges blown out by the Viet Cong, erected new dispensaries, constructed a new market, cleaned out canals and ditches, opened schools, and fixed the decayed road to the district town. Today, a village council has been elected and a hamlet chief chosen by the people. Government machinery is operating again. The hamlet has formed its own Civil Self-Defense Group to ward off any foraging enemy who might again attempt to disrupt the peace of the hamlet.

Estimates now place the number of Vietnamese living under government security at 97 per cent of the nation's 17,500,000 citizens. During the 1969 program, Operation Phoenix eliminated over 33 thousand enemy agents, badly crippling the VC infrastructure, in the countryside.

The government objective was first to bring military security to the former VC areas by using its superior troop strength, mainly in Regional and Popular Forces.

Second, it encouraged local democracy in holding hamlet and village elections. A strong "Return to Village" program, coupled with generous reconstruction aid, attracted farmers back to their traditional lands. Then the government put strong emphasis on self-help and development projects, providing each village with up to one million piasters to match local work

"COMMUNITY?"

While the College Library loses books and magazines . . . the ACC talks of "Community." While the dining hall loses silverware, dishes and other accessories the ACC talks of "community." While the Phys. Ed. department loses Equipment, the ACC talks of "Community." While girls in Davis are losing personal possessions the ACC talks of "Community." While guys in Dorm III are losing money the ACC talks of "Community." While in the past three years a number of MC students (both known and unknown) have been guilty of grand larceny the ACC talks of "Community." While cheating on examinations and papers go on unpunished the ACC talks of "Community." I feel that those who talk of "Community" in the midst of all this are more blind in many ways than my former roommate ever was!

Wherever there are people there have to be laws. Wherever there are laws they have to be enforced. Liberty can never exist without authority.

While the ACC talks about "community" students are deprived of a full library. While the ACC talks about "community" people eat saltless meat with their fingers. While the ACC talks about "community" a trip home for Thanksgiving is denied a freshman because he has lost his plane money . . .

Somebody sure has a funny sense of community!

AN OPEN LETTER TO COLLEGE STUDENTS by J. Edgar Hoover

As a 1970 college student, you belong to the best educated, most sophisticated, most poised generation in our history.

The vast majority of you, I am convinced, sincerely love America and want to make it a better country.

You do have ideas of your own—and that's good. You see things wrong in our society which we adults perhaps have minimized or overlooked. You are outspoken and frank and hate hypocrisy. That is good too.

There's nothing wrong with student dissent or student demands for changes in society or the display of student unhappiness over aspects of our national policy. Student opinion is a legitimate aspect of public opinion in our society.

But there is real ground for concern about the extremeism which led to violence, lawlessness, and disrespect for the rights of others on many college campuses during the past year.

The extremists are a small minority of students and faculty members who have lost faith in America. They ridicule the flag, poke fun at American institutions, seek to destroy our society. They are not interested in genuine reform. They take advantage of the tensions, strife, and often legitimate frustrations of students to promote campus chaos. They have no rational, intelligent plan of the future either for the university or the Nation.

The extremists are of wide variety: adherents of the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) including the Weatherman; members of the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA), the Trotskyist youth group; the Communist Party's Young Workers Liberation League (YWLL). Or they may be associated with the Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam (SMC), a Trotskyist-dominated antiwar group.

Many are not associated with any national group. The key point is not so much the identification of extremists but learning to recognize and understand the mentality of extremism which believes in violence and destruction.

Based on our experience in the FBI, here are some of the ways in which extremists will try to lure you into their activities:

1. They'll encourage you to lose respect for your parents and the older generation. This will be one of their first attacks, trying to cut you off from home. You'll hear much about the "failures" and "hypocrisy" of your parents and their friends. The older generation has made mistakes but your parents and millions of other adults worked hard, built, sacrificed, and suffered to make America what it is today. It is their country too. You may disagree with them, but don't discredit their contributions.

2. They'll try to convert you to the idea that you college is "irrelevant" and a "tool of the Establishment." The attack against the college administration often is bitter, arrogant, and unreasoning. SDSers, for example, have sought to disrupt the colleges by demanding the right to select professors, determine the curriculum, and set grading standards.

3. They'll ask you to abandon your basic common sense. Campus extremism thrives on specious generalizations, wild accusations, and unverified allegations. Complex issues of state are wrapped in slogans and cliches. Dogmatic statements are issued as if they were the final truth. You should carefully examine the facts. Don't blindly follow courses of action suggested by extremists. Don't get involved in a cause just because it seems "fashionable" or the "thing to do." Rational discussion and rational analysis are needed more than ever before.

4. They'll try to envelop you in a mood of negativism, pessimism, and alienation toward yourself, your school, your Nation. This is one of the most insidious of New Left poisons. SDS and its allies judge America exclusively from its flaws. They see nothing good, positive, and constructive. This leads to a philosophy of bitterness, defeatism, and rancor. I would like you to know your country more intimately. I would want you to look for the deeper unifying forces in America, the moods of national character, determinations and sacrifice which are working to correct these flaws. The real strength of our Nation is the power of morality, decency, and conscience which rights the wrong, corrects error, and works for equal opportunity under the law.

5. They'll encourage you to disrespect the law and hate the law enforcement officer. Most college students have good friends who are police officers. You know that when extremists call the police "pigs" they are wrong. The officer protects your rights, lives, and property. He is your friend and he needs your support.

6. They'll tell you that any action is honorable and right if it's "sincere" or "idealistic" in motivation. Here is one of the most seductive of New Left appeals—

"NO MAN'S LAND"

by Debbie Branch

The following poem is written in remembrance of the recent deaths of the two teams in college football . . .

They began with spirit and support– self-spirit, enhanced by friends, support, kicked-off by silver wings.
The goal of life was in essence, their goal.
But the Giant Referee called a fumble– so they did not even get to try for a touchdown.

It happened once before,
But then, only a part of Hope was Destroyed.
Hope's first string–
Spiked, but not deflated.

Was it the same Referee
Who called both games?
The big silver football, sailing smoothly was passed
"Beautifully," they said.
But then,
Fumbled!

And all that Hope landed Only to crash– out of bounds.
The scoreboard of life
Would never work again.

Meanwhile, those in an apathetic land moved on–
Except for those who cared about Hope and had lost it.
But they had lost it even worse than the lovers of the team of Half-lost Hope which crumbled earlier.
Hope's opponents even wanted it to win.

Two teams of Hope–
they lost the game.
(Only according to the Referee).
But how many times will
He call similar games of Death
So that team and school spirit
Can become Spirit
in truth?

A voyage Through the Mind of a Dreamer
A REVIEW OF MAN OF LA-MANCHA

Mark Stoub

The mist of a far away place drifted on stage this last Weekend. The audience took a trip to a prison during the Inquisition. The trip was of teriffic emotional intensity, Probably because of the awesome speeds that we reached during The voyage. It was as if the voyage was a part of me and I
Of it. The reason for such a confession– indeed who knows
Reason at all. All that I was aware of,
was that I was far
From reason and really could not communicate with it at all.
Instead, I communicated with a fantasy, with something I really Did not agree with, but yet was very much a part of.
The song "Impossible Dream" haunted
my very being through out
The voyage, even though I had heard it whispered many times Before. Tears mixed with joy–the joy of understanding what
The Actors were doint–and with sorrow– the sorrow of witnessing A Dreamer's death–came to me as we traveled along the outer Reaches of this man's mind. And then there was Sancho! Not Quite understanding, but alway willing to try–all just Because he liked him. The voyage had made me tired but I still Felt that I had reached out my arms to those who made the Trip possible, and to the other voyagers.
I feel as if I had Been on a tiny vacation through time, and now am refreshed
And ready to follow a quest of my own making. Where this All led me, I am not sure, but I do know that I am closer
To several people because of it; and I know, because of that It was worth it.

that if an arsonist's or anarchist's heart is in the right place, if he feels he is doing something for "humanity" or a "higher cause," then his act, even if illegal, is justifiable. Remember that acts have consequences. The alleged sincerity of the perpetrator does not absolve him from responsibility. His acts may affect the rights, lives, and property of others. Just being a student or being on campus does not automatically confer immunity or grant license to violate the law. Just because you don't like a law doesn't mean you can violate it with impunity.

7. They'll ask you to believe that you, as a student and citizen, are powerless by democratic means to effect change in our society. Remember the books on American history you have read. They tell the story of the creative self-renewal of this Nation through change. Public opinion time after time has brought new policies, goals, and methods. The individual is not helpless or caught in "bureaucracy" as these extremists claim.

8. They'll encourage you to hurl bricks and stones instead of logical argument at those who disagree with your views. I remember an old saying. "He who strikes the first blow has run out of ideas." Violence is as ancient as the cave man; as up-to-date as the Weatherman. Death and injury, fear, distrust, animosity, polarization, counter-violence–these arise from violence. The very use of violence shows the paucity of rational thought in the SDS, its inability to come up with any intelligent critique of our society.

Personally, I don't think the outlook for campus unrest this year is as bleak as some prophets of pessimism proclaim. The situation at some colleges is serious, but certainly not hopeless.

Along with millions of other adults, I'm betting on the vast majority of students who remain fair-minded, tolerant, inquisitive, but also firm about certain basic principles of human dignity, respect for the rights of others, and a willingness to learn. I am confidentour faith has not been misplaced.

By the end of last year, close to seven thousand construction projects and over twelve thousand self-help projects had been implemented, many for schools, dispensaries, bridges, road improvements, market places, and irrigation works. More than two billion piasters went into the effort.

Newly elected local officials were given special training either at the national center in the sea-side resort of Vung Tau which graduated over sixteen thousand administrators, or attended special courses in provinces which gave training to more than 37,000.

Popular Self-Defense Forces increased to over three million members, more than a third of whom were organized into village security units, a new army of the people.

Now the countryside is alive again with produce and fruit and rice and rural prosperity is on the upturn after years of war.

SCOTS DROP 10-0 DECISION

The Scots were handed a 10-0 defeat last Saturday at Honaker Field by the Southwestern Lynx of Memphis. This marked the close of the season for the team and they finished with a 3-6 record. The Lynx ended with a 7-1 record.

The first quarter was scoreless. The Scots had a long drive but they ran out of downs on the Lynx ten and had to relinquish the ball. Southwestern mounted no sustained efforts in the quarter.

The second quarter saw the Lynx gain a 30- edge on a 31 yd field goal by Ernie James. The ball hit the crossbar and bounded over. Their score came after a Scot fumble at the Scot 46. Late in the second quarter the Scots recovered a fumble on the Lynx 14 yard line but on the very next play they fumbled it back.

The third quarter was scoreless, but the offense for the Scots dominated the play. Twice they got as far as the 42 yard line but were held on downs both times. Another possible drive was killed when a pass was intercepted.

In the fourth quarter, Southwestern registered a touchdown with Herman Morris carrying it over from the one. This time the touchdown was set up by a Scot fumble on their own 35.

Playing their last game for the Scots were Paul Grice, Rick White, Gary Reagan, and C. F. Smith.

Sing, Sing, Sing, Sing

Do you ever catch yourself humming as you walk across campus, or pouring your musical heart out to the shower head? If you do, then you have the prerequisites for helping out with Doug Barber's senior interim. Doug's interim project is to form a temporary chorus in order to study first-hand, and work with, certain basic choral techniques. Various types of music will be used, and one of the main goals is to find and remedy the hand-ups of relatively inexperienced singers. There will be a regular rehearsal schedule during interim, culminating in a short concert during the fourth week. Details will be worked out at a meeting for all those who might be interested, to be held Monday evening, November 23, at 7:00. ALL members of the community are invited. Several females have already expressed interest, but lots of guys will also be needed. The chorus promises to be lots of fun, a good way to spend free time, a chance to make new friends, and you might even learn something about singing!

GOOD NEWS

Bottles—The Vistron Corp., a subsidiary of Standard Oil Company of Ohio, has announced development of a plastic bottle that could help solve the Nation's solid waste problem.

The bottle, made of Barex 210, is as transparent as glass, one-fifth as heavy and burns to a crumbly ash when lighted.

The combustible bottle burns at 1000 degrees and its smoke does not change the chemical nature of incinerator smoke, Vistron claims.

Vistron says the Food and Drug Administration has approved the use of Barex 210 bottles for good and beverage containers.

Re-cycling Machine—A paper recycling machine designed and built by a Japanese engineering firm is being installed by Georgia-Pacific at its Thorold, Ontario paper mill to transform 90,000 tons of waste paper a year into a building material.

The new material is the highly specialized paper required for the face and back of gypsum wallboard.

The system was designed and built by Kobayachi Engineering of Fuji, Japan. It combines conventional cylinder board and fourdrinier systems.

Known as an ultrofromer, the machine will produce 250 tons daily when it is in operation.

EUROPEAN SUMMER JOBS ANNOUNCED

Job opportunities in Europe this summer . . . Work this summer in the forests of Germany, on construction in Austria, on farms in Germany, Sweden and Denmark, on road construction in Norway, in Industries in France and Germany, in hotels in Switzerland.

Well there are these jobs availabie as well as jobs in Ireland, England, France, Italy, and Holland are open by the consent of the governments of these countries to American university students coming to Europe the next summer.

For several years students made their way across the Atlantic through A. E. S.-Service to take part in the actual life of the people of these countries. The success of this project has caused a great deal of enthusiastic interest and support in both America and Europe.

Every year, the progeam has been expanded to include many more students and jobs. Already, many students have made application for next summer jobs. American-European Student Service (on a non-profitable basis) is offering these jobs to students for Germany, Scandinavia, England, Austria, Switzerland, France, Italy, and Spain. The jobs consist of forestry work, child care work (females only), farm work, hotel work (limited number available), construction work, and some other more qualified jobs requiring more specialized training.

The purpose of this program is to afford the student an opportunity to get into real living contact with the people and customs of Europe. In this way, a concrete effort can be made to learn something of the culture of Europe. In return for his or her work, the student will receive his or her room and board, plus a wage. However, student should keep in mind that they will be working on the European economy and wages will naturally be scaled accordingly. The working conditions (hours, safety, regulations, legal protection, work permits) will be strictly controlled by the labor ministries of the countries involved.

In most cases, the employers have requested especially for American students. Hence, they are particularly interested in the student and want to make the work as interesting as possible.

They are all informed of the intent of the program, and will help the student all they can in deriving the most from his trip to Europe.

Please write for further information and application forms to: American-European Student-Service, Box 34733, FL 9490 Vaduz, Liechtenstein (Europe).

UNESCORTED CIVILIANS DRIVE 1000 KILOMETERS THROUGH SOUTH VIETNAM

Washington, D.C., October 21.—For the first time since the Vietnam fighting began to escalate five years ago, it is possible for unarmed and unescorted civilians to drive the length of South Vietnam in comparative safety, a United States journalist reports.

Accompanied by Time magazine reporter William Marmon and the U.S. Consul in Da Nang, Francis McNamara, Washington Post foreign correspondent Peter A. Jay drove 625 miles (1,000 kilometers) from Saigon to the port city of Da Nang in four days.

Mr. Jay reported his trip in the October 21 edition of the Post.

"Many American officials, both in Saigon and the countryside, still advise against such a trip,. Mr. Jay noted, but said he "found these once well-founded fears now generally unwarranted."

The entire trip can be made over asphalt roads, which are difficult for the communist sappers to mine, he noted, and loyal militia troops are deployed along the entire length of the route, filling in the long sections unprotected by American and South Vietnamese regular units.

South Vietnamese civilians, Mr. Jay reported, "have begun to travel in droves," and during daylight main roads are filled with motorcycles, buses, packed long-distance taxis, short-haul taxis, three-wheelers and heavy, lumbering trucks.

"This new mobility", Mr. Jay pointed out, "does not mean that communist guerrillas and regular forces have vanished."

NEW LIFE

Those of you who are tired of setting in the dorms, complaining about campus life and the lack of campus activities, here's your chance to get involved. The Social Re creation Interim under Mrs. Edith Largen realizes this campus does lack activities which will keep students interested and active, and has planned a calender of events for the remaining interim period. On Thurs Dec. 3, a North vs. South game–similar to capture the flag–was held at the golf course from 1:15 PM to 3:00 PM. Other events include a carnival-barnwarming on Dec. 9 from 8:00-10:30 in Bartlet Auditorium. It will include contests, games and other activities. On Dec. 13 ushering the college Christmas spirit, a Christmas party will be held in Lloyd dormitory.

Any successful campus activity depends upon the interest generated by its students. The objective of this interim project is to provide activities which all the student body can participate in and enjoy. We hope you, the students, will help us succeed in our efforts.

NEW AUTO POLLUTION STANDARDS

The National Air Pollution Control Administration has announced auto exhaust standards for 1972, 1973 and 1974 automobiles that are less stringent than those first projected earlier this year.

NAPCA also announced new test procedures admitting, as critics ahve claimed for several years, that the old tests do not measure correctly the amounts of poisons being discharged by the average auto.

To quote the NAPCA press release, "Current test procedures, which combine measured data and mathematical estimates, underestimate exhaust emissions from automobiles."

The new regulations are designed to reduce emissions of exhaust hydrocarbons by 80 percent and of carbon monoxide by 69 percent as compared to emissions from pre-1968 autos without pollution controls.

The standards specifically allow that 1972-74 model autos be limited to 3.4 grams hydrocarbons per mile and 39.0 grams carbon monoxide per mile.

The new tests, NAPCA syas, will take into consideration typical urban driving patterns, sample actual emissions through the entire test cycle and rely on more accurate instruments.

NAPCA says it did not set standards for 1975 because Congress may set those standards if it enacts the 1970 Clean Air Act amendments sponsored by Senator Edmund S. Muskie. Those amendments require an elimination of 90% of all auto pollutants by 1975.

EDITORIAL

Civil Disobedience, Violence, War and Hate, all seem to be pointing to revolution. However, I'd like to suggest a counter-revolution, one that would have to begin with me. . .and you. Each of us should become involved, all the way and all the time. It would have to be a revolution of Love. Real Love! This would not be sentimental, maudlin emotion nor would it be spineless, virtueless, self-indulgent, sensual pleasure, but it would be the Love of Christ! This is selfless love, self-sacrificing love. This love includes enemies (those who hate us and dispitefully use us), it suffers wrong rather than getting even, it honors others more than self. This is the love that seek's another's good and serves others. . .for the sake of Christ!

But naturally we cannot generate or create this love in ourselves. But we can open our lives to the love of God. We can allow God's love to fill us, possess us and work through us. Yes, we can let God love through us! If we are willing, God is! What a change there would be at M.C. if we accept the challenge of this counter-revolution!

COURT RECORD

Comparisons of Maryville with other schools often takes place on campus. It is with this in mind that the Echo reprints the following article from Hilltop, the Mars Hill College paper.

On Oct. 13, W. O. Myrick and Ellen Pugh appeared before the Housing Court of Mars Hill College Student Government Association charged respectively with having a girl in a boy's residence and being in a man's dormitory at an undesignated time. Under the Court's verdict of guilty they were placed on Conduct Probation. Student Government Association appealed Myrick and Pugh's case to Student Court on Oct. 14, and to Appeals Court on Oct. 20. The Court of Appeals pronounced a verdict of guilty and both were suspended.

On Nov. 3, Dick Morgan and Mack Byrd, charged with having girls in a boy's residence, appeared before Student Court. Both entered a plea of guilty and were placed under judicial probation. The girls, being non-students of MHC, did not come under the court's jurisdiction.

CHESS CLUB

On Wednesday, Dec. 13, at 7:30, there will be an organizational meeting of the chess club to be soon started here. Everyone who is interested is invited to come. If you have any sets, please bring them. If the impossible should happen and you can't make this meeting, please contact Bill Martin in Box 2553 (if I'm not in the box, leave a note). Meeting will be held in the Hole in the Wall.

LETTERS

Editor:

With all of the talk and apparent concern about pollution of our environment, it seems that two rather serious sources of pollution on the Maryville College campus continue unchecked. I am referring to the existence of soft drink machines which dispense drinks in aluminum cans and those little seven ounce non-returnable bottles containing orange juice which we receive in every sack supper. Could we not replace these can dispensing drink machines with the bottle dispensing type as in Sutton Science Center or Pearson's Hall? Granted, you do get two ounces less in the bottle than in the can, but isn't this a small price to pay to help in the fight against waste of resources and pollution? Just take a look around the campus, especially in the Carnegie Hall area, if you do not believe that these cans are a problem. As for the orange juice bottles, if drinks for sack suppers cannot be procured in either paper containers or returnable bottles, at least the presently used glass bottles could be collected in each dormitory and turned over (even sold?!) to some authority which collects such glass for reuse.

Maybe we as individuals cannot stop the waste and pollution of large corportations, but we can stop personal waste and pollution on our own campus. Earth Day was fine, but why not Earth forever?

Concernedly,

Dear Editor:

Friday, the 13th of November 1970 was a terribly tragic day for hundreds of thousands of people in East Pakistan. The catastrophic tidal wave and the murderous cyclone that ripped through 2848 square miles and 13 off shore islands left in their wake an unofficial staggering death toll of 300,000 men, women, and children.

CARE is on the scene in East Pakistan and has been for the past ten years on a regular basis. Food, shelter, clothing and medicines are being furnished through CARE, but much more is needed.

I earnestly solicit your co-operation in making known to your student readers the need for funds to finance the major relief efforts that must be made in East Pakistan at the present time. Please help us to get this message to the students.

Contributions may be sent to Pakistan Emergency Fund, CARE, Inc., 615 Forsyth Building, Atlanta, Ga. 30303.

Sincerely,
Bee H. Brown

Theta Epsilon will be in charge of Vespers Sunday, December 6 at 7:00 P.M. in the Little Chapel.

"NO MAN'S LAND"

by Debbie Branch

The bus to home—
a holiday treat?
I shrugged and chose an empty seat.
I sat and watched the cars go by Completely unaware that I would see
THE SACRIFICE OF TURKEYS.

A station stop; a magazine stand;
A lady stopped and touched my hand,
"Is that a girl or boy?" she said, pointing to a fluffy head,
"These infidels and communists!"
My brain throbbed, Lady I insist that you should just once understand
THE SACRIFICE OF TURKEYS.

The driver's brake was but an ax—
A handsome boy in dirty slacks
Stepped off "to use the phone," he said.
The driver laughed and shook his head,
"Damned hippie won't hold up my bus!"
We left. I heard the engine cuss and spurt pollution simply for
THE SACRIFICE OF TURKEYS.

At last I hurried off the bus to feel the people's ddep disbust of irrelevance—waiting in a line to get their bags—what mushy minds!
I smiled and handed him my tag—
The black boy frowned and shoved my bag.
Resolved to silence in the car,
Knowing home was not too far
I knew tomorrow I would taste
THE SACRIFICE OF TURKEYS.

Gobble-Baah! Turkeys-sheep.
What's the difference? Minds will sleep.
Drowsy from unhappy hours,
Decorating graves with flowers,
Unaware that all the time
The jungle of the country's mind is slowly spreading through the air—
Turkey bullets—the electric chair.
So unconscious of mistake—
THE SACRIFICE OF TURKEYS.

"Terrorism continues in most of South Vietnam, and in some of the provinces through which the Saigon-Da nang route passes it has increased markedly in recent months," the Post-correspondent said.

Though civilian traffic flows freely on main routes, Mr. Jay explained, mines are plentiful on unpaved spur routes and military vehicles may receive harassing sniper fire.

"But the fact remains that—whether because of a change in communist tactics, tremendous advances in the South Vietnamese government's pacification effort, or both—the roads are safer than they have been in years," Mr. Jay wrote.

CHARLES FATLESS DRINKS BEER

ECHOS FROM THE GHETTO GUTTERS

Submitted by Terry Collins and reprinted from Life

The Last Poets—three young blacks with Afro-Arabic monikers—are the back side, the black side, the bad "up-'side-yo'-head" side of "soul." Why Sly and his phony, stony Family chant "Don't call me Nigger," the Poets call millions of Negroes "Nigger" because—rage the Poets—these blacks conform only too well with the white man's contemptuous estimate of them. "Nigger" is, in fact the Poets' key word. They sing it in a dozen keys they wing it with all kinds of English. basically, it is a tuant, a challenge to black men to rear up and fight, to demonstrate by some courageous act that they are not the supine victims of their society. "Nigger" is also a word of judgment for the Poets, a sorry, head-shaking word that spells out the fallen condition of their people, sunk so low that no prophet or poet could ever whip himself into a frenzy fierce enouth to fire these slumbering masses.

"Niggers are scared of revolution." chant the Poets in their greatest piece.

"But Niggers shouldn't be scared of revolution because revolution is nothing but change and all Niggers do is change.
Niggers come in from work and change into pimping clothes and hit the street to make some quick change.
Niggers change their hair from black to red to blond and hope like hell their looks will change.
Niggers kill other Niggers just because one didn't receive the correct change.
Niggers change from men to women, from women to men.
Niggers change, change, change.
You hear Niggers say, 'Things are changing, things are changing.'
Yeah, things are changing.
Niggers change into black Nigger things black Nigger things that go through all kinds of changes the change in the day that makes them rant and rave BLACK POWER! BLACK POWER! and the change that comes over them at night as they sigh and moan white thighs! oob, white thighs! . . .
But when it comes for real change
Niggers are scared of revolution."

Flaying the body of black society, the Poets prove themselves social anatomists like Juvenal and Lenny Bruce—able to name and number every folly and vice that afflicts black people. They're also entertainers sending their messages on a jungle telegraph of congas and bongos, working themselves into a sweating, stomping fever on the stage of Harlem's Apollo Theater. Their ribald poems are reminiscent of dirty, rhying, ghetto-gutter ballads about Stackolee and the Signifying Monkee. They are poets, too, in the Villonesque tradition of men who appropriate for poetry the language of the street.

Listen to them band and stretch a word like a blues man worrying a note. Listen to them syncopate their sarcasm like Sunday drummers in Central Park. All the arts and carborundum-gritty styles, all the razzy, jazzy, sassy sounds of black culture meet and mingle in the chants of these uptown medicine men.

Faceless men they are, who doffed their native identities when they jettisoned their American names. The Poets call themselves "street people" and sapire to nothing higher than helping their brothers. The effect of their stunning candor has been amazing. They've jumped to No. 1 on the R & B charts, appeared on New York TV, cut a brilliant LP by Douglas and recorded the sound track for Mick Jagger's film Performance. They've titillated the tie-dyed college kids, gassed the ghetto audience and impressed even those critics who had assumed that the black soul scene was srashing, a victim of its own commercial success and dishonesty.

Now it's time to hail the Poets as the strongest voice of the insurgent black community, as the missing tongue of rhythm and blues music, as prophets of that great moment when blacks will be strong enough to be hard on themselves. First tellers of a truth still too painful to be borne by many, The Last Poets have sounded the authentic note of black apocalypse.

Terry Collins makes the album The Last Poets available to anyone who wants to review it.

THE NAACP SPEAKS TO THE TROUBLED CAMPUS

In the face of mounting fears and hatreds, not infrequently climaxed in violence and death, the NAACP has, with particular vehemence over the last four years, warned that separation and segregation lead inexorably to further division and hatred. The one right road is total commitment to one society—integrated and equal. our sixty-one-year struggle to attain this goal has known many dangerous times—few more perilous than today's—and we do not intend to lose that struggle now.

Of sepcial importance in this critical hour is the matter of integration and equality in the nation's colleges and universities—both the existing institutions and those which are about to be founded to meet the population explosion in the decade immediately ahead. We direct our attention to the campuses both of the so-called predominantly white institutions, with equal concern for the welfare of students in both, and with an expression of dismay over the growth of separatism and the flourishing of segregation in both.

We do not propose to waste energy in an escalation of rhetoric. In this statement, we address ourselves constructively to the nation's campuses and call for concerted action, without which the polarization of higher education will become a principal source of further division, separation, segregation and violence in the nation.

With the National Commission on the Causes and Prevention of Violence, we agree > "that most of this violence can be prevented. . .Our institutions and the spirit of our people are equal to this challenge. . .Responsible participation in decision-making may, for many, be a substitute for the violence that is born of frustration. . .

> "While we categorically condemn all illegal violence, including group violence, as incompatible with the survival of a just, democratic, and humane society, we state emphatically that aggrieved groups must be permitted to exercise their constitutional rights of protest and public presentation of grievances. . .
> "The way in which we can make the greatest progress toward reducing violence in America is by taking the actions necessary to improve the conditions of family and concentrated in the ghetto slums. . .
> "In our judgment, the time is upon us for reordering of national priorities and for a greater investment of our resources in the fulfillment of two basic purposes of our Constitution—to 'establish justice' and to 'insure domestic tranquility.' "

I

Addressing ourselves to all existing institutions of higher education, we commend the following lines of commitment for immediate and sustained action:

A. Equal Opportunity:
   1. Open admission which strikes down all barriers of race, creed, national origin, and ability to pay; accompanied by
   2. Necessary compensatory and supporting services which prevent the open door from becoming a revolving door for the poor and the under-prepared; within the framework of
   3. A greater diversity of types of higher education and of courses of professional and cultural studies.

B. Non-segregated colleges and universities:
   1. Integrated dormitories and living and eating facilities, without exception; together with
   2. Integrated (open admissions to) curricula and courses of study, without exception; implemented by
   3. Active recruitment of students from the inner city; made effective by
   4. Concerted and continuing attention to the special needs of each student—including but not limited to—the needs arising minority group status in a pluralistic society (such as the need for instruction to begin where a student is rather than where the syllabus says he ought to be, and the need for compensatory and supporting services to make real his opportunity to be equal.)
   5. Among other things, the time has come to make the push for integrated student bodies and faculties at the campuses of the so-called predominantly Negro colleges and universities, while not relenting the pressure for integrations of the so-called predominantly white institutions.

C. Higher Education relevant to individual and social needs:
   1. The problems and needs of an urban society, and especially the economics, sociology and political science of the inner city and the ghetto slum, as a central emphasis of curricular offerings and study; together with
   2. The full recognition of the history and culture of all minorities as a part of the history and heritage of all Americans (Calling for special but non-segregated courses of study as the initial step in correcting—in most instances—the blindness, ignorance or prejudices and indifference of most curricular planners up to the very recent past).

D. The democratized college and university:
   1. Through elected representation, the sharing of students, faculty and administrators in the making of campus policy and the goverance of each institution—with adequate safeguards of minority rights and interests;
   2. The democratizing of boards of control through the inclusion of representatives from economic classes and racial groups too often disregarded in constituting the board of control; and
   3. The determined recruitment of administrators and teachers from racial groups and economic classes of national, cultural and religious backgrounds commonly overlooked, an objective which demands, in most instances, a re-examination not only of institutional policy and practice, but also of the processes and criteria of certification and credentials;
   4. The speeding-up of the decision-making process so that frustration is replaced by achievement; and
   5. The full and careful safeguarding of the rights of free speech, free association and free assembly, (including non-violent protest and demonstration) for every student, teacher and administrator, regardless of race, creed or national origin.

II

Addressing ourselves to the need for new institutions of higher education, we cite the fact that more than five hundred new colleges and universities will be needed within the next two decades (about half by 1980) if the children already born are to have educational opportunities equal even to the restricted openings of 1970.

The founding of these new institutions affords an unparalled opportunity to avaid the errors of the past and to begin agressively to meet the needs of late twentieth century America. By the year 2000, about eighty-five percent of the population will live in urban centers. Higher education must direct its attention to the quality of life in the urban sprawl, ministering to the needs of an urban society and the people in it.

The Land Grant University was a new type of institution, founded by a far-seeing Federal government in the final quarter of the nineteenth century, primarily to meet the needs of the rural countryside—where most of the population then lived. It was, in reality, the first great anti-poverty program of this nation.

The plight of the cities and especially of the dweller in the inner city today makes it imperative that a series of "Urban Grant Universities" be speedily established and nurtured. Drawing on the experience of the Land Grant University (both the successes, the partial successes, and the failures), the Urban Grant University should:

1. Be fully integrated in all aspects, without exception;
2. Be fully open to all, without exception.
3. Curricularize the learning experience of the city-dweller (as the Land Grant University curricularized farm life);
4. Through on-campus offerings and informal instruction adn through off-campus extension of educational and other services, provide the urban equivalent of the Land Grant University's "short course," the Agricultural Experiment Station, the County Agent, the 4-H Clubs, etc.

RAMGER AND THE ANIMALS

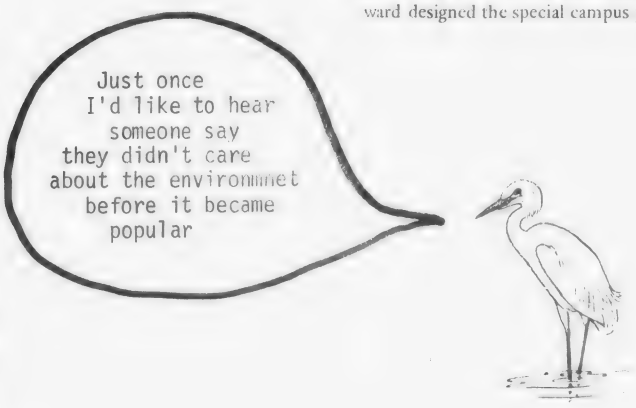
by Kathy Meier

For three days last week students in the Animal Behavior interim shared Maryville's environmental educational center, Tremont, with sixth graders from local elementary schools. Mr. Ramger and students had no planned schedule for the three day stay away from campus. Each "animal" was left to his own educational pursuits. Action revolved around the Tremont library, trails into the Smokies, large stream, the falls, and the truly clean air. Monday night the whole camp trouped out to listen for owls and Mr. Foster's story. Several more adventurour and/or experienced students camped out by the falls for one night. Each day ended in a campfire seminar to recap learning experiences.

There were several authentic animal observations; the author herself saw a lizard, quail, snake and salamander. The main animal attractions were, however, two black bear cubs in an enclosure. The University of Tennessee had made arrangements with the Park to keep them at Tremont for observation by U. T. students.

The "animals" had a fantastic three days and plan to go up to the Smokies again this week. You too could make use of this extension of Maryville. Mr. Foster is the man to call. If you think up an environmental reason, your group may be eligible. Students can also help with the sixth grade program or hack trails out of the wilderness. The "animals" payed $30 each for five days, 12 meals (anyone who has ever eaten at Tremont knows its worth a lot more) and a co-ed dorm. Break the interim monotony-take advantage of Maryville's chunk of the Smokies.

COLLEGE TO CELEBRATE OLD ENGLISH CHRISTMAS



A unique, Old English celebration with an Elizabethan banquet hall motif will highlight the Advent season again this year at Maryville College. The December 13 vesper service will be devoted to a "Round-the-Table Carol Sing." Featuring specially prepared foods and authentic costumes, the sing is designed to spark full participation by the audience. The service could prove a spontaneous worship experience, appealing to all the senses and springing from an atmosphere of comradeship.

The College Choir will lead the singing in an expanded madrigal setting. Dr. David Cartlidge, assistant professor of philosophy and religion, will serve as Master of the Hall. Light musical accompaniment provided by a harpsichord, a few violins, and several flutes and recorders will add to the festive air. In addition, waiters and standard bearers will participate in the service.

Highlights of the Table Sing include: "The Carol of the Olde English Roast Beef," during which time beef sandwiches are offered to those present; "The Boar's Head Carol," featuring a replica of a boar's head complete with an apple in its mouth and marking the serving of more food; and "We Wish You a Merry Christmas," the cue for a huge, flaming bowl of figgy pudding to be brought down the aisles and enjoyed by everyone present.

The Maryville College Advent Vesper Service, Sunday evening, December 13, at 7:00 p.m., will provide traditional carols in a new and refreshing meaningful atmosphere.

People involved in the planning and preparation for Advent Vespers are: Jim Showalter, waiters and ushers; Tom Jones, costumes and props; the Faculty Wives, food preparation, and the College Choir, decorations. Artist for the carol book cover was Ellen Gerra, and Marc Woodward designed the special campus posters.

NEW GYM TO OPEN SATURDAY

Maryville College's new health and physical education building will be opened officially Saturday night, December 12, at 7:30 p.m. with the Scots' home game against Centre College. The Scots have a 2-1 record so far this season. The game will be played on the uni-turf court in the large gym which at present seats 1000, with a capacity of 3600.

The opening ceremonies just prior to the game will involve the College's official receiving of the building from the contractor. Dr. James N. Proffitt, chairman of the Board of Directors of the College, on behalf of the entire constituency, will receive the keys to the building.

The new building has 69,111 sq. ft., and is constructed to serve the entire student body, faculty and staff. Coach Boydson Baird of the College's Department of Physical Education commented: "This is an all-purpose building, not only a gym but a place for health, physical education and recreation classes, intramurals, varsity sports, and recreation."

Special features of the building are the uni-turf surface on the center gym court, coiled partition walls dividing the large gymnasium area into 3 separate gyms, a press TV and radio booth in the main gym, air conditioned pool, handball courts and offices, and carpeting in the team rooms.

In the 3-gym area there can be at one time: 12 badminton courts or 6 volleyball courts or 3 tennis courts. In one of the gyms there are 3 fencing areas. Another addition is a combination baseball batting cage and 8-station golfing cage which hangs from the ceiling and may be drawn up or down.

In addition to the large gym area there are weight training and wrestling rooms, 3 regulation handball courts, 4 varsity team dressing rooms, a physical therapy room, steam baths, and a 7-office suite. A main feature of the building is an olympic-size swimming pool.

Following the game there will be an open house for students and faculty.

HOLIDAY ART SHOW–SALE

A Christmas Art Sale will be held at Maryville College on Friday and Saturday, December 11 and 12. The sale to be held in the gallery of the Fine Arts Center on the campus, will encompass several media, including painting, ceramics, and paper mache construction. Students and faculty of the College and community residents are participating in the sale as artists. The hours will be 2 - 6 p.m. on Friday, December 11, and all day Saturday, December 12.

EDITORIAL

A little more than one year ago I received the following letter and I pass it on to all of you. As the twenty-fifth of December approaches and things begin to get hectic, you may want to turn to this for a welcome change of pace. The letter was dated December 18, 1969, and was sent to me by Richard Halverson. I address it to you by saying,

Dear Friend,

Sick of Christmas already? Fed up with a week to go? It happens . . . . Pressure of gifts yet to be purchased—and what is worse, you haven't got a ghost of an idea what to give. Furthermore, the haunting fear that bills are piling up which will overwhelm you at the end of the month. . . . you'd like to make something of Christmas—put yourself into your gifts—but it will probably be the same old story—rush into a store at the last minute and feverishly buy anything to get it over with.

It's easy to feel like a hypocrite at Christmas time. One may even entertain the idea that he wishes there was no such a holiday as Christmas—wishes it had never been thought of. Why don't you take long enough to stop and think about the real meaning of Christmas. . . . Is it possible that you've never really understood Christmas? Has its meaning escaped you all these years? Or have you forgotten? Have you deliberately put out of your mind the truth it celebrates?

Maybe if you began at the beginning—with the authentic idea of Christmas—it would begin to have meaning for you. God, the inventor of Christmas, can give you back the significance you've missed—or lost—or rejected. Take time to reflect on the Divine original—and the cheap copy you've been carrying around in your mind and heart will vanish. Let the love of God warm your heart and you will share that warmth and love with your family, neighbors and friends. The problem isn't Christmas. . . but what you've made of it!

Get back to the truth this year: "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son that whoever believes on Him will not perish but have everlasting life." John 3:16.

MENTAL HEALTH OF COLLEGE STUDENTS

One of the serious problems in college and university life today is the lack of attention to the personality needs of the students. Suicide is the second most common cause of death on the campus, topped only by automobile accidents: but those who have studied the subject believe that half of the latter are "concealed suicides"; thus suicide actually leads the list. Dr. Howard A. Rusk of the New York University Medical Center collected estimates that 90,000 students each year will threaten suicide, one in ten will make the attempt, and that there will be 1,000 actual deaths resulting. Beyond this, he calculates that among six million students, "some 600,000 have emotional problems for which they need professional assistance." The National Institute of Mental Health finds that "the factor of human isolation and withdrawal" appears to be critical; and the colleges recognize the serious problem created by these "loners" and are trying to provide help but admit (in hundreds of letters to us from deans) that they do not have adequate solutions.

This waste of some of the nation's finest young people is intolerable. Since for every actual death, nearly a hundred have felt so desperate as to threaten it, much light could be thrown on the subject by learning what factors enabled the fortunate ones to work out of their difficulties and keep going.

With the help of a friend who is vitally interested in this subject, the American Institute of Family Relations is carrying out a nation-wide study of what is being done and what could and should be done. We need to hear from as many students and former students as possible who have faced such a crisis. What pulled them out of it: Was it aid furnished by the college or university: or other community organization: or by a friend: or religion: or reading: Just how did they save themselves:

We will not publish the names of any individuals or schools; the information will be handled statistically and anonymously. If you can call the attention of your readers to this study and ask for volunteers who will write the experiences to me ("personal") at the above address, it may contribute toward saving valuable lives.

We shall certainly be most grateful for any help you can give.

Cordially yours,
Paul Popenoe, Sc. D.

THE RITUAL

By Joan Gates

Friday night I saw Bergman's film The Ritual. This flick made a statement that we can't let pass unchallenged! Actually it is a deeply realistic portrayal of twentieth-century man; that is, twentieth century man stripped of his false securities and complex facades.

From a world devoid of absolutes, where a man's actions are predetermined by environment, psychology, and physical impulse, emerge Alex, Hans, and Thea, free from all restraints yet captive to self. Akin to Camus' Stranger, the three act in a moral vacuum. They exist as islands of personal isolation, unable to relate meaningfully with each other no matter how desparately they try to bridge the chasm of despair. They manage to survive, but only at the cost of their own sanity.

Their victum is a man still wrapped up in the pseudo-security of this professional position. Slowly, very slowly they expose him to his naked self, stripped of all pretentious purpose. The victum acknowledges his beastly nature and the cruelty and loneliness of his existence. He no longer restrains himself for reasons that are at the best, contentless; but rather, he wallows in his own lusts and fears. In the final scene the players give him one last push into the abyss of despair. The essence of life is the consummation of self, and when the sun sets, the self is gone. Like a puff of smoke on the horizon, it disintegrates into the nothingness from which it came.

So what? So what if one spineless, stinking old man dies? But what Bergman is really saying is that man is dead. If we look at ourselves as we really are, apart from our momentary securities and campaigns, are we not basically the same? Are we not little, finite islands tumbling, tumbling head over heels in a vacuous universe?

A DOGMATIC STATEMENT?

Since God made the universe and He is an infinite, rational, all-knowing, and personal God, isn't it obvious that He should create a universe of order, of action, reaction, cause and effect? Isn't it also most likely that since man is created something like God (having lost certain powers due to the fall) and, at least, has the powers of reason and choice, he can delve into and discover some of the complexity and unity of the structural universe by using his intellect? If man does create life in a test tube or synthesize a living cell, does this prove that God does not exist?

God has revealed only a tiny bit of knowledge to us; yet man still believes himself to be the central feature of the universe. Electricity was present for centuries, until Count Volta harnessed it. Atomic energy was likewise discovered. What else is present that man has yet to harness and discover in the unseen world? Man has the ability to create, but his is only a secondary creation, using available material. God the Father is the ultimate Creator. Look around if you don't believe it.

THE NAACP SPEAKS TO THE TROUBLED CAMPUS

(Part II)

5. Through the composition and structuring of its board of control, its educational and administrative policy and practice, and its educative experiences, foreshadow the integrated society of free men which it seeks to create.

This new university will be oriented not primarily toward the historic academic disciplines but toward the problems of an urban society and the solution thereof.

Being mission-and-problem-oriented, the Urban Grant University will utilize only those structures and processes of the contemporary college and university which are clearly useful to its mission and clearly helpful in mastering the problems of the city and the city-dweller—among which problems are poverty, disease, violence (including war), racism, and the threat of anti-democratic forces.

The Urban Grant University will be funded primarily by Federal initiative and support, as were the Land Grant Universities at their beginnings. State and minicipal resources will be an important, though lesser, part of the financing.

The new universities will be located where the people are—primarily in the inner city.

Wherever useful, the new university will be guided by the check-list recited in part I of this statement. It will not repeat the errors of separatism, segregation and irrelevance.

The legislation to establish these new universities should be a matter of immediate concern in the Congress and in the Executive Branch of the Federal Government.

III

In addition to the matters discussed in Parts I and II of this statement, the NAACP calls urgent attention ot the following:

The full answer to violence and disruption on campus cannot come from repression and the counter-productive use of military and police forces, but from the correction of the basic causes of student unrest (among which poverty, disease, violence—including war—racism and the threat of repressive reaction must be included in any list, however short) and the re-structuring of academic life and institutions so that the student and professor are actually sharing in shaping their own destiny rather than being forced through frustration and bitterness to resort to fantasies of revolution and the actualities of rebellion.

In short, a total commitment to one society, integrated and equal, means that universities and the society which supports them must be fully integrated, unhampered by prejudice, free of the threat of repression and violence from within or without, open to constructive growth, and rooted in the urban communities they serve.

SCOTS ARE 2-1

The Maryville basketball team successfully opened their season with a tight 72-70 victory of Temple of Chattanooga. The game was close all the way with a five-point being the largest difference between the teams. Captain Warren Morgan paced the Scots with 25 points. Dan McKinstry contributed 19 in the opening win.

Saturday night, however, the Scots were not so lucky. The Tusculum Pioneers posing a 6' 5" average front line, caused the shorter Scots trouble. Although only outrebounded 46-42 many shots were hurried partially deflected. To add to this the Scots shot 30% in the second half which caused the Scots to lose a seven point halftime lead. Dan McKinstry tallied 18 points, followed closely by Warren Morgan with 17, John Weston 12, Scott Thompson 11, and Gary Childress 9. The final score was 80-72 in favor of the Pioneers.

Monday the Scots laced Johnson Bible College 105-87. John Weston and Warren Morgan dominated the game for the Scots and had 32 and 26 points respectively. Gary Childress with 13, Dan McKinstry with 10 and Bryan Harvey with 10 aided the big scorers. All Scots saw action as the final score indicates. Mike Butler with 6, Dale Morse with 4 topped the subs. Scott Thompson scored four but played little due to an ankle injury.

Saturday the Scots play Centre here in the new gym. The Scots hope Mike Barrows who has been sidelined due to illness will be able to play some. The Scots miss his outside shooting and rebounding. Next Monday the Scots go to Bryan College for a game and then return home Thursday when they play their arch-rivals Emory and Henry.

The Wrestlers will make their debut Friday night against U.T. over at the Stokely Athletic Center. Then they return home for a match against Chattanooga next Tuesday.

Come support the teams in all their efforts!!!

After the event the winner was awarded a cash prize.

Send a letter to North Vietnam.

Right now hundreds of Americans are being held captive in North Vietnam.

A few prisoners have made it back. They talk about bamboo cages. Vicious beatings. Malnutrition. Humiliation.

But the North Vietnamese will tell us nothing. And it's this silence that makes our appeal more urgent.

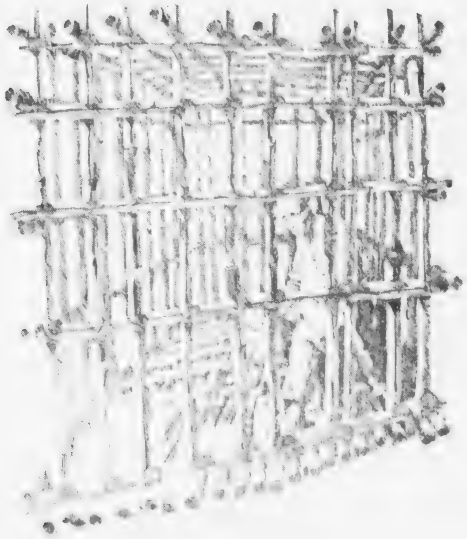
For the families at home, there is no word on who's alive. Who's dead. Or even who's being held. There is nothing. Except the anguish of not knowing.

Maybe you can change this. By writing to the one man who can change it: The President of North Vietnam.

Ask him to release the names of prisoners, allow them to write to their families, and let the Red Cross inspect the prisons to insure proper medical treatment and living conditions.

Remind him that he is bound by the 1949 Geneva Convention which his country signed. And by the Istanbul resolution.

North Vietnamese leaders do care about American public opinion. And if they think they can gain something by bowing to it, they will.



But one letter won't do it. Or a thousand. Maybe it will take millions. So we've got to write now. All of us. And often.

Write a letter tonight. And send it to: Office of the President, Democratic Republic of Vietnam, Hanoi, North Vietnam.

It'll cost you a quarter. But it might save a life.

FACTS ON FOOD

Recent complaints concerning food and eating facilities have been brought to the attention of the administration and A. C. C. A committee was set up to study the problems of the dining hall. This committee is a sub-committee of residence life and community standards. The committee felt students were not aware of the problems and facts concerning the dinding hall.

The committee consulted Mr. Layman and Miss Ware and would like to report our findings. Our board bill is $450. Broken down it means $1.87½ each day. Maintenance, equipment, dishes and salaries of kitchen personnel and a dietician take 87½ cents of this, leaving $1.00 a day for food. After first term it was necessary to spend $544.50 to replace missing dishes, salt and pepper shakers, and silverware and we were told that another order must be placed very soon. It was also brought to our attention that the price of board at Maryville College has not increased in three years—yet standard prices for food have gone up 10% since 1967 as well as rises in labor costs.

We have looked into several other types of food services and have found that they would be very costly to each student. Therefore it should be realized that any changes in food services would result in a very definite increase of the board bill. The committee is most willing to receive suggestions.

"THE HOLE IN THE WALL"

Have you heard of it? If you haven't, you will. It is not just a hole but happens to be the new home for the "Lantern" that has been, and still is in the process of being a type of artistic, unique creation. As a means of expression the colors and murals demand some reaction—hopefully an inspiration. If the spirit of the Hole inspires you, come on up any time to the second floor of the Campus Center and give us a hand with the paint brush for awhile. This especially refers to the artistically minded though that is no prerequisite at all. The Hole has to be ready for use before the January Meetings, so if you haven't finished your mural, please do so soon. If the room is locked, Kim Rugh has a key in Room 419 Davis.

EDUCATION PROGRAM FOR RURAL AMERICA

The Appalachia Educational Laboratory, one of 15 educational laboratories funded by the United States Office of Education, has developed a system for bringing an effective early childhood education program into the rural hills and hollows where children never have had the opportunity for such an experience.

The home-oriented AEL program has been designed specifically to combat the isolation imposed by typical characteristics of rural Appalachia—rugged terrain, poor roads, scattered population, a low tax base.

The program has proved its worth in the mountain areas of Southern West Virginia. there, in a comprehensive three-year field test, youngsters from 3 to 5 get a running start on first grade at less than half the per pupil cost of keeping a child in conventional kindergarten.

Backed by a $1 million research program, the AEL early childhood education approach was developed with three interlocking components—a mobile classroom, daily television lessons and individual guidance through the weekly visit of a paraprofessional who works with the mother and child.

Materials presented in each phase have been planned carefully by the AEL team of curriculum development specialists to relate to and complement the other components. Tests show that to gain maximum benefit, the children need to participate in all three phases of the program.

Experts have declared that important learning years in a child's life are form 3 to 6. These are the years rural youths are most sheltered from outside influences. Thus the AEL program, designed to reach children during these critical years, provides the opportunity to broaden the experiences of the young child mostly within the security of his home.

AEL's program will take only one professionally trained preschool education teacher for each seven required for a conventional program.

Field test results show that the AEL-developed program for early childhood education is ready for widespread implementation. AEL specialists are recommending it as the msot effective way of reaching rural preschoolers of Appalachia.

Costs of this home-oriented program are less than half that of sending a child to conventional kindergarten even if one were available.

In order to demonstrate the EArly Childhood Education program:

ACC MEETING

Mr. Olsen visited the All-College Council to describe the survey his sociology class is planning. The students will render the college the service of making a study of the role of religion in our community.

The chairman of the Elections Committee, Dusty Miller, presented a report including a schedule of nominations and elections and a description of procedures and responsibilities. Such important spring elections as those of officers for classes and the ACC were set early enough to avoid the end-of-the-year confusion to increase student awareness and participation.

In the fall some local businessmen expressed interest in dialogues with Maryville College students to those involved with the MC '70 Report. The ACC would like to provide this opportunity in some professional seminars.

The text book shortage which annoys students at the beginning of every term was mentioned. The problem results from schedule changes made after preregistration, the reluctance of the Bookstore to order often unreturnable extra books, and late deliveries by the publisher.

Use and abuse of the new gym was discussed. Students are invited to comment on this topic and any other in Town Hall Meeting on January 27th.

SO FAR SO GOOD

The Pentagon reports that marine life is alive and well at the ocean-bottom resting place of the LeBaron Russell Briggs which was sunk August 18 by the Navy with a cargo of deadly nerve gas aboard.

Scientist who photographed the hulk of the Briggs the last week of October report that marine life is flourishing in the 16,000-foot depths. They report no evidence of dead or dying organisms and claim they saw fish swimming within 300 to 400 yards of the ship.

Conservationists and others—including the government of Bermuda—had feared that the nerve gas might leak from its concrete containers and contaminate the surrounding ocean. The Pentagon reports that chemical tests and water samples taken in the vicinity of the Briggs showed no evidence of nerve gas.

EDITORIAL

January is usually the month when some people make New Year's Resolutions. January is also the month when most people who make resolutions break them. I wonder if each of us is willing to make the following thirteen resolutions for 1971. If we are willing . . . we could be a big help to ourselves, our friends, and even those that we might not get along with. I hope we'll try.

1. I will not drive the four-wheeled polluter any more than absolutely necessary.
2. I will use soap not detergent.
3. I will use returnable bottles only.
4. I will not burn leaves.
5. I will buy the giant economy size and avoid products with unnecessary packaging.
6. I will not buy items in plastic, non-biodegradable containers.
7. I will not use trading stamps or coupons.
8. I will use white tissue only.
9. I will avoid disposable products.
10. I will not poison insects or weeds.
11. I will urge the new postal corporation to prohibit junk mail.
12. I will write letters encouraging legislators to fight for passage of strong laws that make it illegal for any individual or industry to dump filth or radioactive materials into our air or water.
13. I will become active in and support groups dedicated to clean air and pure water.

I'm signing my name to this, will you put your signature under mine?

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT:

Regarding particulars and universals. . . .
Jean Paul-Sartre has said

"A finite point has no meaning unless it has an infinite reference point."

What possible relevance does this statement have to the topic at hand? Is he saying that unless the particulars have a universal over them, the particulars have no meaning? If, indeed, this is what he's saying, is he correct?

Regardless whether the particular is an atom, a chair, or even you, there must be a relationship to something—if the atom, the chair, or even you, is to have any meaning. What is that something?

—AEL will make available 150 television lessons.

—AEL has developed many resources in terms of know-how and personnel which could be used to great advantage in the demonstration and implementation of the program. The Laboratory is prepared to provide complete reports on the development of the program, specifications for the implementation and operation, and professional staff assistance to groups who are interested in implementing the program.

"NO MAN'S LAND"

by Debbie Branch

All those resolutions he made—
Commitments
Obligations or Necessities?
To Whom?
We do not give resolutions to the world.
It demands them.
Not out of selfish pride, but because it cannot exist without those who say,
"I promise to LOVE
No matter what."
He made a resolution to LOVE
and we broke it . . .
We broke it because of Commitments
Obligations or Necessities.
To What?
And you pity someone for loving
A person he will never have!
Better to pity someone for loving WAR
We will always have that.
In WAR
it is necessary to obligate ourselves to commitments.
WAR made a New Year's Resolution—to HATE,
While its young soldiers,
resolved to Die for Their country
so that they can come home to . . .
LOVE?
They do not give death to the world.
It demands it.
Not out of wounded pride,
but because TODAY
it cannot exist
without
those who say,
"We came, we saw, we conquered—
For what?"
We did not make a resolution to do all this out of LOVE.
Then tell me,
why did we make resolutions to do everything else that way?

As of January 11, 1971, the Bookstore will charge a $1.00 service charge on all returned checks. We had hoped that such a charge would not become necessary, but in view of the large number of checks being returned we are forced to make this charge.

VIEWPOINT:

Oftentimes one gets caught up in the many regulations of the educational system and discovers that meeting specific requirements and actual learning are not synonomous. What a student readily gains from any study or scholastic endeavor can be most sincerely evaluated only by himself for he soon finds that it is very easy to ride the system efficiently without the ideal interest every teacher desires. The de-humanizing factor, the grade, plays the role of some materialistic goal and certainly the dean's list, as shown by the recent cartoon in the paper, is idolized by many. It is very easy to form value judgements based upon a student's grades and his class rank. How then, can a student become involved and interested in any particular field without becoming bogged down with all the implications? He simply cannot under the present system of structured requirements, unmotivating criteria, and non-creative or impersonal professors. Although every student is different in his interests, there must be some collective or "disciplinary" interchange of ideas and here is the place where a teacher serves as an arbiter and/or mediator. It is the feeling of this writer that assigning specific amounts of reading and abiding by administrative expectations per se does not promote student interest. As long as teachers feel bound by the present educational system, true liberal education cannot exist. The doctrine of the omniscient teacher which one receives throughout his pre-collegiate years is another fallacy of the present system of education. Education should entail experience and relevance to people which are so often left out of the classroom setting. Through an awareness of others emotions in any given social or educational phenomena does true education evolve. One suggestion would be to confront students with new techniques and situations whereby they would, through individual experience and comparative research, broaden their insight into all aspects of education. One might think a progressive change in academics idealistic or inconceivable in light of President Nixon's statement that the youth of today are the best educated yet. What is happening however, is that even though the opportunities are far greater for obtaining a higher education, there is still a lag between the way in which a student traditionally obtains a formal education and the need for people whose education has aided them in understanding and realizing the many needs of others.

POETRY CONTEST WINNERS

Last fall, The Highland Echo sponsored a student poetry contest. Many students submitted entries, and the faculty of the English Department judged the poetry during the interim term. The three winning entries are printed below. We of the Echo staff would like to thank all the contestants who participated.

First prize of five dollars goes to Alvin Baker for his poem:

To Call a Flower False

You cannot call a flower false just because it dies.

You cup its fragrance in your hands and weep when all its petals fall.

The Sun will dry your tears,
You'll stoop and pick another, to watch its bloom and death.

You'll weep again because you know it must be so.

You'll turn — and do the same again.

Second prize of three dollars is awarded to Steve Horton for this untitled poem:

Pointing, broken finger to the sky;
This is how, in the desert, he found the light that evaded and eluded, leaving him jaded and deluded.
hostile to hungry humans.

Water coursed in the veins of his up-stretched limbs,
water mulled in his taunt spiny belly.
Like Marat in the bath, water soothed and soaked his thick rhinoceros hide.
Water became his balm, his salve, his sedative.
Water was the savior of his sanity.
More than for water, he longed for solitude, distance from chatter and chase, hurrying highways, and blood-lines of man-made vulgarity that dissected his silhouette in the blackness.

Third prize of two dollars was won by Kent Marshall for this poem, untitled:

Long ago to you I called:
I'm headed for the sun, come along.
The route is uncertain,
The Schedule's not known,
But still I ask you, come along.
I tried on the highways,
The speed blinds the eye.
I tried on the skyways,
The clouds cover all.
Let's try that old country road
And carry just our own load, come along.

Consider how much more you often suffer from your anger and grief, than from those very things for which you are angry and grieved.

GIRL WATCHERS PROFILES

If you're a male undergraduate who admires girls with full figures, but slender legs, you're probably a campus swinger.

If a hefty girl with ample legs appeals to you, chances are you're a loser in the college environment.

A preference for a moderate build may mark you as an academic ascetic—conformist, abstentious, generous, non-self-seeking.

Three University of Illinois psychologists, Jerry Wiggins, his wife Nancy, and Judith Conger Cohen, reached these conclusions after showing silhouettes of different female figures to 95 male undergraduates. The silhouettes varied in the size of the various parts. Undergraduates with certain personality traits as revealed on standard psychological tests tended to pick a certain type of figure as their favorite.

The results of the study appear in "Who's Beautiful to Whom—and Why?" in the January issue of Science Digest.

In two groups, what seems like a small difference in figure preference indicates a significant difference in personality. A group called "The Winners" by the psychologists prefers an ample bust, moderate to small mid-section and moderate legs, an only slightly different configuration than that admired by "The Swingers." "The Winners," however, are much more well-organized and career-oriented than their swinging colleagues.

In a similar study, Psychologist Nancy Minahan of Wisconsin State University showed three-quarter profile drawings of females to 200 high-school girls. All the faces were exactly the same, but the figures varied in the size of their bust, hips, and legs. Few of the girls could pick out a figure similar to their own. The prettier the high-school girl's face was, the less able she was to match a drawing to her own figure.

Older teenagers with pretty faces were particularly apt to think their figure was better than it really was, a misjudgment Dr. Minahan thinks is due to their years of successful interaction with boys.

SCOTS – 6-1

The Maryville basketball team continues to play good ball as their season record climbed to 6-1. The latest victim of the Scots was Clinch Valley, 102-91. Mike Barrows scored his college high with 42 points. He was 19-28 from the field and added four free throws. Dan McKinstry added 27 and Warren Morgan 18. Others scorers were John Weston 6, Scott Thompson 2, Mike Butler and Gary Childress 3 and Bryan Harvey – 1. Warren Morgan had 22 rebounds and John Weston – 14.

In a game played at Christmas vacation the Scots held off a late surge by Emory and Henry and edged the Wasps 91-90. The ots had rolled to a 20 point half time lead and after ten minutes of the second half they still hald a 18 point edge. The Wasps began pressing and the Scots had several turnovers which made it close. With four seconds left Warren Morgan hit two free throws to give the Scots a three point lead and Emory and Henry followed with a meaningless bucket. Warren Morgan had 29 points and Mike Barrows added 22. Dan McKinstry and John Weston Both contributed 15 points.

Last night the Scots played Warren Wilson. Saturday, Milligan comes here featuring Mark Berg, a Michigan transfer averaging 27 points and Toonie Cash hitting about 24 a game. Following this game the Scots go to Birmingham Southern for a game on Monday and then return home for an engagement with the LMU Railsplitters.

Come back the Scots through the season.

ALPHA SIGMA WINS VOLLEYBALL LEAGUE

The Alpha Sigma Sledghammers won another championship by going undefeated (10-0) in volleyball competition during interim. Out of the 22 games played by Sig, the Sledgehammers posted a 20-2 record.

Women's Intramural Basketball begins January 19. First game – 3:45.

SWIM MEET SATURDAY

For the past five months Maryville High School has been using the Maryville College Pool in order to put together a Swim Team. John Weeks and other MC students have been coaching the team. Maryville High School will hold their first home meet in the new pool this Saturday. The meet starts at 1:30 and spectators are welcomed. The pool will be open for free swim after the meet. Other meets will be held on January 30, February 13 and 20, and March 13 and 27.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

Last Saturday night at College Park, Maryland, the University of Maryland played host to second rated (at the time) South Carolina. The first meeting ended with a brawl and suspension of the game with five minutes left. This game had the makings of another brawl, but nothing occured. My reason for writing concerns Maryland Coach Lefty Dressell's tactics. He instructed his boys to hold the ball. USC Coach Frank McGuire told his boys to let them hold it. The result was a 4-3 halftime score in Maryland's favor. The final ended 31-30 Maryland in overtime as they scored six points in the last sixteen seconds and all came from a turnover on three occasions by All-American John Roche.

The stragegy employed proved a success but yet, should some restrictions be placed on such absurd basketball. The pros have a definite time limit to shoot. The NBA, 24 seconds, the ABA – 30. In this writer's eyes, 40 or 45 seconds could adequately be used by a team and also the fans would not become bored. This move would minimize stalling and force the team to go for a basket. Stalling when executed right is great, but many teams have lost because of stalling. I imagine the UCA rules committee will look into it when they meet in Houston this year. This problem is definitely something to think about and could use some revamping.

WRESTLERS DEFEAT UT

Beat. That's what the University of Tennessee Vols were last Saturday night as the Scots downed them 17-16 in a close match.

The Scots held a slight edge through most of the light weight matches beginning with John Poore, Maryville, and Frank Thompson, UT in the 126 pound class. Poore won the desicion handily by 6-2.

Next, UT forfeited the 134 lb. class bringing 142 pounders Dave Gaughan, MC, and Jim Watson, UT into contention. UT won by decision.

In the 150 lb. class Ed Johnson, Maryville, controlled Gary Bullard, UT, and won 7-2 in a decision bout.

In the 158 lb. class John Klein, Maryville, lost to Barry, UT.

At 167 Brad Kelher, Maryville, won through a near fall over opponent, Berney Bush, UT.

The Scots dropped the next two matches as Wofford, UT defeated Mark Hughes, Maryville, in the 177 lb. class. At 190 Bill Baggett, Maryville, was pinned by Thompson, UT'

With the team score 14-16 in favor of UT, the match entered its final phase as Dick Maloney, Maryville, tackled Mills, UT, in the heavy-weight division. With much aggressiveness, Maloney clinched the Scots' victory in a 3-0 decision bout.

RELIGIOUS LIFE QUESTIONED

In way of explanation, Bobby Eickelberg asked me to write an article (500-600 word filler) on anything I, as a philosophy & religion major, wished. Assuming that I was, in some way, to represent 3rd floor Anderson, I decided to write about Maryville College as a religious institution.

I think I can safely begin by commenting that M. C. is no longer the Christian academy of Isaac Anderson's day. A Sunday morning bed check or an inspection of Vespers (or January meetings) would reveal less than total enthusiasm. I've even heard rumors of drinking & smoking on campus.

O. K., conceding the depraved state of many of our fellow students, what vestiges of Christianity (or maybe, more broadly, religion) should we maintain? We could require an oath of Belief upon admittance or a return to morning chapel Fortunately the trend toward religious freedom that began centuries ago has finally caught up with M. C. Many of us foresee the end of any Presbyterian (or is it Christian) affiliation.

Before my heretical remarks condemn me, let me continue by saying I do feel that M. C. will & should maintain its religious orientation. I'd like to suggest that its liberal arts program, its individual emphasis, its very heart (or community) offers each of us a chance to understand ourselves, our world, and the connection between the two.

Each of us stands on the brink of his or her "own life." No longer will we be guests in our parents' world, but we will create a world of our own in our own image. What rules will our generation follow? How shall we develop them? I I can't & won't try to guess. But each must seriously analyze himself or herself in terms of a "philosophy of life." As we press this introspection we may develop a rational, agnostic philosophy or we may attempt to understand ourselves in a cultic (music, drugs, love, etc.) manner. Most of us will gravitate towards a more traditional system of beliefs (such as Christianity). None the less, M. C. provides the opportunity to pursue such self-analysis and often challenges our positions.

This opportunity demands our attention. If our generation is to have any hope of overcoming Dr. Rhodes' charge of copping out, we've got to have the guts to search & discover and to maintain our self-integrity. I hope I don't seem to be intellectualizing this process because ever-

WASHINGTON (FCNS)—Who constitutes the campus establishment? A recent survey of 60,477 college faculty members by the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education indicates that it's certainly not the Military Industrial Complex.

The survey found that in the liberal arts curriculum, where students receive the most opinion on politics, philosophy, and socio-economic issues, the tilt was definately to the left.

The following percentages of faculty in these disciplines identified themselves as "left" or "liberal": sociology, 80.8; anthropology, 69.4; psychology, 69.1; economics, 61.7; political science, 71.8; English 65.8; languages, 56.0; philosophy 77.1; history, 68.7; religion 68.4.

Conservatives were few indeed, ranging from the 0.1 per cent of sociologists willing to call themselves strongly conservative, to the 12.7 per cent of economists who identified themselves as moderately conservative.

The voting habits of the faculty members reflected the same tendencies. Nixon's high in the liberal arts departments was 8.0 per cent in sociology. Vietnam views also correlated with ideological stance, as over two-thirds of the faculty in each liberal arts department favored either immediate withdrawal or formation of a coalition government. Sociology was again the leader with 85 per cent.

NIXON ORDERS

No-lead Gasoline— President Nixon has ordered all government-owned vehicles to operate on low-lead or unleaded gasoline wherever possible. Since the Federal Government buys one-half of one percent of all gasoline purchased in the United STates, the order may stimulate the production and marketing of unleaded gas around the country.

In praising the President's action, Environmental Quality Council Chairman Russell Train noted that low-lead fuels reduce hydrocarbon emissions by a range of 7 to 20 percent. Hydrocarbons are a major component of air pollution in most urban areas of the Nation.

The order requires that as the government's 600,000 cars come up for replacement they will be replaced by autos that can run on non-leaded fuel entirely. By 1974 the General Services Administration says the Federal Government will no longer need to buy any leaded fuel.

Nixon appealed to the governors of all 50 states to take similar actions with regard to state-owned vehicles.

MORMONS VISIT MC

by John Powell

Was Jesus Christ ever in America? Elders Hanan and Schofield, Mormon missionaries to Maryville, think so.

As two of the 14,000 missionaries of the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, Elders Hanan and Schofield presented a display of Morman art accompanied by low-keyed proselytizing last Monday in the Student Center.

Elder Schofield, a Brigham Young University graduate and native of Oregon, told of his two year mission to Tennessee and Kentucky. While he likes the hospitality here, he indicated that converts were lacking due to the narrow-minded attitudes of the region.

However, he considerably preferred this region to that of a fellow missionary in Bolivia. As a Mormon missionary, this friend was run out of several towns at machete point. In performing his missionary work, the untrained friend had to act as a medical doctor at times, delivering three babies and once performing a tricotomy with a rusty razor blade.

As Elder Schofield explained, Mormons believe in two books, the Bible and the Book of Mormon. The latter is a collection of writings of various New World peoples between 600 BC and 421 AD, principably the prophet, Mormon. With the destruction of Mormon's race, his son, Moroni, hid the plates of the Book of Mormon. These plates remained hidden until revealed to Joseph Smith in 1827. After transcribing these plates, Smith published the Book of Mormon and founded the Mormon Church.

Today, the Church of the Latter Day Saints has its headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah.

RETREAT ON SATURDAY

A retreat will be held at Tremont for students and faculty, as a part of the January Meetings series, on Saturday, January 23. The four speakers will be with us. There will be a relaxed schedule which will allow for fellowship, small group interaction and time for reflection on the events of the week. The cost of $1.00 will include a sack lunch and a warm supper. You are asked to sign up in the Chaplain's Office so that food and transportation plans can be completed. If you can drive and would be willing to take some passengers, this would be appreciated. We will leave from the chapel steps at 9:30 a.m. and return in time for the wrestling match (7:30 p.m.).

EDITORIAL

Miami, St. Petersburg, Ft. Lauderdale, Charleston, Atlanta, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Washington, and Baltimore—all have something in common this weekend. Maryville college students are at this moment in all of these (and many more) places. All of these people ahve taken off for our famous "January Meetings Break."

This is seen as unfortunate by some and fortunate by many. Regardless of how you feel, this reveals a number of things.

First it shows a sense of honesty on the part of kids who have stopped playing games with "religion" and are admitting that contemporary "religious" activity is hardly worth a hill of beans. Hopefully this will lead to less hypocrasy in the churches.

Second, it shows that the philosophy and religion department have done an excellent job in teaching Philosophy 101. They have effectually [gotten over] to most of the kids what Sartre, Camus Bergman, etc. have been saying, i. e. Man is dead, man must live in an existential world, everything is relative, there are no absolutes. The adaption of this philosophy is widespread on this campus either unconsciously or consciously.

Third, I feel that this points out the irrelevence of a sociological, "do good," humanistic type of religion that seems to be championed here at Maryville. Along this line, I feel that we consider the lostness of man and the implications of such a state for the Christian and the non-Christian.

One unrelated thought . . . when will the "powers that be" realize that when you call off classes for "special meetings," only a very small percentage attend? As Peter, Paul and Mary sing "How many times . . . ."

Bob Eickelberg

To Whom it May Concern:

I would like to make the Maryville College Community aware that the quality and quantity of food could be increased without a significant increase in price.

Southwestern at Memphis has a catering service. It costs 8 cents more per day than M. C. I know this for a fact because we, the track team, were talking to the manager and told him we got lousy food for $450 per year. He said for 8 cents more per day we could enjoy fine meals. We spent four days in Memphis for the state meet.

This is an example of what we ate: Breakfast was out of this world. Ham or bacon with any style eggs you wanted, toast, jelly, all the juice you wanted (including O. J.), hot and cold cereal, pancakes or french toast, milk machines. And you could go back for all the food you wanted. Lunch and dinner were just as good. Coke, sprint, etc. were available for free. Dessert was also served and besides the regular desserts a large freezer was filled with different kinds of ice-cream. Soup bowls were put out beside the freezer.

This may be hard to believe but I didn't even have to eat any bread or rolls to fill myself up. If you have any questions or comments about the food service at S. W. ask any track member who was at the State meet last year or write Southwestern at Memphis.

I must agree that a $544.50 bill for replacing dining instruments is stupid and doesn't say too much for the students and hired kitchen workers. But it must be cheaper to buy ice every day from the Maryville Ice and Coal Company than buy an ice machine or M. C. would have changed. Right?!? It also must be cheaper to buy milk in economical ½ pint cartons than have a milk machine. For example when Carson-Newman installed milk machines the bill sky-rocketted, but today C. N.'s bill is actually lower than before.

All in all no matter who's running the surveys or committees something should and better be done about the quality and quantity of food at M. C.

AND NOW A SHORT PAUSE FOR STATION IDENTIFICATION

Most people, perhaps even the majority, think conservation is like television cops and robbers. A lot of apparent action, infighting and poignant dialogue between polluters and conservationists. A seven-day-a-week 12 month-a-year action rerun wherein ao one really gets hurt.

But over the years a lot of good men have become casualities in the battle to protect the public and its resources. Of course everyone hears about the Hickels and the Glasgows insisting on doing the job the public pays them for and getting the ax for making politically unacceptable waves. But somehow these machinations in the Nation's Capital are perceived through a foggy mystique that compliments rather than destroys the TV cops and robbers illusion.

The public seldom, if ever, hears about the man who ends up on the beach because he refused to flush a tanker's oil into coastal waters in violation of the law. Or the state refused to flush a tanker's oil into coastal waters in violation of the law. Or the state fishery biologist who's transferred to a menial job at a remote hatchery for refusing to look the other way when the small-time politicians start making deals with the public's fishery resources. Or the man who is summarily fired (given the opportunity to regisn) for refusing to prostitute himself and his profession by accepting "political realities" as a substitute for what's right.

No, one seldom hears about what happened to these men and their families. But any one who's been in the conservation profession for more than a year can likely recall the name of a colleague who's been wounded or even crippled in the environmental battle. Anyone who's been around for ten years would have little trouble in coming up with a name to commemorate every year.

The August 17, 1970 Time carried an exception to the general rule of environmental casualty obscurity. A young reporter named Charley Thompson was to cover environmental pollution for WJXT-TV in Jacksonville, Florida. He did his job well, and the polluters and their apologists in Jacksonville didn't like it. So, they put the arm on the station and Thompson was unceremoniously thrust into the growing legion of environmental casualties.

Decorated 18 times in Viet Nam, Thompson said, "I've covered civil rights marches and jail riots, but this conservation thing is the one that really scared the hell out of me."

In a philosophical sense at least, the public always wins when a good man refuses to sell out. Sometimes there's even a practical, happy ending for the public interest, if not for the man who made the sacrifice.

In August 1970, one Captain William Guthrie decided to celebrate his 30th anniversary with Eastern Airlines by not dumping into the air the excess jet fuel that accumulates in small holding tanks during landings. Captain Guthrie said the aerial dumping made the runways greasy and slippery and contributed air pollution and poor visibility, a condition that led to the fatal crash of a pilot friend in 1962.

His resolution to manually drain off the excess fuel prior to take-off earned Captain Guthrie an early pension from Eastern beginning in October.

The public's happy ending came in the form of a November 13, 1970 press release from HEW's National Air Pollution Control Administration. It announced that NAPCA asked airline officials to stop aerial dumping of jet fuel that seeps from the engines into holding tanks during trips.

In a letter to the airlines, NAPCA's Commissioner John T. Middleton said such dumping would be likely to encrease air pollution problems in neighborhoods around airports. He asked the airlines to report to him by November 30 on measures taken to stop any such dumping.

Citing National Airport in Washington, D. C., Middleton said castoff jet fuel amounts to an estimated 110 tons a year, and such quantities "could have significant effects on the health and welfare of people who live and work near the airports."

Jet aircraft engines burn a fuel like kerosene, which does not vaporize quickly, Middleton's letter said that much of the discarded fuel "probably either falls back to the ground or remains suspended as msit in the air."

The fuel seeps from manifolds into holding tanks whenever the engines are stopped. The holding tanks are emptied automatically within the first few minutes after takeoff.

Middleton said fuel losses from dumping are estimated to total over 6,700 tons (2 million gallons) a year, nationwide. This, he said, "not only adds to air pollution but is wasteful of essential fuel resources at a time of shortage."

But msot people don't have a pilot's union or Time magazine to go to bat for them, so there's a real shortage of happy y human being has the capacity to seek and learn. Yet to live as a community of all humanity we must each struggle with our own meaning if we are to survive as a species.

I'd like to conclude by paraphrasing Dr. Swenson's description of Christianity as a poetry of life suitable for her. M. C. rightly demands that we each seek our own poem. It is this demand, and not a plastic Christianity, which lies at the heart of our religious community. We must reach out; we may find God . . . or Man . . . or Both!

endings these days. The environmental casualties have been and always will be mostly just plain folks with a well functioning conscience and a well developed sense of right and wrong.

The real probability of getting hurt professionally and personally comes with the territory. But that knowledge does little to ameliorate the inevitable, tragic rise in human casualties as we begin facing up to this country's environmental problems.

WHAT'S YOUR POLLUTION IQ?

Under conservationist's fire for a great many years for polluting the environment, during the last year or so Indistry has responded with an estimated billion dollars worth of advertising designed to tell its side of the pollution story.

The full impact of this vast information program cannot be accurately assessed, of course, but each individual can make some subjective judgments by his performance in answering true or false to the following statements.

1. ( ) Industry cannot stop polluting without going out of business.
2. ( ) The public demanded throwaway bottles.
3. ( ) We must cut more timber from our National Forests or the poor will go homeless.
4. ( ) Water pollution is not harmful to health because treatment plants remove all the harmful chemicals and other pollutants.
5. ( ) Conservationists opposing pollution from electric power plants will cause blackouts and brownouts this summer.
6. ( ) Radiation from nuclear power plants poses no danger to the environment.
7. ( ) Thermal pollution from electric power plants will actually benefit marine life.
8. ( ) Industrial polluters didn't realize they were hurting the environment until just the last year or so.
9. ( ) The federal government is spending more money than ever before to enforce air and water pollution control regulations.
10. ( ) There are no "bad guys", everyone is equally to blame for our country's current pollution problems.
11. ( ) The increasing incidence of water-borne disease is directly related to increasingly polluted public water supplies.
12. ( ) In order to prevent pollution, the pulbic will have to give up air conditioners and other luxuries.
13. ( ) Industry is willing to clean up its pollution, but technology just hasn't developed most of the necessary techniques.
14. ( ) Private citizens can make a significant contribution to cleaning up water pollution by putting bricks in their tiolet tanks and not using colored tissues.
15. ( ) At the present time there is no substitute for DDT but the U. S. Department of Agriculture is working hard on it.
16. ( ) Hundreds of Americans will be killed by air pollution this year and the health of millions more will be damages.
17. ( ) One out of four people taking this test is drinking water considered unsafe by the U. S. Public Health Service.
18. ( ) Industry is going all out to support stringent anti-pollution legislation.
19. ( ) The Federal government is finally using the full power of existing laws to crack down on polluters.
20. ( ) After seeing industry's side of the pollution picture, all things considered, the big conservation organizations have been a little unfair in their criticism.

Give yourself one point for each correct answer, then grade yourself on the following chart:

15-20. . .You've been digging out the facts.
10-15. . .You're normally susceptible.
5-10. . .You're probably a major stockholder in the Brooklyn Bridge.
0-5. . .You're a senior officer in a polluting company and believe everything your PR firm says about you.

HOW TO MASTER BAFFLETALK

(Reprinted from Presbyterian Layman ) By Emily Louise Conrad

From the platform the minister addressed the Church and Society study group: "action-oriented orchestration of innovative inputs, generated by escalation of meaningful, indigenous, decision-making dialogue," he solemnly advised, "can maximize the vital thrust toward a nonalienated and viable infrastructure."

Well, nobody ever claimed that the modern socioreligious language was easy to understand. In fact, laymen probably aren't expected to understand, they're supposed to be impressed.

But if, instead, you are frustrated by the nonmenaing of most of what is spoken in the name of religion these days, take heart! you, too, can master baffletalk and even practice it yourself.

The trick is to combine perfectly good English words in such a way that the syntactical result guarantees that no coherent thought is expressed.

Even the busiest minister or the laziest layman can become an expert at baffletalk by following these simple instructions. Below are listed some of the words most frequently heard in church groups today.

0. relevant	0. optimal	0. feedback
1. indigenous	1. innovative	1. infrastructure
2. nonalienated	2. viable	2. syncretism
3. meaningful	3. multilinked	3. dialogue
4. action-oriented	4. determinative	4. maximization
5. incremental	5. decision-making	5. problem complexes
6. normative	6. anachronistic	6. ecumenism
7. multidimensional	7. reciprocal	7. hang-up
8. categorical	8. in-depth	8. tensions
9. contextual	9. eschatological	9. involvement

Now choose a three digit number–your area code or the last three figures of your zip code will do nicely. Match your number to the corresponding word in each list. Thus, 680 becomes "normative, in-depth feedback" and 749 is "multidimensional, determinative involvement."

Memorize your phrase, but don't be in too big a hurry to use it. Remember you have sat in silent dismay for a long time. Ease into the action by asking the speaker how he proposes to achieve "incremental, eschatological syncretism" (592). This puts the burden on him to answer while you get your next phrase in mind. Don't bother to listen to his reply–a senseless question hardly deserves a sensible answer, so don't expect one.

When you feel easy and comfortable using your new phrases, it is time to add a few more words which you will corrupt just a little bit. Don't say "channel," say "channelize." Never use "construct" as a verb, but as a noun; conversely, use "structure" as your verb–" . . . should structure this committee so that the power construct will be . . ." An don't object that something is "devious," protest its "contextual deviosity."

Then as you are speaking smoothly and confidently (and more often) in the certain knowledge that what you say makes no sense whatever, begin to drop a few names. Be careful not to make it sound as though you are actually quoting any philospher, living or dead, because somebody in your crowd may just possibly have read him.

Instead, murmur, "Don't you agree with Kierkegaard?" Or, "But you will remember that poor Bonhoeffer wrote from prison." Or "How did Tillich feel about this?"

Of course, if the confusion compounded by your contribution to church talk becomes chaos, you can always ask the speaker to state in plain, simple one-syllable English words, exactly what he means. Chances are, he is just as confused as you are.

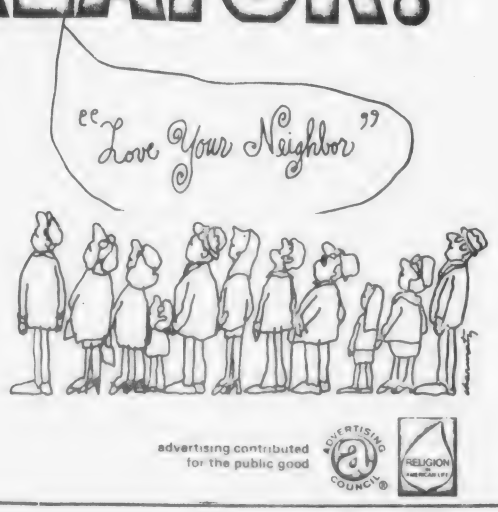
The Scots found the going rough in recent action as they dropped two of their last three.

The Scots handled Warren Wilson easily and the final score was 104–79. For the Scots Warren Morgan had 28 points, Barrows–21, Weston–15, McKinstry–13, Butler–8, Postler–6, Morse–5, Childress–4, Harvey–2, Cundiff–2. Warren Morgan also had 13 rebounds, Postler–12, Weston–11.

The highlight of the evening was when Freshman John Cundiff of New Jersey, roared off the pivot to lay in his first two varsity points.

Saturday night, Milligan beat the Scots in one of the most exciting games seen here in years. The final score was 114-111. The Scots held a slim 63-61 halftime lead but the lead had changed hands many times.

The second half saw the lead sway back and forth before Milligan took a seven point lead. The Scots put on the press and stole the ball four times and got three buckets and had the ball for a winning basket. The Scots worked for the shoot and when taken it just failed to connect. In the scramble for the rebound a foul by the Scots was called.



For Maryville, Warren Morgan–41, Barrows–24, McKinstry, Thompson, Weston–10 each, Childress–5. For Milligan, Berg and Threlkeld had 33 and Cash 26.

Monday, the Scots ventured to Birmingham for a fray with Birmingham Southern. The Scots never seemed to get untracked and finally succombed 74-59. The Scots pulled within 53-50 but could not ever get the equalizer. The Scots besides never getting untracked had foul problems. John Weston and Warren Morgan were foul victims and others were very near. In the final analysis the Scots were charged with 30 fouls.

Dan McKinstry paced the Scots with 22 points. Mike Barrows added 15, Morgan–8, Weston–10, Childress–3, Thompson–1.

Saturday the Scots go to Emory & Henry for a game. On Monday the Scots are here to play Bryan College. Following those games the Scots are off for five days and then hit the road for four games over a two week period.

WRESTLERS SPLIT

The Maryville College Wrestling team bowed to the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga grappler 35 to 3 Friday night but avenged the defeat by manhandling the University of the South 25-9 Saturday night.

U. T. C., always tough at Home, and with a capacity crowd on hand controlled the Scots easily. The only bright spot for M. C. was 126-lb. Johnny Poore, a freshman from Plainfield, N. J. Poore defeated previously unbeaten Reggie Gaddis. Ed Johnson, Roger Reiter, and Captain Dick Maloney looked good but were defeated.

The Scots turned things around against Sewanee the next night. Frank Sabo, 118-pounder from Flemington, N. J. started things rolling by showing alot of class in his forfeit victory. John Poore pinned his opponent and the Scots lead 10-0. Dave Russell, also a freshman from Flemington defeated the always tough Logi Anderson 10 to 9. Dave Gaughan lost by a decision but the Scots lead 13 to 3.

150-lb. Ed Johnson also from Flemington won an easy decision. John Klein lost a tough match 6 to 0, but Brad "Killer" Kelher of Hackettstown, N. J., won by decision and the Scots lead in team score 19 to 6.

Paul Grice showed great effect but lost a close decision in the 177-lb. class. Roger Reiter, a sophomore 190-lb from Ringoes, NJ, defeated previously undefeated John Booker 5 to 3. Dick Maloney, the Boston Battler, ended the evening by trouncing Bobby Lee 7 to 1 and clinched the victory 25 to 9.

The Scots now have a 3 and 2 record and face Milligan here next Saturday night and the University of Georgia the following Saturday at home. You'all come out and watch the northern boys in action.

INDIVIDUALIZED MAJOR

Last year Maryville College initiated the academic program known as the Individualized Major. The Instructional Program Committee duly appointed the Individualized Major Committee which is endeavoring to carry out the recommendations of the All College Council. To date ten students have elected this method of designing a curriculum to fit their individual needs. In keeping with the trend of emphasizing the terminal degree, Maryville College is attempting to make it possible for students to prepare themselves for a career in creative writing, and possibly not anticipating graduate work, wants to learn all he can about the world he will write about. Conceivably he would want some of his advanced work to be done in the departments of sociology, political science, or religion, though most of his work would be in the English department. On the other hand, some students planning to attend professional or graduate schools for careers either new or too specialized to be outlined in our catalogue may want to take advantage of the Individualized Major. To be specific, a student desiring to take a graduate course in hospital administration, journalism, or religious broadcasting need not transfer to a large institution for pre-professional preparation; he can design a course of study within the framework of courses offered at Maryville.

It should be pointed out that the Individualized Major is not designed for the student who aimlessly wanders from department to department sampling any number of courses which have momentary appeal. Nor is this new curriculum intended for the student who desires to avoid difficult courses or demanding instructors. A student who has not fully decided upon his major interest or established his vocational goal is advised to follow the standard curriculum with a departmental major and to complete core courses as soon as possible with the expectation that the wide perspective thereby achieved will enable him to recognize his limitations and capitalize on his abilities.

The newness of the concept of the Individualized Major and the gradual development of guidelines have resulted in some lack of understanding of the program and confusion in the minds of faculty and students alike. But a list of procedural steps may be obtained from the Registrar's Office by those interested in adopting the Individualized Major; specific responsibilities of department heads and advisors will be outlined within a few days. Certainly the new program

SECRET HISTORY?

Once upon a time in the beginning of this present age of brotherly love, there existed a small group of radically committed Christians here at Maryville College. It so happened that at this very same time another illustrious, radically committed Christian occupied the presidency of the same Maryville College. But alas, the two were radically committed in two divergent directions! As a result, this group of radical students committed themselves to meeting in secret to pray and study the Bible in the manner they saw fit. Rumor has it that this chain of events marked the beginning of the radically committed secret societies as we know them today. Is this indeed the case? If so, do the secret societies still open their meetings with prayer? Then again, perhaps this little rumor is merely fictious? Matter of Fact, perhaps the secret societies themselves are merely a colorful Fiction?

VESPERS

Have you heard the new record Jesus Christ, Superstar yet? This will be the take-off point for Vespers on Sunday evening at 7:00 p.m. in the Little Chapel. You can hear the record on Sunday afternoon from 2–3:30 or 3:30-5 in room 105 of the Fine Arts Center – then come in the evening with your thoughts and reactions.

puts an added burden on the faculty and administration; but in the interest of flexibility, those involved in implementing the program are more than glad to give extra time to reviewing proposed curriculums, overseeing the schedules each term, preparing and grading comprehensive examinations, and attending countless committee meetings (even in the summer).

The success of this program depends upon the cooperation of sincere students honestly trying to structure an individualized major; cautious but open-minded department heads willing to analyze, criticize, modify, and sometimes deny a proposed plan, dedicated advisors willing to spend time with a student who is trying to implement his plan; and a hard-working, forward-looking, realistic Committee on Individualized Majors.

ALL COLLEGE COUNCIL

By Susan Hayba

About 70 people attended the ACC Town Hall Meeting Wednesday morning. The main topics discussed were Interim, the search for a new dean, January Meetings, and finances.

Tom Bennett pointed out that the long registration line was the worst aspect of Interim. One upperclassman felt that this was due to the fact that freshmen, sophomores, and juniors were all competing for the same group of courses this year. Some possible solutions would be drawing names or pre-registering, which would allow dedicated students to start work on a project during the summer.

There were a couple of complaints about the content of the projects. Henry Hastings would like to see professors encouraged to go outside their major field so that the Interims would be more independent study and less like mini-courses. Alice Hook commented that unpopular projects should be dissolved and the extra teachers added as aides to enlarge the popular projects. To both these suggestions Mrs. Beck responded that the matter of the qualifications of the professors would limit such action.

Individuals will now be able to propose their own independent interims. This new program is explained in the forthcoming bulletin which includes a tentative list of next year's projects.

Several study abroad trips will be presented in the bulletin. Bob Eickelberg raised the interesting question of the fairness of offering expensive Interims, beyond the means of most, without offering scholarships. Mr. Hileman added that since the Interims are definitely a part of our education, it should be possible for a student to go. The consensus was that general M. C. scholarships are better used in helping a deserving student come to college rather than financing the luxury of a tour overseas; however, the individual should have the option of borrowing the money.

Next, Dan Rothey reported on the progress of the committee to find a new academic dean of the faculty. From the 42 dossiers received in December the committee has thus far selected 10 qualified candidates, with the resumes of another 21 applicants still to be reviewed. Soon 3 or 4 candidates will be invited to visit the campus so students will have an opportunity to talk with them. By March 15 the new dean should be announced.

Mr. Harrison, the chaplain, began the discussion of the January Meetings with a brief recap of the objectives of this

EDITORIAL

Early in the school year I was approached by several people and was requested to devote an issue of the Echo to a discussion-expose of the Duds and other Secret Societies. At that time I had to decide whether the Duds were worth it or not. My decision is obvious.

I was warned of possible physical attacks and other such activities that might be directed at me as a result of this issue, however, I decided it was worth the risk.

The major reason why it was decided to publish this issue was that in the past, and to some extend in the present, the existance of these societies has been detramental to the M. C. Community. They have been the cause of strife among the athletic teams and among the student body. Their presence is seen on the Board of Directors (one of our new Youth Delegates), in the Administration (among some of their close relatives, for example, a son of one of the chief administrators), in the FAculty, and of course, in the student body. It is the Echo's hope that, since these societies are already dying, the loss of some of their secretness and an explaination of some factual material on those involved will aide in the timely death of these antiquated institutions.

TRIVIA

A pinch of moon soil produces bigger, greener plants, scientists at the Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston report in Science Digest's November issue. About half the plants tested showed the effect, including cabbage, peppers, carrots, lettuce, tobacco, parsley, radishes and spinach. The amount of moon soil administered was only about 1/100th of an ounce.

VIEWPOINT: SOCIETIES

I do not believe in this issue of the Echo. I believe that its printing is a mistake not only of good taste but of judgement. It is like whipping a dead or at least dying horse. It's the same degree of overkill as using an atom bomb to destroy an ant hill. I believe that it will result in needlessly hurting some, rather than helping us all.

Not that I am sympathetic towards the concept of secret societies. My brother and a close friend, both past editors of this paper were in physical danger due to their opposition to Secret Societies. One was actually assaulted in a baited ambush more reminicent of some teenage Mofia, than students at a Christian college. I have seen secret societies make enemies of roommates, fix or attempt to fix every sort of campus election, irritate and alienate the rest of the campus community. I believe that secret societies are a sort of social cancer that grew from the internal isolation and lack of a sense of belonging that was typical of this college and a college student of years ago. At one time there might have been strong need for this type of close association, this feeling of intimate secretive brotherhood. But no more.

My first contact with MC was in 1962. At that time nearly every campus leadership position was filled with a SS member. One meant the other. They were not mutually exclusive. To be asked to join was the highest compliment; you were considered leadership material. Today it is another story. Secret societies are no longer archaic ruins of a past form of life at MC. Why don't we let them die gracefully, their disgraceful past quietly forgotten. MC is a freer more open place. The need for secret societies is no longer evident. There is no fertile ground where the seed of secret clandestine relationships can grow.

I speak from eight years experience with MC and secret societies. MC has grown, secret societies are dying. I believe they could have been best helped along the way of extinction by starving them, by depriving them of a place to grow, a place to find new membership. I believe

For the Berrigans January 13, 1970

I heard again today about Father
Dan and Father Phil.
I could tell you that we are insane
but you would not believe me.

Clean your ears, wipe your eyes and you will see your madness.

Father Dan was smiling when they carried him away.
the first time.
I guess what I want to know is how we can jail him, a man who says it is better to burn papers than babies and still not wince at the irony; remain blind to the madness.

Sink down now slowly and softly withdraw before they wear you down.
To be a young man is to be in a constant state of rage and I have seen the burned out shells of the young.

I could make a list as long as your years but you remember as well as I.
somewhere inside is a scream but I am too old and tired of this to think a poem will change anything.

I could tell you that we are insane,
but you would not believe me.
because you are insane and so am I.

All College Council did the best possible thing by labeling them as unnecessary and unneeded. Like noisy, spoiled children crying for attention, ignore them and they will go away. I believe those that joined in the past realize now the folly.

I'm sorry this Echo was printed. I don't believe these ashes needed to be stirred.

LETTERS

Hi Folks:

According to the editorial of last week's Echo a somewhat dichotomous situation has been established within our community by the supposedly well-intentioned Editor. It concerns the difference between those individuals who scrambled to parts unknown for a four-day weekend and those individuals who stayed and attended the January Meetings. Needless-to say, an aura of rationalization was cloaked in a blanket of self-vindication by the Editor, who was so highly opinionated and informed about the meetings that he was one of the first to depart on holiday.

The Editor uses as his first premise the concept of honesty—those who left campus are the honest ones, those who stayed are not. The "scramblers" are honest because they "have stopped playing games with 'religion' and are admitting that contemporary 'religious' activity is hardly worth a hill of beans. If this is so, Mr. Editor, then must we all cease being "religious" and drop Chapel, Vespers, Sunday Church, Tuesday Bible Study, etc., for those who go? An obvious answer may be derived from the fickleness of the Editor's statement. It seems in context for me to state that the "kids" (and I am sorry that the Editor used that word) have not stopped playing games with religion. Perhaps the "scramblers" copped out because they are intellectually lazy and do not wish to confront or challenge some of life's deepest problems. Or it may be that they are afraid of a personal commitment to a cause because they will have to give more than is received. Or perhaps the "scramblers" are composed of those individuals who limit the definition of Christianity to fit their own personal needs—to be sued only when convenient. So the game they play is one of a closed mind which no longer listens to, challenges nor confronts new thoughts.

The Philosophy 101 situation mentioned in part two hardly seems worth discussing. The over-generalized consensus of thought concerning several complexly structured philosophers leaves an academic bad taste in this writer's mouth. I hardly think that any student used a Philosophy 101 background as a criterion for a campus exit. But as a passing comment let me briefly state that if a student were indeed aware of the existentialist obligation then that student would realize that each individual is directly responsible for oneself and must therefore find a category of activity (if you will) for one's life. Although I do not wish to marry the two areas of thought, the basic Christian ideals run some what along this line. There is no other way to reach full Christian commitment and maturity than by personally giving of yourself—and for this you will be held directly responsible. If pure existentialist philosophy is really "widespread" on this campus (as was indicated by the Editor), then I would venture to say that it is somewhat hidden away on the unconscious level.

Concerning the third point I find myself somewhat in a quandary. Is the Editor really limited in his social contacts? Never-the-less, let it be stated here that perhaps this humanistic type of religion is in fact what the young Christians are really seeking. In this writer's lowly mind humanism is what Christ is all about. He broke away from the bonds of man-made scriptural law and the confides of a demanding, hypocritical church to help the hungry and poor of the earth. Any commitment to a personal Savior will demand no less. Real Christianity is the helping of others. As each Meetings speaker stated, the basis of Christian thought is a personal commitment to Christ. This commitment is not final nor absolute, but is an ever extending process.

At least the Editor was correct when he stated that his last thought was unrelated," as indeed it was. The experience of past years has shown that class scheduling has nothing to do with attendance at the meetings. The gripe in last year's Echo was that the Meetings interfered with classwork, so the students did not attend. This year classes were NOT "called off," they were merely substituted by the Meetings. Missing the Meetings can theoretically be labeled as missing classes. What's the excuse now?

I am not expounding for or against January Meetings, that is up to the Community. Neither am I contending for or against religious commitment that is up to each individual. What is needed in this community is a change in student attitude to a new level of consciousness, and what I am postulating for is the individual student to keep an open mind for at least the four years of Maryville College—to allow for a freedom of choice from a wider range of exposure and perspective. To do otherwise, to escape from challenge and confrontation, is to limit oneself to a narrow and stagnant self-exposure. There are no final answers in life until one experiences God in the finality of the Last Judgement. Until then every effort must be made to allow oneself to become sensitive to life in the "Now," which is an ever-changing proposition. The January Meetings is only one small area of exposure. What about: CIV's, art shows, Chapel services, recitals, Theatre productions, Vespers, Athletic events, people, community work-projects, our staff and faculty, and each other. Perhaps I paraphrase Dr. Calian too literally when I conclude that to really be honest with ourselves we must not stop at the period (.), but must only pause at the semicolon (;). As Peter, Paul and Mary sing, " . . look to find a reason to believe." O. K.??????

Your friend, period of meditation. Speakers representing the third world were brought in to give new perspectives, while a varied approach was made possible through community work, movies, modern music, speeches, discussions, and a retreat. Chris Howze and David Vial questioned the success of one discussion on campus life styles. The crowded schedules of the speakers bothered Ethel Ann Scruggs, who would like to see them freed to talk more with us. Dr. Ogren inquired about the total cost of the meetings. This year's outlay was average, President Copeland said, costing the school around $1100.00.

This led to several requests to know more about M. C.'s finances. Ken Ainsle asked for a statement which would clarify such mysteries as where the profit from the pool rentals and Community Night in the gym goes. Brick Brahams said that M. C.'s share is used towards cleaning of the building, wages to student workers, and for equipment replacement. Money is still going into the community from our gym when there is still 600,000.00 to be paid on the building. In response to queries about the use of student fees, Dr. Copeland explained that our money is used for services rendered directly to us. This is primarily consists of food and payment on the 40-year loan for the three new dormitories. This year student fees are about $35,000.00 short of the total required to operate the dorms and pay on the loan. The remainder will have to come from endowments, gifts, and grants. To lessen the deficit on which Maryville, as all colleges today, operate, one boy asked whether the Board would accept donations from cigarette companies. The College makes it a policy not to invest in industries which profit on harmful products, such as tobacco manufacturers.

VOLUNTEERS URGENTLY WANTED
HELP TO DIG UP ENGLAND'S PAST

Students are urgently invited to help in archaeological excavations in England this summer. Deadline for applications is March 1.

City center redevelopment, new road-building programs and rapidly changing land use are threatening the disappearance of prehistoric graves, Iron-age settlements, Roman villas, fascinating relics of medieval towns, all over Britain.

American students free from mid—May, and with previous archaeological experience, are invited to join an international team on the final season's dig of the important Anglo-Saxon site at North Elmham, Norfolk. The excavation is expected to throw important new light on how the Anglo-Saxon forefathers of the English lived. Experienced helpers will receive free board for helping in this important work.

Other students without experience are invited to join the British Archaeology Seminar at Lincoln College, Oxford, organised by the Association for Cultural Exchange. Six academic credits can be earned from participating in this low-cost

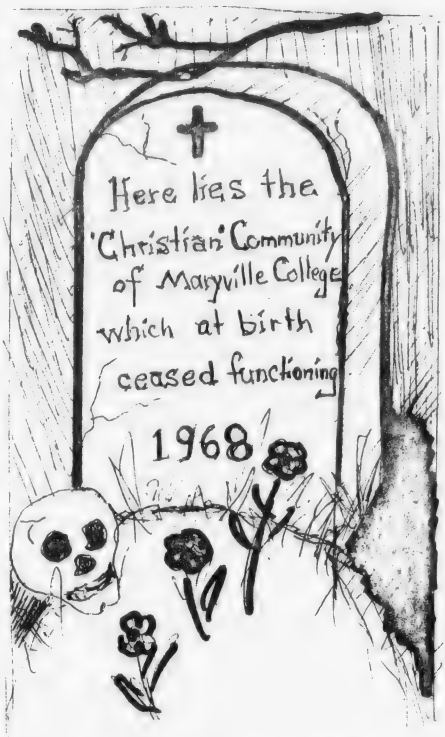
THE MARYVILLE COLLEGE "COMMUNITY" VS THE COMMUNITY OF SECRET SOCIETIES

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY: IS MARYVILLE COLLEGE ACTUALLY A CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY?

There can be little meaning concerning Christian community until we understand what Christian means, and who can make up a Christian Community.

The liberal theologians in their stress on community speak and act as though we become Christians when we enter into the horizontal relationship of community. If this were true, Christianity would have no more final value than the humanistic community, and this is a significant trouble with modern man. It is impossible for the Modern man to find a sufficient value for the humanistic community becasue he is unable to find a sufficient value for the men who make it up. If the individual man is valueless, then the community is worthless.

What gives meaning to the Christian's life? What can give meaning to the Christian community? The individual's and the community's life must turn upon the existence of a personal relationship with God. Any concept of a really personal relationship with a God implies first of all that this God is really there, that this God does exist and has a personal awareness of the individual. The theologian who talks about loving God and ahs no real certainty of any correlation between his use of the word God and God's being there, is speaking pure nonsense! It is ridiculous to speak of a living God who does not exist.



If we accept the humanist position that man is a machine, then whether man is chemically or psychologically determined, his loving God has no meaning. Furthermore, if God is the great philosophic 'other', or the impersonal everything, then the call to love God is either an illusion or a cruel trick. Therefore, if there is to be a true Christian community, the only base for this corporate Christian living is a personal relationship with a God who is real and personal. Do we believe God is really there? If we do, we live differently. Or, if we did, we would live differently.

Liberal theology today projects the stand that everybody is a brother in Christ. However, this cannot be so, because brothers must have the same father. We cannot become brothers within the Christian community until we do become brothers in Christ. But how do we become brothers in Chrsit if we are not already? We become brothers based on the shed blood of Christ, and in so doing, we acknowledge that the personal God does exist.

There are certain characteristics of a Chrsitian. In John 13: 34-35, Jesus conveys to us what the "mark of the Christian" is supposed to be:

> "A new commandment I give unto you That ye love one another? as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know one to another."

In regard to community and hospitality, we find the Bible is talking about something that counts and is open to observation. James writes: (2: 8)

> "If ye fulfill the royal law according to the scriptures" [And here he goes back to Christ giving the royal law] – "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, ye do well."

And–in James 2:15, 16 –

> "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; not withstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."

It is senseless to say that we have Community or love for one another if it does not show itself in the everyday life of the said community. Love and community are in many ways synonomous to the Christian.

How many of us are truly Christians? Probably very few. How many of us think we do have a community? Probably most of us. However, it is obvious that we do not have a community of Christians. Maryville College does have a community, but a community of what?

Now, what about Secret Societies in the midst of our "community"? It would seem to me that the secret societies [Duds & Spades are still active, the Dukes & Lady Bugs have died out], represent their own community. They have been selective in their membership and this I believe has allowed them to uphold the standards of community better than Maryville College has upheld its Christian standard.

The secret societies have considered themselves to be societies of friends, with one of their primary goals being to remain anonymous. Unfortunately, their concept of community is crumbling due to (1) an increased knowledge of their existence and membership, and (2) their own failure in screening candidates closely enough. In other words, selectivity– the very tool which has allowed them to remain strong for so very long–has provided their decay.

This can be readily seen when we examine the calibre of leadership which has been present since the graduation of Bruce Semple. The culmination of the demise had to be 1969-1970, a year which saw Dean Bercaw as the top Dud in that organization. The leadership this year has fallen to Mike Parks, Co-captain of the M. C. Scotty Football team, 1970-71, and although Mike may prove to be a more capable leader than Bercaw, the damage has already been done.

It is significant to note that the Dud's have not claimed to be a Christian organization except in so far as brotherhood is concerned. They have remained in fairly close contact, at least over the past four years, mainly due to the efforts of John Forgety and to some extend, Bruce Semple. At times in the past the Duds have resorted to violence, and Mr. Semple can be accredited with installing this format as an essential part of the "community" activity.

During homecoming weekend of this past year there was a society party at the Dean Hill Country Club in Knoxville. At that time there was a good deal of consternation regarding the 'new breed' of Duds, and there was fear that their community showed signs of falling apart. These fears were well-grounded, as previously explained.

The essential point of this discussion is that the secret societies have failed in their attempt to remain anonymous, just as the Maryville College "community" has failed to show itself as being Christian.

DUD DEFENSE

If there's anyone worth admiring, it's the DUDS. It's high time we recognize the existance of such a noble organization on our campus. While on the recent MC '70 interim, I traveled through the South and was privileged to stay at the home of a very wonderful DUD alumnus. This DUD agreed to an interview yet requested his name be withheld as he didn't want to hurt any friends. As we began our discussion, I was surprised to find the DUD's wife totally uninformed. Even though she dated the Dud several years at MC, it wasn't til now, 20 years later, that she discovered her husband's identity! The DUDS, it seems is a highly thought of society in which its members are selected from every department, regardless of race, economic background, or religion. In this way, a football player and an art major have a common loyalty where they probably wouldn't have even met otherwise. As to the influence of elections, I was assured that this doesn't enter into the Dud purpose. I imagine that the DUDs vote as everyone else for the man who's best qualified. It is only a coincidence that the best qualified men are DUDS. So let's let these friends be friends, if they need a book with pictures and accomplishments, who cares?

OPERATION DUDS ALERT

Attention: Duds meeting tonight at midnight in the graveyard behind the country club. New members remember to bring sterilized pins. Refreshments will be served.

It seems to me that opinions are sharply analogous to umbilical scars (I hate that word navel) in that everybody has one, and none of them are worth much. Therefore, I will here attempt to maintain at least a 1:1 ratio of fact to opinion.

It is difficult for me to think of anything much more corny than disseminating in the Highland Echo, but I feel that there is a phase of community life here at M. C. that is somewhat less than desirable, and is indeed deserving of some of that all-pervading exposure which the Echo alone is capable of exuding. I do not mean to infer that it is trite to write things in the Echo (though I must acknowlege the possibility), but it is certainly corny when I do it. And so, I will be as brief as possible in attempting to bring some points of interest to the attention of the community, freshmen and sophomores in particular.

My objective is not ot ostracize or unjustly criticize the "secret" social groups on campus, but merely to shed some light on the topic. In fact, some of my best friends have been duds or spades! There was Penny Proffitt, the spade who became the spouse of Cole Piper, and thus managed to graduate, literally; cum magna dud (I suppose their children will of necessity be spuds). I could easily make prolix statements about such things as cancers flourishing undetected at the heart of the community, and powers unperceived in our very midst. I will, however, refrain from doing so, chiefly for two reasons: 1) the Echo is distributed in the dining hall, and the verbosit, that reeks from student entries always evokes disgorgement, and 2) it would simply not be true. The secret societies on campus do not constitute an eminent danger, but neither are they completely harmless.

My first experience concerning such cliques on campus came during pre-season football practice in my freshman year. Knowlege of their existance served to explain the strange and unusual behavior of some players, but later, and more importantly, I began to see and to experience a definite lack of mutual confidence, of unity. I feel that this failure to produce true "team," more than any other single factor, has been responsible for loosing football seasons over the past four years and organizations such as the duds absorb a great deal of the blame. Perhaps it is significant that each of these four teams were captained by duds, except for one year when co-captains were a dud and a duke--(1969--Osborne and Klein)

However, it has only been during the last two years that I have realized how the existance of cliques such as the duds and spades makes community functions both inefficient and personally disagreeable, the latter in my opinion being most important. It occurs to me that members of these groups cannot function as such within the college socially without contributing to a breakdown of community values and activities to some degree. I would imagine that these groups are organized to perform some function, and for any group to operate within a community it must be aknowleged by the community and be willing to take responsibility for, and stand behind, its actions. To do otherwise is not only timid and spiritless, but also justifiably suspect.

The simplest way, then, to render such groups positively harmless (see Al Keim or Bob Cooper for elaboration) is perhaps to say a few words, proper words, about who is and who ain't. For example, I once voted for Bruce Semple as president of the student body, and subsequently he was elected. Bruce was, and still is, a good friend of mine, but I certainly would not have given him my vote had I known his dud status at the time. Some other positions of importance occupied by spades and duds are: Dean of Women, Dean of Men, Chairman of the Department of Mathematics, Assistant Professor of Biology, College Physician, and Carnegie Hall's head resident.

More important than public name-dropping, however, is the institution of individual interest and consciousness on the parts of those people who constitute the M. C. Community. As long as students and faculty maintain an awareness of such cliques and pseudo secret groups, perhaps they will remain simply organizations of friends, and will not become sources of undercurrent in community affairs.

In recent action the Scots chalked up two more victories while suffering one defeat.

Following two tough defeats the Scots returned home and beat a good LMU club 98-82. The Scots jumped to an early lead and maintained a 10-12 point spread through most of the game and finally increased the margin to sixteen at the end. For the Scots, Warren Morgan paced the team with 26 points. He was followed closely by John Weston with 23 and Dan McKinstry with 20. Mike Barrows chipped in with 13 and Scott Thompson--8. Others breaking into the scoring column were Bill Postler with 3, Dale Morse and Bryan Harvey with 2 and Mike Butler--1.

Saturday, the Scots ventured to Emory, Va. to play the Emory & Henry Wasps The Scots jumped to an early 12-3 lead but things did not continue to go well. The Wasps soon caught the Scots and lead 46-36 at the half. The second half began with E & H jumping to a 52-36 margin. Following a time out the Scots began to move and came within 62-59. Then three consecutive charging fouls were called on the Scots and their hopes of victory soon went down the drain. The final score was 93-82 in favor of the Wasps. For the Scots, Dan McKinstry had 24, Mike Barrows 22, Warren MOrgan--16, John Weston--14, Mike Butler--4, Gary Childress--2.

Monday night the Scots returned to their winning ways with a 95-81 victory over Bryan. The Scots managed only a 41-39 halftime lead, but in the second hald behind Warren Morgan the Scots came alive. The Scots pushed their lead to twenty with five minutes to go and coasted to the victory. Captain Morgan paced the Scots with 28 points and 18 rebounds. Dan McKinstry contributed 22, Mike Barrows--15, John Weston--11, Scott Thompson--7, Mike Butler--6, Bill Postler--2, Dale Morse--2 and Bryan Harvey--2.

The Scots play at Warren Wilson on Saturday and play Milligan up in Johnson City next Wednesday.

GOLF TEAM???

During the summer months before my freshman year at Maryville College I inquired about the possibility of a varsity golf team. I was told by the Athletic Department to see President Copeland.

During the first three months of my freshman year at Maryville College I went to Dr. Copeland's office three times. The first time his secretary took my name and box number and said she would make an appointment for me. The second time his secretary told me Dr. Copeland had been out of town and extremely busy. The third time his secretary said she had evidently misplaced my name and box number and she took my name and box number for the second time.

During the last two months of my freshman year at Maryville College I have been waiting and hoping that Dr. Copeland would find time to see me. I have had no appointment with him.

It is very discouraging to a college freshman to be in a situation of this sort. A golf team would have great potential at Maryville College. There are three freshmen that played on high school golf teams, one a state champ. We are inter-

However, on Feb. 3 it was found that South Vietnamese troops had marched into Laos, possibly with the aid of U. S. helicopter forces. Questioned about this the White House would only say that there is an embargo on information concerning these actions.

PARKSIDE PROJECT

The Outreach Committee of Maryville College is developing a new relationship to the Parkside Community which is a low-income housing project located behind the Midland Shopping Center in Maryville. There are abour 200 children and young people in this neighborhood, with minimum opportunities to reach the present city parks. There are also a number of elder citizens in the community who are lonely and sometimes isolated from contact with life in the city. If you would like to be a part of a team of about 15 or 20 students who will be developing an outreach ministry in this area, with the assistance of local church laymen, sign up in the Chaplain's Office. The first project will be to conduct informal recreation on one afternoon a week and Saturday mornings in an effort to get acquainted with the children and to discover what the needs and opportunities are for service. It may be that we will eventually set up scouting programs, tutoring opportunities in the homes, visitation and car rides for elder citizens and other projects, but we want to involve the people of that area in making these choices. Those working in this project should be willing to make this the one community involvement in their schedules so they can invest themselves in it.

CONCERT TONIGHT

Maryville College's Performing Artists Series will be host to lyric bass Philip Steele for a concert tonight Friday, February 5 at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center.

Mr. Steele is Affiliate Artist at Maryville College. He is a graduate of Juilliard School of Music and is a performer of concert music, oratorio and opera.

The evenings' program will include 3 works by Faure: "Sylvie," "Lydia," and "En Sourdine;" Debussy's "Le son du Cor s'afflige," "Monologue (Mozart and Salieri)" by Rimsky-Korsakov; Boardman's "Ancient Prayer;" and "Five Gambling Songs" by John Jacob Niles.

In September of 1970, Mr. Steele was appointed Affiliate Artist at Maryville College. He performed the roles of Polydorus and Joseph in "L'Enfance du Christ" of Berlioz with the Knoxville Symphony on December 8, and performs for clubs, churches, schools and other organizations in the Tennessee area through the Affiliate Artists Program. Mr. Steele is currently with the Metropolitan Opera Studio.

There is no charge for M. C. students attending this concert.

ALL COLLEGE COUNCIL

by Susan Hayba

A proposal to modify the manner of selecting the Echo editor opened the discussion at Wednesday's All College Council meeting. Other topics were the possibility of a campus radio station, a new type of independent study course, and the college finances.

Mrs. Murphry, chairman of the Publications Committee, explained the suggested changes in choosing the editor and faculty advisor of the school paper. Instead of the Echo staff picking an editor from among themselves, any experienced people would be encouraged to apply for the position. The applicants would be screened by the Publications Committee. Three would be selected to show their ability by each publishing a sample copy of the paper and then would possibly be put up before a campus election. While an election of this sort would increase interest in the paper some wondered if it could become a political or popularity contest or might result in the election of a person incompatible with the rest of the staff. The new editor will be chosen by the beginning of the spring term so he can serve a 10 week apprenticeship.

The Council noted that some training would help the rest of the paper staff, too. Dr. Walker and Dr. Shields pointed out that some needed instruction in journalism could be provided during interim seminars with representatives of the Maryville-Alcoa Times. Dr. Walker also reminded us that the Echo is a community paper, not just a student publication, and jokingly wondered how an editor from the faculty would go over, if there exists a teacher who would want the job.

During the course of its discussion of the Echo, the ACC was reminded of its eternal problem of communicating with the public. Their continuing efforts have had little success because of student apathy. Few people take the time to read this article, the posted minutes, notices in the Campus News, or attend Town Hall Meetings.

A list of suggestions made by Stuart Smith to help the communication problem was read by Doug Cox. Although Stuart's emphasis on posting news only in the Campus News instead of the Echo does not really overcome the difficulty of getting people to read announcements, he had one excellent suggestion. He said that one way to draw more attention to the bulletin boards and save the school some money would be to stop distributing those silly C. I. V. notices in

Of the few people who did not like or agree with the last issue of the paper (all the letters I received are published in this issue) some expressed concern over the lack of journalistic qualities that were evidence in that issue. That comment may be valid. But, it si also a valid statement about every issue of the Highland Echo for at least the last three years. Although some would say the reasons for this are legion, I think we can point to a few specific ones.

First, and probably most important, is that there is no type of journalism course offered here at M. C. It would seem that with the quality of personell we have in the English department and throughout the rest of the faculty that some sort of team could be put toegther to give instruction in journalism. It would naturally be ideal if the Echo could be a "workshop" for a journalism course that would be offered all three terms. IF, there could not be a year round course in journalism we could at least have a journalism interim.

Second, there are some students very qualified to work on and publish a college newspaper–however when they come to Maryville and see what the Echo looks like, it is enough to discourage the most enterprising person. This I suppose boils down to a problem of finances and the need to have more money in the kitty. If there was more money it would probably be possible to have the Echo printed downtown on newsprint–and have it look like a newspaper. BUT. . . . .

When the "staff" organized last spring and the first of the fall, there was enthusiasm and some new ideas. However, as they progressed, we became stifled, stumbled, fell on our face, and into the sameold stagnant rut that has plagued past editions. We think we tried. . .but, here we are.

I feel that this is basically a problem of priorities. If the All College Council and its various committees really feel the need for a quality newspaper. . .then they have the wherewithal to do something to correct the situation. But if they don't take the necessary action it will show there is a lack of concern on the part of a lot of people. And if that's the way most feel, I think it would be better to have no paper than just half a paper.

Bob Eickelberg

Lord, make me an instrument of your peace,
Where there is hatred, let me sow love;
Where there is injury, pardon;
Where there is despair, hope;
Where there is doubt, faith;
Where there is darkness, light; and,
Where there is sadness, joy.

Grant that I may so much
Seek to be consoled as to console;
To be loved as to love;
For it is in giving that we receive;
It is in pardoning that we are pardoned;
And it is in dying that we are born to eternal life.

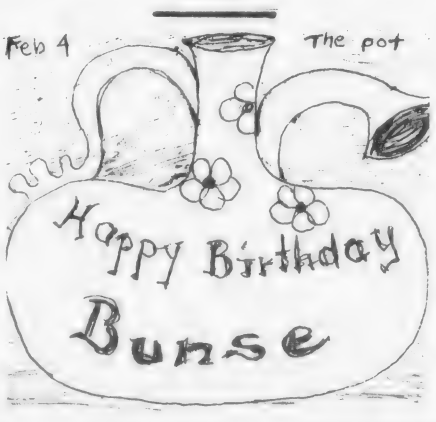
"Jenny, I'm Sorry" (A Review of "Love Story")



As surely as he was hung up on you,
You were hung up on life and love – and him.
It would be so wonderful to walk Through the rain and feel slick, shining of love and water – admitting that we care.
but
Things like that won't happen to us.
They won't happen
Because we don't know how not to say
I'm sorry.

As surely as your saying, "I love you"
Brought you both so much warmth in the snow,
It would be so wonderful to sit,
Crying, and locked out on the steps, waiting for someone to come home to you who's been searching – because
He wanted to tell you, "I'm sorry"
And praying it won't happen again
Even though he doesn't yet know how to say
"I love you, dad."

Tell me, Jenny – is it just as horrible
To know you are going to die
and there is no God than
To know you are going to live where there is no love?

You said,
"Love means never having to say you're sorry."

but, Jenny
I love you so much,
and
I'M sorry – sorry for Preppy; his father; your father, sorry for
The Whole World – sorry for Lots of things,
and God, Jenny --
I'm so sorry that you died.

ALL STUDENTS PLANNING TO VISIT FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA DURING THE SPRING HOLIDAYS 1971

I would like to take this opportunity to welcome you to our City and sincerely hope that your stay will be a pleasant and memorable experience.

In order that neither you, nor the City, incur any unpleasantness the following suggestions and policies have been instituted and will be adhered to unequivocally.

1. Do not come to Fort Lauderdale unless you definitely have a confirmed housing reservation. Our policies and ordinances prohibit sleeping in cars and/or sleeping in the open. Campers or trailers are not permitted to park on the beach. If this type vehicle is to be used as living quarters it must be liscensed for this purpose.
2. All the laws that govern the conduct of the individual will be enforced. A person must be 21 years of age in order to purchase or consume alcohol. Persons guilty of intoxication (it should be noted that drinking in the open is not permitted), narcotics, use of false identification, creating unnecessary noise, or any other form of disorderly conduct and any other unlawful act, will be arrested and prosecuted. Violations of the traffic code will result in apprehension and prosecution of the offender.
3. Parents and school officials of any and all students arrested during this period will be officially notified.

Students should be aware of the fact that persons who are arrested and convicted on any charge will have established a permanent and sometimes criminal record against themselves which could have a detrimental influence later in life.

It is the feeling of the City Commission, this office and all of the City departments involved that if your conduct while in Fort Lauderdale is governed by the aforementioned guidelines, then your vacation will indeed be a pleasant one.

Cordially,
R. H. Bubier
City Manager

AHHHHH!

It was erroneously stated in the last issue that the Dean of Women was a Spade. The copy should have read that the Dean of Women has been closely associated with Secret Societies [e.x. the B. G.'s].

Also, in the article on Individualized Majors, a very important part was left out. The article should have read ". . ., Maryville College is attempting to make it possible for students to prepare themselves for specific vocational goals. For example, a student preparing for a career in creative writing and possibly not anticipating graduate work, wants to learn all he can about the world he will write about." The underlined section was omitted.

And finally, Barbara Bushing's name was left off of the Dean's List.

The Echo regrets that we made the above errors.

Dear Mr. Editor and Special Staff of Writers,

I would like to descend for a moment down to your level, Mr. Editor. If, by chance, you and your illustrative staff of "rumor runners" are going to stay together to cleanse M. C. of all undesirable influences, let me make a few suggestions for your future endeavors.

If you are really interested in exposing illegal activities, let's start by publishing the names of students who are abusing and breaking the rules of the dorm visitation policy. I'm sure you and your fantasy finders could come up with a list of couples going to bed together in total disregard for the guidelines set down for this policy. You could even publish, with names in capital letters, an "All Dorm Visitation Copulatory Team" with special couples chosen as co-captains, coaches and mascots. You could either have the boys on the offensive team and girls on defense, or vice versa, or have just one big offensive team! You don't have to be accurate, just a lot of names!

In the name of "community" and a "cleaner Maryville", you should also publish an "All Dorm III Boose Team". I'm sure you could come up with enough names there to fill, say, 6 or 7 honorary teams. You should even publish an "All Star Drug Taking Team". I'm sure your writing team, interested in the well being of the Maryville Community, should concern themselves with this and add names as discriminately as you did on last week's team. I could give you a name of one of your staff writers from last week who would fulfill the requirements of one of the above teams, with honors!

Why get up these teams? Well, as you say, we want to warn the freshman and sophomores against all evils that lurk in the hearts of men, such as secret societies, sex, drugs, and liquor. Just because the students don't want administrative and faculty advise and protection in the form of "in loco parentis" that doesn't mean our self ordained senior class members shouldn't extend a protective "in loco senioretis" wing.

I mean, we want "community" on our terms, such as no secret societies, sex, drugs and liquor, then we'll print the names of those who disagree with us so we may warn the newcomers to watch out for these evil past times so they won't succumb to the same.

Come on now, all together, "Community"! Rah, Rah, Rah!!!

Keep up the good work, Mr. Editor, in the name of honest and accurate journalism.

The secret, evil, and conspiring
Assistant Professor in Biology

Dear Editor,

I am writing this letter to the editor in response to the use of my name in a previous edition. Before I state my opinion I would like to make it clear that I have never been in the DUDs. I have never received a bid from them.

The way in which the campaign to route out the Duds was run seems to this writer reminicent of the 1690 Witch Hunts. Quite possibly the same persons, who did their best to expose the secret society members, would have been the informers of a past era. What is really wrong with this campus is not the secret societies, as some would have us believe, but a lack of reality. If there were no secret societies these same critiques would vent their rath on other cliques. It happens every year that certain of our so-called christian community (what christian has to do with the problem beats the hell out of me) start looking around, trying to identify members of the societies. One student posted a list of active DUDs on the post office wall, just to get back at the society. I have heard others complain that they have been discriminated against during campus wide elections and therefore lost. Perhaps if these persons would consider the absurdity of their argument. Not everyone is a Dud. Maybe these people are looking for an excuse for an excuse for a lost sense of worth. For these people I feel sorry. However, I have nothing but contempt for those paranoids who feel it is their sworn duty to seek out the identity of anyone that might be in a secret society. When the societies are gone who will be around to serve as scapegoats for these unfortunate members of our community?

My closing point is that we will never be a close knit community. Our individuality and different tastes makes the unrealistic dream of a community dedicated to each other impossible and very impractical. It would be absurd for me to love someone with whom nothing in common. People are so hung up on the idea that we must be a community of brothers that they become dissatisfied when they can't be everyone's brother. There are people on this campus who will never be my friends, and in some cases I'm sure the feeling is mutual. But I don't worry that the community isn't a close little group, because I don't think it was ever meant to be a little group. What it is and always will be is a large group of people who move in many cliques (secret or otherwise) and through them fulfill their diversified needs. Therefore I am inclined to agree with Ethel Ann (even if it kills me) when she said, "Who Cares?" I don't care if the DUDS last forever, since no one has ever proven that they have done anything to upset the campus. The people upsetting the campus are those who must use the secret societies as scapegoats on which to pin their shortcomings.

Bob Cooper

Dear Eick,

I'm glad to see you devoted an incredible amount of print to the secret societies on this campus. Blaming failures of the football team and student government on them was quite noble. Your backbiting and scapegoating allegations have done the entire campus a world of good, right?

Let your boop box crators have their turn and vent their frustrations on small cliques into which they have not been accepted. The blatant screaming of "Listen to me! I know all about 'em!" like that of a two bit newsboy on a back street, brings everyone's ideals into the lofty realms of community brother and sisterhood by further emphasizing the rift between opposing factions.

If you want so desperately to point a weighty finger at someone or something, look at how your money is being spent. Look at how your young Christian intellect is reacting to situations you do not understand and cannot grasp. What is so community–like about head hunting?

A friend of mine who has since graduated needed one more CIV to graduate but on the day of that CIV he had to report for his draft physical. Did the lady celebrity behind the registrar's desk excuse him? No, how could she excuse him for something so trivial as his government's command? This student had to sit through three insipid CIV tapes and write a resume on them because he was a young american male with some integrity. That's a community? Open your eyes.

This school is for students and young adults but how old are most of your business administrators?

Maryville is a swell enough place but wait until you graduate my fine college heroes, and then look at what you've accomplished. Do you know what your chances are for getting a decent job with a college education? You have an ironic surprise coming. Do you think secret soccieties are found solely on the Maryville College campus??

Take some of the soapflakes out from your lectures and wash your brains out.

Richard Dana Paul

Mr. Eickelberg:

The noble Greek playwright, Aeschylus, wrote a play entitled Agamemnon. Every student that has encountered freshman English recalls this play; however, everyone may not recall one of Agamemnon's lines to Clymenestra: "And yet a people's whisper hath great might."

Throughout history man has seen the power of the whisper, with Maryville College being no exception. The whisper of secret societies, engulfed by fact and rumor, haunts the campus like the Black Death. Students, ignorant of these societies, listen to these whispers regardless of their validity, as last week's Echo demonstrated.

The Highland Echo should be commended for this issue. Taking advantage of a highly emotional issue on campus, the Echo has launched the flight of the Phoenix. For the past thirty years or more, the issue of secret societies has arisen from the ashes–a cyclical view of history reigns at Maryville. Should such trivia be capitalized at Maryville, especially when underground tactics coupled with bad taste, are utilized to stir the issue again? I think not.

The Echo has succumbed to a type of journalism that can only be labelled yellow disregarding the color of paper on which it is printed). This is a shame when the paper has shown such a vast improvement over the previous years. The Echo has tackled the responsibility of entering the personal lives of its students and making their affairs public–shades of the

Muckrakers without social justice being the goal.

But I am not addressing Mr. Eickelberg to bury him. I do not wish to utilize the same tactics, which he and others so inconsiderately used last week. I would like to enlighten the editor—as well as the students, faculty, staff, and administration—that Maryville College is faced with more pressing problems other than secret societies. We all need to channel our concern not toward secret societies, but toward enrollment, keeping students at Maryville, the social activities dilemna, financial woes, outdates rules, and outdated philosophies. There is a need to terminate our complaining and result to action. We all have a responsibility to transform Maryville College into one of the finest small liberal arts colleges in the nation. This goal cannot be obtained, however, if we favor stimulating our emotions over such trivia as secret societies. I make my plea to the Maryville College population to join together and confront the issues. Here are just a few of many issues that need to be scrutinized.

1. Receive grants from big corporations without making moral judgements about the products which they produce; i.e., cigarette companies have been cited on several occassions;
2. Become a member of a football conference in order to give some status to athletics;
3. Make an unbiased and standardized evaluation of our faculty with students and faculty participating;
4. Alleviate the unwise and unnecessary spending of college funds;
5. Offer a Bachelor of Science degree at Maryville, in addition to a business major;
6. Increase the pay of an underpaid faculty.
7. Appropriate the funds for more social activities;
8. Omit the procedure of having to confer with President Copeland or Mr. Layman for every problem and/or decision (what do we have a Dean of Men and Women, Academic Dean, Dean of Admissions, Head Residents, and housemothers for?);
9. Re-evaluate the curriculum; some freshmen courses demand a very good background, which the high schools are not providing;
10. More participation in the ACC, not just by the members, but by all.

As I previously noted, these are just a few of the issues which number many more, but we must begin somewhere.

Let's not revel in the insignificant issue of secret societies, since there are bigger problems to face. Students need to gear their energies toward the more important issues of this college. Singing in new postmortem album, "The pearl", the late rock singer Janis Joplin cries, "Freedom is just another word for nothing to do." For Maryville College, whispering about secret societies is just something else to talk about in order to dodge the more significant problems of the college.

Thank you,
Pam Gehman, '70

Last Friday's issue of the Echo left a bitter-sweet taste in my mouth. Sweet in the sense that slippery Black Bart (no offense Rick) has finally been plugged by Marshall Dillon. All of us who have been at Maryville any length of time have heard said about secret societies everything that can be said—from very bad to very good. Perhaps as a result of the paper we all know at least a little about the so called secret societies.

The distasteful aspect of our little scandel arises when we consider that once again we have succeeded in attaching more labels to persons. Our language is a curious reflection of our culture. In our technological society we shop for goods according to their specifications. We ask for ¾ inch pipe with an elbow, fine threading, three feet long, made of case-hardened steel. Keep this in mind the next time you hear a person discussed. 5'8", brown hair, about 140 pounds, loud, small nose, runs around with John, etc. The whole matter would be simplified if we used stock numbers. A conversation might run like this.

"How was your date?"
"She was a 1346."
"Really? What did she look like."
"Well, you know 1581639553."
"That's not so bad, once I had a blind date with a 3628139546!"
"No!"
"Yea." Boy, was it bad, especially the 3!"

We like to file people away, appropriately labeled in their respective bin. This act give one a sense of power over the person so catagorized. Children understand this principle very well. If some ridiculous or derogatory name can be made to stick to a person, he can be ridden and ridiculed unmercifully. The power of labels incidently, is also one of the chief ingredients of voodoo.

So here at Maryville the Echo has produced names of persons who it thinks belong to the Duds and to the Spades. Some of them undoubtly do belong, but the mentioning of these names at this time, in my judgement, was an error. The SS were obviously on the way out with slim prospects for rejuvenation. But, nevertheless, we now possess the names of community members who either belong or may as well belong to secret societies. We also now possess, whether we like it or not, the responsibility for use of this information. We can choose to suspect every action of these persons as being produced by his affiliation with the Duds or Spades. I can hear it now: "Well, he's a Dud." Thus a person is easily disposed of with a minimum of fuss. On the other hand, we can accept the membership of the person in a SS, what ever our feelings, and still allow him the right to live without being labeled, and ipso facto socially crippled.

Maryville College has changed in the last four years. Most of the energy has been channeled in attempting to correct. We have managed to lift the most objectionable social and religious regulations and have hopefully substituted something better. We have seen many academic changes accompany the new curriculum. We have a better but still imperfect form of campus government. And, yes, we have seen the decline and hopefully the fall of the once influential secret societies. I think the time has come in this dialectial process for consolidation and exploitation of our gains, and the working toward the emergence of a more intelligent, educated community. Our energies would be well spent in figuring out what it means to be educated.

This aim, I think, would entail some hard work. Although it is changing, our concept of education still revolves around class room work. We're willing to produce for the grade, diploma, avoidance of disapproval which comes with low performance, etc. But if our concept of education is to include cultivating satisfying social interactions, becoming sensitive and reacting to social questions, growing away from consumer values in order to share, being happy rather than "successful" then we must work at and think seriously about these things (outside the classroom). If we have, as Bob Eickelberg and most of us hope, laid the secret societies to rest, let us also lay to rest the divisiveness which accompanied them. Let's give each other the opportunity for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness without attaching the burden of gossip, unconstructive faultfinding, and those damn labels.

Doug Cox

Dear Editor,

You know, if the majority of the students on this campus showed half the interest in the "recognized" social organizations (i.e. Alpha Sig, Kappa Phi, Theta, Chi Beta, UCM) as they do about the mysterious "secret" societies" off campus, this would be an exciting place to go to school. As it is, it looks like now, as in the past, the people most involved in head hunting, a la Sen. McCarthy, are the ones least involved in developing "community" on campus by getting really involved in the struggling recognized social societies. I wonder what would happen if all the energy that went into the researching and writing of those "secret society" articles went into helping the existing societies be effective socially. I bet M. C. would be a much better place in which to live, socially and otherwise.

Since so many of our so-called 'student leaders" don't want to be part of any "legal" organizations dedicated to fostering social activity on campus, then by God, no one should belong to any type of organization, real or imaginary! Groovy!!

Let's really talk up this idea of "no community at Maryville College" and heavens, let's not have anybody getting off his royal [illegible] and doing something about it. Let's not work at having community, let's just talk about how the other guy isn't involved in it or is trying to destroy or weaken what supposedly doesn't even exist.

I think it's such a pity to see so many productive people trying to chase ghosts with literary butterfly nets when they could be doing so many other constructive things for the college.

the mailboxes.

Dr. Shields brought up one exciting avenue of communication the college had neglected for several years: the radio. A number of years ago there was a daily "Maryville College Hour" on a local station. Since few students listen to the Maryville stations, the alternative of setting up a campus radio station would be more successful and a lot of fun. The price of the transmitter is not exorbitant and all electric radios on campus could pick up the station, which would operate a few hours each evening. The station will be developed by the Publications Committee which will henceforth be known as the Communications Committee.

The next important topic was a new Independent Study offering proposed by the Instructional Program Committee. Dr. Willey explained that under the new plan any junior or senior could substitute a individualized reading course for one of his major courses. There was much disagreement over the fee that would be demanded to help compensate for the extra demands on the teacher for giving personal instruction as is the case with music lessons.

Because of the increased concern about our college's finances which was expressed at the last Town Hall Meeting, Pres. Copeland invited Mr. Layman, our treasurer, to give a review of our present state. A copy of the school's total budget was passed out and explained. Then Mr. Layman distributed two more detailed accounts of the current operating expenses. He also brought up the request of the maintainence workers for a retirement plan and increased benefits. All members of the ACC have this information to discuss with any interested member of the community.

There will be open meetings every Wednesday night at the Gritzmacher Apt. at 6:30 in Carnegie. Anyone with ideas and who is willing to work please come.

The dance will be with Tusculum College and will be held in the gym. Yes, there will be a band there!

APPEAL TO LEARN

We are pressured in today's cities at every corner, pressured to work in an atmosphere of "intelligence" based on Ph.D.'s, Th.D.'s, B.A.'s, B.S.'s, etc. to gain a "better" understanding of the world in which we live.

I realise people are lazy—but have we gone too far in rating the value of grades? We have ingrained in our minds and in our forebear's the necessity of a grading system as a "fork" to prod us to learn. Can not we learn on our own? I think so. The answer lies in our willingness to search for knowledge as a means, not an end in life. We are continually searching and finding answers to the mysteries of life. Let's celebrate life by prodding ourselves. Let's cut the integrement of our lives and go Supra.

SCOTS ROLL

The Scots powered by a 41 point performance by Warren Morgan rolled to their 10th victory of the season with a 107-92 victory over Warren Wilson last Saturday.

The Scots sped to a 51-39 halftime lead and were never really in danger in the second half.

Warren Morgan's 41 led the Scots and he had good support from John Weston with 20, Mike Barrows and Dan McKinstry with 18. Mike Butler contributed 4, Gary Childress—3 and Bryan Harvey—2.

Wednesday the Scots went to Johnson City for their rematch with Milligan. Next Monday the Scots go to Clinch Valley and Thursday they invade Harrogate, Tennessee for a battle with the LMU Railsplitters.

DINING HALL CHANGES

You may have noticed in the past few days a few changes in dining hall procedure. These changes are being made in an effort to meet student requests. For those who have no eight o'clock class and want to catch an extra wink, coffee and a doughnut or sweet roll may be had in Pearsons lobby from 8:30—9:00 a.m. This is to be tried experimentally until the end of the term. From time to time students have said that they leave the dining hall hungry, even though whenever possible seconds have been made available. To help remedy this situation Miss Ware plans to have a table with additional bread and peanut butter at lunch and dinner. The use of trays and salad dishes has been added to assist in making service smoother and more appealing. Although Miss Ware would like to meet all requests I am sure students realize the impossibility of doing so without an increase in budget. Did you know that during the month of January the milk bill alone was $3000?

There are always two sides to every situation and it is hoped students will do their share to improve dining conditions. We are all aware of the waste that goes on: such as beverages and food being taken from the dining hall, some of which is never consummed, and the continual loss of silver and dishes. Criticism of dogs in the dining hall has been heard. This is one area students can help. Aside from the fact that it is not permitted under standards of the State Health Department it is annoying and distasteful to some. It is only through everyone cooperating that we are going to be able to make our conditions as ideal as possible.

Regular breakfast will continue from 7:00-7:30 and the supplement will only be Monday—Friday.

SENIOR RECITAL COMING

Next Friday evening, February 19, Doug Barber will present his senior recital in the Fine Arts Center Music Hall at 8:15 P.M. Doug sings baritone and is an applied voice major. The program will consist of a variety of 19th- and 20th-century compositions. First will be the Prologue to the opera I Bagliacci. Also on the program will be three Schubert lieder, Claf of Gold" from Gounod's opera Faust, and Five Mystical Songs by Ralph Vaughn-Williams. This last selection was composed for baritone and chorus. Eight singers were chosen and have been practicing regularly for the last few weeks. The group consists of: Lana Henderson and Christy Rogers, sopranos; Judy Loeffler and Delores Bowen, altos; Mark Mertz and Randy Hunter, tenors; and Charlie Craven and Charles Ball, Basses. Doug's accompanist is Warren Gaughan, who recently gave his own recital.

NEW SERIES FOR VESPERS

During the next four Sunday evenings, at 7:00 p.m., vespers will bring together a number of professors on the campus in an effort to stimulate thinking about the Christian religion. On February 14, the scientists will look at the faith (including Bob Ramger, Paul Ogren, Bill Dent, and Norman Love).

On February 21 the Humanities will wrestle with the subject (including Wally Lewis, Sally McNiell, and others). This service will also include a celebration of the Lord's Supper.

On February 28 persons from the Fine Arts Department will speak on the subject (including Jim Bloy, Dale Bunse, Lee Kull and Lucy Proffitt). The Maryville College Choir will sing.

The series will end on March 7 when a sociological, educational and economic approach to the subject will be taken by Kathryn Nelson, Kamala Anandam, and Eugene Hileman. All of these vesper services will be in the chapel building.

THE ARS ABORTION PROCEDURE

(An explanation of a previous advertisement)

We thought it would give you much relief to know more about the abortion procedure. We use the vacuum-aspiration method, and this method is the most advanced and really very simple,safe and painless.

First, the doctor's assistant will take the patient to the doctor's office. The actual abortion itself takes only about ten minutes to perform.

The doctor's assistant will spend the first five to ten minutes in the office informally talking with the patient. Then the assistant will reivew the completed questionnaire to determine the probable length of the pregnancy and any medical precautions that need be taken. Next, the assistant will explain the entire procedure step-by-step to the patient. This understanding will remove any fears or doubts the patient has about the procedure, because she will see exactly how simple, safe and painless the vacuum-aspiration method of abortion really is. While waiting for the doctor, the patient and the assistant will continue conversing. The assistant has been carefully trained to be sure to handle this conversation so the patient leaves here in excellent psychological condition.

Then the doctor will review her case and explain what he will do. He will examine her to be sure of the length of her pregnancy. She will, then be given a local anesthetic. When the doctor performs the abortion, the only discomfort the patient may experience is about one minute of menstrual cramps, but due to our meth-

MC SECRETARY RUNS FOR COUNTY COURT

by John Powell

Recently, Mrs. Jan R. Eby, Fine Arts Center Secretary, announced her candidacy for the vacant District 2 seat on the Blount County Court. She plans to run as an Independent against Republican opposition. The District 2 (Maryville and vicinity) seat was vacated as Squire Young, incumbent, was appointed to Governor Winfield Dunn's staff.

As the governing body of Blount County the five district, twenty-one member County Court controls such important local affairs as the Sheriff's Office, Children's Home, and the county school system. While Mrs. Eby feels that the recently reapportioned Court contains a good balance between its rural and urban elements, she feels her candidacy is necessary to correct several inequalities that exist in the county.

Not a women's liberation advocate, per se, Mrs. Eby thinks the Court needs a qualified woman's touch. "The County Court needs a qualified woman," Mrs. Eby, a '65 MC Political Science graduate with graduate work in urban planning, said. "Until now no woman has been elected to the Court."

At the same time, Mrs. Eby resents the one party system that controls Blount County. "We can't let a few Republicans determine the future of all the county's citizens," she states.

EDITORIAL

The use and misuse of money is always a controversial subject. Whenever there is money to be spent, a decision about priorities must be made. For example, the United States Senate must decide if it wants to spend its money on the Space Program, a war in Southeast Asia or the Mideast, or on abolishing poverty and hunger within the United States. The state of Tennessee must decide what proportion of its money must be spent on building roads and what part on education.

Here at M.C. we are especially sensitive to where our money goes—probably because we have so little of it! At the end of an article in the paper last week an issue along this line was mentioned and needs some more attention.

It was good that Mr. Layman brought up before the ACC the request of the maintenance workers for a retirement plan and increased benefits. However, it would have been better if the administration had requested it before the workers did.

One benefit that is particularly interesting is our staff's vacation time. Is it true that a man who works here one year gets the same one-week vacation as a twenty-five year man? I know all men are equal—but this doesn't sound good!

The Echo sincerely hopes that the ACC will not let this item be strangled in a subcommittee of a sub-committee—but that they would be responsible for taking some corrective measures before the end of this year.

Bob Eickelberg

LETTERS

Dear Editor:

In response to the last two issues of the Echo, I would like, unsarcastically, to commend you on the special issue on secret societies. This commendation stems from the fact that, in at least one way, that paper was superior to any issue I have seen in four years. FOR ONCE A MAJORITY OF THE CAMPUS WOULD HAVE BOUGHT A COPY OF THE PAPER IF IT HAD BEEN FOR SALE! This is a primary journalistic virtue which seems to have been forgotten here; most publications must sell to survive.

As for lesser properties by which this height was attained, some questions may be raised. As one letter in the last issue stated, there are certainly more important problems around us (For instance, need for faculty evaluation, straightening up the financial situation, offering a B.S., and having others besides the president permitted to assume major responsibilities—which would, in turn, encourage more participation in the ACC.). But again, one might argue that they are so obvious and often-discussed that they would not sell a paper.

The articles may not have been fantastically written, but they weren't written by trained writers (And could anyone really believe that C. F. and Rick are jealous because they aren't Duds?) and parts of the paper were certainly in bad taste—for instance, the printing of student names. Not that it makes any difference to most of us non-joiners, but it probably didn't make anybody really happy. It may have been good, however, for people to realize the membership among the hierarchy.

The timing of the special issue might also be questioned. One of the letters last week lamented kicking a dying horse. If anything, the issue probably served only to make the S. S.'s fight harder for survival. Admittedly, this will be quite a struggle; most of the spades are graduating and there is little interest among underclass women. But the Duds seem to be more healthy, and when meetings are held, the dorms are noticeable more empty.

To get to the main point, your last editorial, Mr. Editor, pointed to a most important problem, and one which deserves first priority; that is, the Echo itself, and what it represents. I have been chairman of the Publications Committee, and in efforts to try to find ways to reorganize the whole mess, it was very easy to become discouraged. I don't think we should waste time trying to place the blame on some one or some thing, but it should be obvious to all that something must be done, or we probably won't even have a regular paper next year. If we had some sort of journalistic guidance, both the newspaper and the yearbook could show immeasurable improvement. Even the communications department would be able to give and receive benefits in this area. Again I commend you, Bob, on the effort of two weeks ago. The press usually receives more criticism than praise. You did well considering the circumstances. It's too bad there is no organized regular staff so that you could do it again, on another topic of course.

Sincerely,
Doug Barber

HAPPY BIRTHDAY ABE!!

AFTERTHOUGHT: Dying? Death presents itself in many fashions!

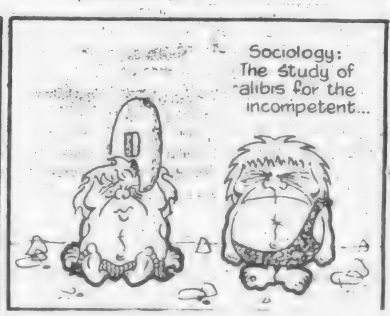
I guess I'm like the vulture which watches patiently and silently while the lion and the gazelle make their last desparate attempts to win out over life before the stronger wins over. Then, the vulture moves in to pick at the pieces.

For the last two weeks, I have observed this college campus split itself into two camps, each making ready to do battle against the other. And, then, there are those, the majority (?), who are caught helplessly in the middle, torn inwardly as to what it all means and as to where they stand.

Just what is the question being asked in the first edition directed toward the SS. Does the problem stem from the simple fact that they exist? I don't believe so. People don't go out of their way to openly express their concern in such a manner unless they feel threatened. But in what way?

On the other hand, the second issue, which I assume was directed toward rebuttal, left an entirely different aire. True, secret organizations exist throughout the world and in most communities. But that's no secret, is it? It so happens that I belong to a secret music fraternity known as OMA Sinfonia Fraternity. It's nationally secret. But is that the point?

Sen. McCarthy was attacking that which he felt threatened by and caused a near panic in the American public as a result Wouldn't you say that there is a similarity in associated feeling—then and now? But the fact still remains that even though the McCarthy era ended in a solemn occasion, the American people came to be aware of a very real and possible danger to their security.



The question which I am raising is this: to what extent are the students of MC being threatened? Or to phrase it in a different way: is there anything to be concerned about? It's no secret, either, that topics which are embarrassing for particular people will generally be avoided in confrontation. On the other hand, a substitute procedure is also often used. In this case, the issue is substituted with one of what appears to be more pressing. Hence, one redirects his attack toward the new issue, generally, a long established one. Or, the people raising an issue can be made to appear to be very foolish. Or, people start dropping out of the scene. Be sure to check your local listings. . .

The topic of "community," as I see it, has been substituted for "SS." But think about it. A community for and of what—the SS? You realize, of course, that SS membership does not terminate upon graduation. Ethel Ann pointed this out!? So what's the gimmick?—finances?—or what then? A true community would strive to function as a part or within its true community—that of Maryville. Have you ever sensed an offensive aire in town. Just the other day, when my barber learned of my college affiliation, our blossoming conversation suddenly came to an abrupt end! But, again, it's happened before in various other ways.

This great institution of higher learning mysteriously lerks out over the greater Maryville community in an awesome manner. Why? Could it be that There's something rotten in Denmark? Or does the college choose to divorce itself from the Maryville community??? What determines when the college is or is not to be locally recognized?—possibly so when the good name of Maryville College can be advertised—possible not when a member of the MC community has been forced to reveal his college identity in an embarrassing situation, etc. Embarrassing for whom and how?

Oh, well, life must go on and much of an identical course of affairs exists throughout the world, unfortunately. The implications, as I see them go two ways. You can function in a society as either a pawn or a knight or you can become a "manipulator." Anyway you go you take a chance and things go only one way for only so long.

In closing, there are those who make a business of investigating situations which become rather intense within themselves, without anyone's notice, until the boom is lowered. MC seems to be developing into a prime target. To the innocent student of MC, stick it out, fight for what you think is right, and be true. A college education lies to a deeper extent in learning to relate to man—your texts will be obsolete next year! As for developing a guilt complex because you're not directly involved on campus in local affairs, think about this: there are many *in*direct ways of functioning within a community!

A prospective senior graduate who normally minds his own business:

Ned Brookbank

Dear Bob,

After reading last week's Echo, I was personally reminded of a quote from a biblical scholar, whom I once heard say "By their guilt, you shall know them." The original point or issue which prompted so much discussion and which at the moment escapes me, has been so mutilated and disproportioned that further mention of it would be fruitless. However, there is one task yet to be performed, if for no other reason, in appreciation of those sagacious, judicious, and all-knowing authors of last week's "letters."

I suppose I could descend for a moment down to the level of the secret, evil, etc., professor in Biology by simply casting logic and reason completely to the wind, and just making a few witty, barbed non sequitur comments while groping on the far side of that thin line which separates subtlety from obscurity. But since confession is good for the soul, I choose rather to make a clean breast of all my errors from a few weeks back for the benefit of my many treasured kinfolk in this all-important community that is so valuable and good, and about which we have all been so concerned.

I must first confess that I truly did vent all my frustrations on small cliques to which I have not been accepted. I can't even remember a time when I did not want to be a card-carrying member of a secret society. I blamed all the failures of the football team and all the shortcomings of student government on SS's, but only because I am, alas, sexually inadequate—yes, even under the very petticoat of all the fornication in Dorm III. I am indeed a back biter and a scape-goater from 'way back. Admittedly, I could never resist the temptation to crate a "boop box", or to emphasize the rift between opposing factions of community brother and sisterhood.

I confess to not showing proper interest in the "recognized social organizations (i.e. Alpha Sig, Kappa Phi, Theta, Chi Beta, UCM)." I realize that I have already missed out on most of the excitement, thrills, comradeship, and activities which these societies have to offer. I see now that it is only through such social organizations that friends are made, involvement in community is accomplished, and true happiness is achieved. Perhaps if I had not been so preoccupied with head hunting and chasing ghosts with literary butterfly nets, I would not have been so blind to these obvious facts.

Thank you, then, for your concern as expressed in your letters, and for inducing me to face up to my shortcomings. I am here reminded of a line from a recent Broadway play, which seems somewhat appropriate. It states, in effect, that "ninety-five percent of the people in the world are idiots, and they are corrupting hell out of the rest of us." I only hope that your roses are very large, since it seems manifest that you are unable to comprehend anything beyond them.

Rick White

A LETTER TO MYSELF

Someday I hope I can take this letter out and read it, to remind me of the state of affairs that I'm in right now. When I clean up, (and I hope and pray it's soon) I know I'll have moments of weakness and when those times come I hope this will remind me that I'm completely powerless over my addiction. It's hard to believe how far a man can slip without knowing it. It's really true how everyone says (it will never happen to me). What a joke! I can't remember the dividing line that I crossed over, only I know I crossed it.

Here I sit after two years of being a slave to smack. Two years, that completely changed me. My body is being wasted away before my eyes. You can smell the funky odor on me from not showering. I can't bathe when I'm sick and when I get loaded I don't want the water to bring me down faster. And I used to be bugged about getting dirt under my nails. haha!!

Today I ate two peanut butter sandwiches and I couldn't do that until 5:30 this evening. Five-thirty is when I finally got a geeze. Man! It's so hard to believe that I've gone through this for two

"Hallmark's Day"

Red hearts made of paper,
So easy to rear in two.
On white lace doilies, full of words,
Come once a year to you.

The sweet "happy valentine's day" poem Strikes Again.
And "Hallmark" rakes in dough
Because their writers Know How to say, "I Love You" just right.

On the 14th, think of the Post Office Who has been throwing our hearts around, distributing them to those we love by Zip Code.

And the Mailman,
A surgeon of love,
Carrying human hearts
in a big lacy bag
To transplant them in our mailboxes.

The grammar schools are making
"Valentine's Day" Pouches to tape on the blackboard,
And mothers buy "Hallmark"
so little children can say
"Be my Valentine, please."

Valentines to bring on tears, because some little girls get more valentines than others.

We've grown up now and have kept our pouches of hearts in a grammar school called the mind.

The more valentines we collect
The more it hurts,
and
"Hallmark," in Heaven,
Gains more customers.

SCOTS EDGE BUFFS

The Maryville Scots raised their basketball record to 11-4 with an impressive 106-104 victory over Milligan. The Scots thus avenged their only home loss of the season.

The lead changed hands several times early in the first half before the Scots took the lead for good with seven minutes to go. By halftime the Scots had increased their advantage to five, 51-46.

The second half began with the Buffs scoring two quick buckets to cut the lead to one. However, the Scots came back with a couple of buckets and maintained a 3 to 5 point spread through out the half with their largest lead ten. With a minute to go the Scots held a slim 101-100 lead, but buckets by Warren Morgan and John Weston plus a free through by Dan McKinstry sealed the victory.

For the Scots, Captain Warren Morgan again paced the Scots. He tallied 35 points and picked off 22 rebounds. Mike Barrows had 28 points and Dan McKinstry contributed 24 points and 10 rebounds. John Weston had 13 points and 16 rebounds and Mike Butler and Scott Thompson added 4 and 3 respectively.

For Milligan, Toonie Cash had 41, Don Threlkeld, 23, and Mark Berg was limited to 12.

Last night the Scots went to play LMU in Harrogate, Tennessee. Saturday night we play Tusculum here and then on Monday the Scots play Clinch Valley in a game which was scheduled for last Monday but was postponed due to the snow. After Saturday, the Scots have only two games left.

The standings for Girl's Intramural Basketball thus far are as follows:

TEAM	Won	Lost
Theta I	5	0
Chi Beta II	4	1
Theta II	2	2
Independents	1	4
Chi Beta I	0	5

NOTE: The last two sets of Girl's Intramural Basketball Games scheduled for Thurs., February 18 and Tuesday, February 23 will be played in the Alumni Gym due to conflict in the new building, with the playing of a girls' and boys' district tournament.

On Thursday, March 4 at 7:00 p.m. the GIRLS INTRAMURAL ALL STAR GAME will be played in the new physical education complex.

Mrs. Eby traces her involvement in politics to the Environment 2000 Conference which was held recently in Knoxville. For its goal, the Conference sought to determine what could individuals or groups do to create a better environment for people. Representing Blount County, Mrs. Eby feels the Conference did much to make people more active in working for a better environment.

Acting as an individual, Mrs. Eby feels that she can improve people's environment through her candidacy. "Few people in power ever ask the disenfranchised what they want in their environment," notes Mrs. Eby. "For example, how many people did the College ask in developing its Parkside Recreation Project?"

While she thinks that County Court members, called Squires, are qualified, Mrs. Eby feels that knowing statistics is not enough. "A Squire must know people," says Mrs. Eby who has done much work in service clubs and welfare cases.

If elected, Mrs. Eby doubts that she will have a great deal to do with policy making decisions. Instead, her goal is to work well within the group. "Many problems can be solved by just listening," she says.

If MC students are interested in becoming actively involved in working for a two party system and better county government, they should contact Mrs. Eby.

Also, February 20 is the last day to register to vote for this election.

Dear Editor,

I wonder if the Faculty used paper plates like we did on Tuesday night? I wonder if they used paper cups? I wonder if they used plastic forks? I wonder if they had hamburgers and baked beans? I wonder if they had to fight a long line and Miss Ware to get a second piece of meat? I wonder if they had rolls with their hamburgers? I wonder if they kept the dogs out that night? I wonder if they found hair in their food? I wonder...I wonder...I wonder.

ods, over one-half of all our patients experience no discomfort whatsoever.

Most patients can walk right out after the abortion, though some may feel a little dizzy or drunk due to the anesthetic shot. A few patients feel a little tired after the abortion—especially if they have travelled far to get here or if they have not been sleeping well for the last night or two due to worry. These sleepy patients we put in the recovery room for ten to thirty minutes afterwards. If your friend or relative goes to the recovery room we'll bring you there to sit and talk with her.

In any case, we will return her to you smiling, healthy, and much relieved, though slightly tired. She probably will be hungry and thirsty and will want to go to eat immediately.

You can help by carefully reading her "Instructions" sheet during the first few hours afterwards, and, by feeding her. While waiting in our lounge, please make yourself at home. Please do not hesitate to give us suggestions that you think will improve our services.

THERE IS A BETTER WAY, AND IT'S HAPPENING NOW.

Consider the large American city.
Consider the dirt, the traffic, the spaghetti loops of highways.
There must be a better way.
There is.

In a city north of the border, snow lies clean a month after falling, trains run frequently and on schedule, commuters scurry to work in spotless subway stations leaving behind only an occasional cigarette butt, there are parks in the heart of the city and the flag that flies over it all has a leaf on it.

Whatever that leaf may say for Canadians' respect for their earth, their city of Montreal is a civilized pleasure on a continent where cities seem to be growing increasingly dirty, littered, unhealthy and dangerous.

Whatever else Canadians think of thier autos, Montreal ahs a beautiful and silent subway that whirrs along on giant rubber tires. Keep America Beautiful would drool with envy at the absense of litter from subway cars and stations, underground shopping malls, sidewalks and streets. There may be armies of invisible janitors who make off with the junk before it can be perceived by the passing traveller. Unlikely.

Whatever the invisible poison content of Montreal's air (the threat of which should be in no way minimized), snow in the heart of town is spotless. No soot is washed from the face after an afternoon stroll and shirts bear no tell-tale ring at neck and cuffs after days of sightseeing.

Whatever highways Canada may be building for the super polluter, trains run on schedule over rails so smooth you can write home about it. There are trains to most parts of inhabited Canada. The glass and steel shelters that stand by bus stops seem to be saying, "We cannot stop the cold and damp but we will try to make it less unpleasant while you wait." The waits are not long.

Perhaps these shelters touch the principal difference between that old city on the bank of the St. Lawrence and those nearer by on the Rivers Potomac, Hudson, Charles, Chicago, Detroit, etc. Our cities sometimes seem to say, "We dare you to live here. We're going to make it hard for you." No wonder the less brave flee to the suburbs.

Montreal, however, seems to be saying, "Life is hard enough. We'll try to make some things easier."

A visit of a week is not itme enough to judge a city's success in caring for its citizens in all the ways they need. But it is long enough to sense the spirit of an official attitude that the city shall be for the people, not in spite of them.

"HURRAH" TO BE PERFORMED

"America Hurrah!," a sequence of three plays that made a striking impact on New York audiences for eighty weeks through the spring of 1968, will be presented by the Maryville College Playhouse in the theatre for the nights of March 5 and 6. David Nighbert, Mark T. Mertz and Thomas E. Jones will be directing the three separate productions with the over all show being co-ordinated by Mr. Jones.

The first of the three one-act plays "It's Almost Like Being," a spoof on the motion picture industry, is being directed by David Nighbert, a senior speech-theatre major, and assisted by Steve Ayers. The cast will feature Suzanne Drees as Doris D., Erik Dillener as Rock, Howard Welsh as Knockefeller, Jenny Weaver as Billy, Lloyd Kramer as Bud, and Harry Robertshaw as the narrator.

"Interview," a satirical look at the Wall Street syndrome, is being directed by Mark Mertz, a junior speech-theatre major, and assisted by Diane Wood. Featured in this cast are Sharon Murphy, Barbara Seel, Jean Tiffany, Brenda Murphree, Duncan Randall, Harry Robertshaw, Mark Stoub, and Thomas Williamson.

A look at our dependence on television, "T.V.," is directed by Mr. Jones and assisted by Frana Smith. This cast will be composed of King Bennett as Hal, Debra Branch as Susan, Tom Williamson as George, and Judy Andrews, Lloyd Kramer Dan Greenlee, Christina Bergner, and Diana Loper as various television personalities.

ALL COLLEGE COUNCIL

by Susan Hayba

Wednesday afternoon the All College Council busied itself with such topics as the campus dogs, independent study during summer school, attracting junior college graduates, grading symbols, freshman participation in the ACC, and the wording of college standards in the Handbook.

Maintaining the dogs on campus is cruel in the long run, according to Dr. Shields, because they are deserted during vacation, although many of them belong to neighbors or were already destitute when they arrived. Complaints about dogs in the dining hall lack substance because students do nothing to discourage their presence. President Copeland mentioned the possibility that the Board of Health could even close the dining hall if students continue to permit the filthy dogs to wander through the facilities. He considers feeding the dogs scraps an act which deprives other students of the food. Student members of the Council considered the discussion ridiculous and declined to support any suggestion that the school impound the students' pets.

As chairman of the instructional Program Committee, Dr. Willey reported that some students would now be permitted to do their independent study during summer school. A committee, including one student, has been selected to conduct the evaluation of the faculty. Dr. Willey suggested that Maryville do more to attract prospective students from the growing ranks of junior college graduates.

Dr. Ogren initiated a discussion of the philosophy of grading based on the question of how to treat failures. Alternatives to an "F" would be "No Credit," "U," or simply not recording any courses failed. Consideration was given to the psychological effect of the symbol "F," the ill effects of a school's shielding a student from harsh reality, and the various ways in which other schools interpret transcripts.

The ACC is dissatisified with thelack of freshman participation in the Council this year. It was proposed that in the future the class president retain his seat on the Council only through January. Then, when the freshmen know each other better, a representative would be elected to replace the freshman class president in the ACC. No decision was reached.

Dean Elia brought up the mixed-up section dealing with college standards in the Student Handbook. He wanted to see such things as not wanting to attend C. or not believing that learning is the pursuit of truth separated from the major offenses involving drugs, alcohol, or cheating.

EDITORIAL

On Wednesday morning in CIV President Copeland asked a question that deserves some sort of an honest answer. If by any slight chance you missed CIV, our President wanted to know why there were not any questions at the end of the address. I do not claim to speak for 100% of the student body (I never have made such a claim) but I did talk to a number of people after CIV to find out their reactions to the question posed by Dr. Copeland. I hope that I can synthesize the many comments in the following paragraph.

The most general reaction I got was that the reason most people wouldn't want to ask questions was that everyone wanted to leave, and didn't really care about the questions. Another general comment was that the large meeting is a poor situation in which to ask a question, because sometimes it ruins a good speech and other times people are embarrased to get up in front of a large group. Some said that the speaker didn't hold their interest and that since they were bored by his speech they could not ask intelligent questions. And finally, one said that no questions should have been asked out of courtesy to the speaker who probably realized there were not many people listening, and who probably cut short his speech in an artful way and hoped to get off stage and ease an embarrassing situation.

Probably all of the above reactions are valid, but I feel the problem is much deeper, and maybe we should deal with the whole problem of CIV. The question has been raised as to how many of the seniors who have fulfilled their CIV requirement attend the programs? This seems to show an insight into the fact that not many people are really interested in what goes on in CIV and that those who do attend usually do so to fulfil their requirement and also because it is a good opportunity to write letters, read magazines, books, and newspapers, or just get some sleep.

And so, while realizing that the consideration of community issues and values is a vital part of a Liberal Arts education, I feel that it would be better to end the practice of CIV being mandatory and a requirement for graduation. I feel that this would do away with the uninterested student reading his New York Times and all of the talking that goes on in the back of the chapel. Those that are interested in the topic of the day will come, and be able to get more out of the lec-

An Open Letter to the M.C. Community:

I have heard via the campus underground grapevine a rumor that there may be an "administrative veto" of visitation. While I know of no action impending in that regard, I sensed the almost automatic polarization which takes place under such circumstances when the statement goes something like this: "I may have some reservations about visitation, but by %*&$ they don't have any right to tell us we can't have it!" Before further polarization takes place and because I have heard of some problems with the visitation plan as it exists now, I would like to enter the following proposal as a viable alternative:

(1) Do away with our present dorm groupings (Freshmen versus Upperclassmen).

(2) Designate dorms as either "open" "moderate," or "restricted" in terms of visitation regulations.

(3) Allow the student to select the type of living environment he or she prefers, after reading a brochure which outlines in an unbiased fashion the advantages and disadvantages of each system.

Because of limited space for printing, I will only outline what I feel to be the chief advantages of such a system:

(1) Freedom of choice for life style.

(2) Possibility of altering life style if the system selected proves to be counter productive in terms of either personal mental health, social goals, or study habits.

(As a "tongue-in-cheek" note to this, we might even designate an "egg-head" study dorm for those who came here for that obscure purpose!)

tures because of fewer distractions. A system of voluntary attendance would also be more courteous to the speaker. I really don't understand how the people on the CIV committee have the intestinal fortitude to ask a person to address our qudience when we all know that under the present system most of the people in attendence just won't be listening.

I agree that this situation is unfortunate but I feel that a change of philosophy is either needed on the part of the students as a whole, or on the part of the idea of mandatory CIV. Since I see no hope for the first, I can only plead for the second.

EUROPEAN JOBS

Panorama City, California, Jobs Europe program officials announced that they have guaranteed jobs available in Europe anytime of the year for hundreds of young Americans 18 to 26 years of age–Summer and year-round.

The aim of the program is to give young people an inexpensive and unique cultural opportunity to live in, and learn about, Europe.

This is the 10th anniversary of the program. To-date five thousand and eighty-six students have worked in Europe with their help.

There salaried jobs are mostly for general help with large 1st class European hotels. Most jobs include board and room. Friends can work with, or near each other, if they apply together.

Vice President Dr. Van der Velde from Holland stated that "England and the French and German speaking areas of Switzerland offer the best working, cultural, recreational and leisure opportunities."

An important feature of the program, besides the guaranteed job, is the fact that participants are free to travel where, and for as long as, they wish after completing their work assignment.

For free details: send a stamped self-addressed (business size) envelope to: JOBS EUROPE, 13355 Cantara Street, Panorama City, California 91402.

Attention ARS and other friends of Abortion

It certainly is comforting to know that abortion is such an easy, painless procedure; about as disturbing as having a tooth pulled! Certainly in the name of Modern Science every knee shall bow.

However, we feel that equal time should be given to the silent victem of this liberated society–our little friend in the womb. He is weak and inarticulate, and his lack of competitive fitness predetermines his inability to survive (another very preceptive axiom established by modern science). Greater love has no man than this––but then, the decision isn't his. Still in all, he does sacrifice everything so that his parents might not be burdened with the consequences of what was obviously a mistake. The writers are not trying to moralize, but simply wish to point out that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, so to speak. We feel that when life stops being sacred, in all of its forms and manifestations (as in many areas it already had), then man is dead. Why are lives only sacred in Viet Nam–why not in the uterus, too?

Then again, we have contemplated the idea that perhaps there is no such thing as pure and simple "morality." Perhaps it is just a deeply ingrained means of social control. Some people call it conscience, but in reality "conscience" too

Write it on your heart that every day is the best day in the year. He is rich who owns the day, and no one owns the day who allows it to be invaded with fret and anxiety. Finish every day and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurbities, no doubt crept in. Forget them as soon as you can, tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely, with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This new day is too dear, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.

How pure is our water, anyway?

By Josephine Ripley
Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Washington

The nation's drinking water is not always as pure as some Americans think.

Not that there is cause for alarm — yet.

But a recent spot check of drinking water systems in various parts of the United States prompted this comment by the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States Public Health Service, Charles C. Johnson Jr.:

"We are too complacent about the quality of the water we drink."

The study areas in the survey covered some 18 million people. Out of these, almost a million were being served "potentially hazardous water." Another 2 million were drinking water "of inferior quality."

Why doesn't someone do something? The federal government has no direct control over the situation. It can make surveys such as this. It can check water carried in interstate commerce. That is, on planes, trains, and buses. And it can establish a national standard for water purity, to be adopted by states if they choose.

But the drinking water systems which spread across the U.S. are under local control—not federal.

And most of these systems were constructed more than 20 years ago, before the population explosion and the expansion of cities.

James H. McDermott, director of the Bureau of Hygiene, believes the survey "left no doubt that many systems are delivering drinking water of marginal quality on the average, and many are delivering poor quality in one or more areas of their water distribution system today.

"To add to this quality problem," he said, "the deficiencies identified with most water systems justify real concern over the ability of most systems to deliver adequate quantities of safe water in the future."

Dollars and sense

An interesting related development is the zooming sale of bottled water. It is estimated that more than $100 million of bottled, or so-called spring water, is being sold in the U.S. today, compared with $63 million in 1963.

The market is growing rapidly. Many soft drink companies are now entering the field. Canada Dry, Coca-Cola, Nestlé Co., Pepsi, and Schweppes are reported to be test marketing bottled purified drinking water in various parts of the U.S.

Most people, it is thought, turn to bottled water because they prefer its taste to that which comes out of the faucet.

The chlorine which is used to kill any bacteria in the water system and purify water before it reaches the tap leaves a taste that is unpleasant and sometimes has an odor. And, although fluoride is naturally present in water, more is added in some parts of the U.S. to bring it up to a higher level which, it is claimed, prevents tooth decay.

But those who switch to bottled water may as well know that "spring water" does not come always from natural springs. Spring water is often a trade name. Most bottled water, it is said, actually comes from artesian wells. Not that this detracts from its quality or taste.

Some bottled water, according to authorities, comes from the tap and is "re-manufactured." That is, chlorinated or distilled to kill bacteria, then enriched with natural minerals for taste.

The American Bottled Water Association in California asks its members to designate spring water as that which issues from the ground naturally. Some states require that the label state how bottled water was purified and if minerals have been added.

Bottled water has become extremely popular in some areas where it is sold in supermarkets, in vending machines, and home delivered along with milk.

The Environmental Protection Agency pooh-poohs any health claims made by firms which sell bottled water.

Experts at the agency point out that there are simple ways to eliminate the taste of chlorine in tap water.

For instance, just fill a pitcher with tap water and let it stand for an hour or two until the chlorine evaporates. If it stands in the sunlight, the evaporation will take place within an hour. If it is left in the refrigerator, the process takes longer.

Or the chlorine may be removed by attaching a charcoal filter to the faucet. These cartridges may be obtained in most stores which carry accessories of this kind.

But for those who want to get behind efforts to make pure drinking water a national responsibility, they can express support for two bills in Congress. One, The National Water Hygiene Act of 1970 (which will be reintroduced in 1971) is by Rep. Paul G. Rogers (D) of Florida. Its purpose is to provide the public with an adequate supply of safe water for drinking, recreation, and other human uses.

The other, to establish health standards for all types of bottled water, was introduced by Rep. John S. Monagan (D) of Connecticut.

He points out that there are now no enforceable standards for such dangerous substances as arsenic, lead, mercury, cyanide, or organic carcinogens.

His bill would require states to meet federal standards, and include a testing and surveillance program.

SCOTS, 12--5

The Scots have a 12-5 record as a result of a 92-86 loss to LMU and an impressive 99-93 victory over Clinch Valley.

At LMU, the Scots rana cropper of some bad shotting and finally succombed to the VASC Champs. At the half the Scots were down only one point. However, in the second half the Scots hit only 34% from the field and the Railsplitters 47%. The Scots trailed by only two with 10 minutes left but several turnovers and the cold shooting put the game out of reach.

For the Scots, John Weston tallied 23, Warren Morgan—22, Dan McKinstry—19, Mike Barrows—15, Scott Thompson—4, Mike Butler—3.

Saturday's home game with Tusculum was cancelled because of the snow and Tusculum would not re-schedule it at a later date.

On Monday, the Scots ventured to Wise, Virginia to tangle with the Clinch Valley Cavaliers. The Scots jumped to an early lead and by halftime had a 49-35 edge. The second half saw Clinch Valley cut into the lead but the Scots maintained the advantage and the final margin proved to be six points.

For the Scots, Dan McKinstry paced them with 30 points. Warren Morgan and John Weston added good support as they accumulated 24 and 21 respectively. Mike Barrows chipped in with 12 and Scott Thompson playing a fine ballgame added ten. Gary Childress added a field goal to the cause.

The Scots have three games remaining with the next being on Friday against Birmingham Southern. The game is amidst the county high school tournament. The game will start at 8 with two high school games before, one boys and one girls, and a boys game following our game.

Next Tuesday, the Scots go to Chattenooga to play Tennessee Temple and then close their season next Thursday against Johnson Bible College here at 7:30. This will mark the last game for senior forward Mike Barrows and the Scots other forward, Captain Warren Morgan who leads them in scoring and rebounding.

Follow the Scots to the end. Everyone come Friday and the next Thursday as the Scots close one of their best seasons ever.

BOOKS and stuff

The User's Guide to the Protection of the Environment, by Paul Swatek, A Friends of the Earth/ Ballantine Book. Paperback $1.25.

The Voter's Guide to Environmental Politics, Garrett DeBell, Ed., A Friends of the Earth/Ballantine Book. Paperback $.95.

These guide books published by Friends of the Earth bring a new and needed skepticism to both consumerism and politics. They are particularly valuable because they bring together in one place much formerly scattered material on living environmentally and how The System works.

The User's Guide tackles every aspect of living from home heating to detergents. Its thesis is "Every consumer decision you make has an environmental impact. Every time you visit the supermarket, buy a ticket to travel, choose a place to live your choices have an effect . . . on the quality of the air you breathe and the water you drink."

The User's Guide shows the consumer how he can say "no" to certain environmental insults and that he can make better decisions than the so-called experts. The book fails, however, to point out forcefully enough that the consumer is really prevented from making environmentally sound decisions most of the time because environmentally sound alternatives don't exist.

The Voter's Guide exposes a purposefully murky subject—the working of government—and presents guidelines for those who would work within the system for environmental sanity. It provides practical, step-by-step instructions on how to influence congressmen and federal agencies. It is remarkable because it emphasized the difficulty of being effective with Congress and the downright impossibility of getting anywhere with a federal agency.

Together these volumes are as comprehensive as any already on the environmental bookshelf. Although they assume a working knowledge of the environmental calamities confronting us the Users Guide contains a bibliography for those who would read further and the Voter's Guide contains a list of organizations which provide information and action on environmental problems.

CHRISTIANS–2
LIONS–0

Concerned about sexuality. . .legalizing abortion. . .the drug scene? Think the CHURCH ought to be, too? Or maybe overpopulation or the ecological crisis is heavy on your mind. Your chance to confront the organized church (if the United Presbyterian church will serve for target practice) is coming on March 30 at 7:30 p.m.

It's a C.I.V. (but don't let that stop you). It's in the new gym. The game is throwing concerns at the elected representative of the United Presbyterian Church, Bill Laws. As Moderator (chairman elected for one year) he has had plenty of practice–travelling around the world holding rapsessions wherever he can find a group with a gripe. He'll be defending the south goal and he's ready for the refs whistle and the jump ball.

In order to get the jump on him, our home team strategy is PREPAREDNESS. In order to gather up all our concerns to fire at him, blanks will be distributed in the dorms and boxes will be put there to receive the answers. For the town students, there'll be a box in the Student Center. Don't round-file it! Fill it out and toss it in the appropriate cube during the week of March 1-5. Answers will be tabulated and a game-plan worked out. Sock it to him.

LITTERING DOESN'T PAY

Keep America Beautiful, Inc. reports that a 10-year-old South Carolina anti-litterbug helped catch a robber recently.

The boy saw a motorist toss paper out of his car window, so he wrote down the license number and retrieved the litter. In the litter was part of a check from a local department store that had been robbed earlier in the day.

Armed with the check fragment and the license number, the police nabbed the suspect who turned out to be wanted in three other holdups as well.

Quote of the Week. . . . .

A certain professor talking to a bunch of guys. . ."I don't see why you want co-ed dorms. You're already sleeping with them. . .why live with them?"

SMITH NUMBER ONE

At the Tennessee Intercollegiate Forensic Association annual tournament in Gatlinburg held recently, Stuart Smith, senior speech and theatre major was ranked as the top oral interpreter of literature among participants from 12 universities and colleges. Also participating from Maryville College in interp were Mark Stoub, who ranked 7th, Harry Robertshaw, in 8th place, and Mark Mertz, who missed the cut-off for the top 10 positions.

In after-dinner speaking, Maryville was represented in the finals by Nancy McCleary and Harry Robertshaw, who placed 5th and 6th. Also ranking in the top ten after the preliminary round was Sue Drees in 8th position.

In persuasive speaking, Kevin Russell was Maryville College's top entry, finishing in 7th place, followed closely by Nancy McCleary in 9th place. Bob Cox and Margaret Jefferson were toher Maryville College contestants in this event.

In extemporaneous speaking, Maryville had 4 entries: Stuart Smith, Cari Peeples, Bob Cox and Ken Murr. None of these made the top 10.

Maryville College was represented in open debate by 2 novice teams. Janet Vial and Kevin Russell, 2 freshman members of the squad, won 2 and lost 4. Ken Murr and Margaret Jefferson went 1-5. This year the tournament was composed of a single debate division, rather than the normal Varsity/Junior classifications, which resulted in Vial and Russell meeting a 4th year varsity team in Round I and losing on a 47-41 point decision.

PILOT REHIRED BY EA

Eastern Airlines has rehired the pilot they fired when he refused to continue dumping excess jet fuel in the air after takeoff. The pilot, William L. Guthrie, said the fuel contributed to air pollution and made runways unnecessarily slick.

Instead, he had the fuel drained by ground crews before takeoff. The airlines contended the practice delayed the flights he commanded.

Fired October 16, two years before mandatory retirement, Guthrie has been rehired with back pay and given an assignment as environmental and ecology consultant in addition to his job as senior pilot.

CONCERT ON WEDNESDAY

See Maryville College's own Dana Paul in Concert with the Rich Mountain Tower. The concert will be Wednesday night at 8:00 p.m. in the chapel and the price will be $1.00 per person. They will feature selections from their new album!

AMERICA WON THE WAR!

Picture it–Saturday morning, February 20, 1971. You're listening to your radio and suddenly that familiar voice of the White House says, "This is not a test. This is an actual emergency alert. The United States is under enemy attack. Listen to this station for further rescue instructions."

Do you run for cover? Check out all the other stations (who should have gone off the air) or do like millions of other Americans and ignore it. For all intents and purposes the United States was under attack last Saturday due to an error on the part of a teletype operator who slipped the wrong tape into his little box. The mistake wasn't rectified until some time later when a technician noticed that a cross-code word was absent from the message. But the point is not that some guy in Colorado Springs made a human error, it is that the nation ignored it. Radio and television stations which would not operate under seige conditions continued to play; a few people prayed. It's all very well to say that it wasn't a real attack, but who knew that, outside of a handful of technicians? Apathy is one thing, but this is ridiculous!

Also in the news, those extensive draft hearings before the Senate Armed Services Committee, aren't–forthcoming that is. A spokesman for the group said, "The only way to have a volunteer army is to draft it." A sterling example of Senate humor.

On Tuesday, Feb. 23, the first activity concerning the war since last spring's unrest occurred in the Senate. Senate Democrats gave an overwhelming vote to pressure the President into withdrawal of all United States troops from Indo-China by the end of 1972. They also suggested that we retrieve all our American POW's. Unfortunately the Senate Democrats cannot offer a viable method for accomplishing these goals; however, with strong senatorial pressure behind him the President may be forced to act conclusively and soon.

VESPERS

The vesper service on Sunday, Feb. 28 at 7:00 p.m. will be the third in a series dealing with the relationship of various disciplines to the Christian faith. A panel consisting of Dr. James Bloy, Mr. Dale Bunse and Mrs. Lucy Proffitt will deal with the subject, "The Artist Views the Christian Faith." The service will follow a traditional form of Maryville College vespers services used over many years. The college choir will lead the music.

EDITORIAL

I think it's finally time something was said about a secret society which exists much to everyone's knowledge; that is to speak of the campus's discrimination. First of all, let me say that I do not wish to offend anyone in particular by the examples I shall refer to. I feel it is necessary, however to cite everyone from the whole football team to the Maryville College Choir, and believe me, there is quite a difference in just those two examples!

What does this college lack? A star football team, some say. Well, actually, the football team hasn't done too badly and it could probably do better if it got just a little more support. Does it lack more performance in the fine arts, say, a good chorus or choir? Why, certainly not! We have a very famous choir! Not only is it excellent in performance but just the fact that it travels so far and wide should tell us that this fact is true. But, choir does not travel by song alone! Tours take MONEY! Uh oh, I said the dirty word. If there is one thing this college does not have it is definately money. However, some departments seem to be doing alright. I'm afraid the crux of this problem boils down to more than just money, but I'll get to that a little later.

Since I was speaking of the choir, let's simply examine the fine arts department first. Why don't we have an outstanding art department? It doesn't have the money! Why don't we have an outstanding instrumental musical department? No money! Why is the theater limited to productions (aside from maybe censorship)? So little money! And the poor old band—why does it wear 150 year old uniforms and not go to the away games to help support the football team? A lack of the dough, chums. I must say, however that the choir seems to be doing fairly well what with all this business about the Maryville Poor House. I ask you all WHY could that BE?

The black students surely still want a black professor. And what was one of the basic issues? Money, again! "You see, it is so hard to get a black instructor in this part of the country because the pay is so little, and we just can't afford to pay anymore to get a certain type of teacher."

Why can't the lunchroom serve a variety and have a better brand of peanut butter, etc...? Not because Miss Ware doesn't try; because they can't afford to feed us! Kind of cuts you to the quick, doesn't it, that last statement? Well, if the stark reality of the situation hasn't hit you, it should! We aren't paying over $2200 a year to have our money unevenly portioned.

There are other departments that seem to benefit besides the choir. This year one may accept the excuse that the new P.E. building has taken all the money. I find that rather doubtful, however.

Aside from the fact that money is in itself a problem, don't you find it rather ironic that we ourselves are aiding this whole mess? Yes, because we don't support what we do have enough to show that we really are concerned.

What do we have? Examples: A football team, and if some of you have forgotten what that is, Spring practice is soon to begin. You might go by and see what a rough time people spend for the sake of honor. Not that a few people never came to the pep rallies, of course.

A band, however small or unprofessional it may seem; and, I might add does more to support various parts of M.C. and gets little or no credit at all for it. It does more to support the football team than the cheerleaders or anyone else, yet is it supported? No. By the way, there was a band concert last Saturday night. That is, using an example, and a justified one, I believe; "Where was anyone on the football team? Not even a coach!" When the band tours or takes a trip, most of it is paid by the band and the band members.

More activities and various means of socialization that no one comes to while they complain that there is nothing to do around here.

Several very good departments which are slowly but surely going downhill, due either to non-support or silly tradition.

What don't we have that we must have to correct all this. Organization, loyalty, and I hate to bring this word up even worse than "money", but—community! People, organizations, departments, societies, clubs, etc. . ., have got to help each other the way they stick together in their own certain group.

What do you say, fellow tuition payers, discriminators, and discriminatees?

LETTERS to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Though there is quite a bit of interest in the problem on which I am going to write there seems to be either a lack of unity or an over abundance of laziness on the part of the students in Maryville College.

Due to the addition of trays and peanut butter sandwiches, which are not always attainable, the problem of repulsive food has been slightly hidden for the moment.

In reality the trays and sandwiches were given to the students to pacify their demands for better food but the food hasn't gotten any better. It has come to my attention that the new trays in Pearson's aren't really new. Due to the difficulty of washing them, they have rarely been used in the past five years.

But still, the problem is there and it is one that must be taken care of in the near future. In my opinion the food situation is one of the worse aspects of Maryville College. In fact the only thing I can think of that is worse than the food is the social life which can easily be taken care of by a quick run to "Easy Curb" or Knoxville.

In the February 19th edition of the Highland Echo our fabulous President Copeland said he considers feeding the campus dogs scraps from the meal, an act which deprives other students of the food. Well, if President Copeland would come to a few meals, unexpectedly, he would find that at least 50% of the meals are fit only for the dogs. The other 50% even the dogs won't eat. The only reason I can find for President Copeland to get all hot about is that it cuts down on Miss Ware's leftovers for soup and a few of her other concoctions.

In conclusion all I can say is that we students must get together in order taht we may achieve decent meals, not only when dignitaries are here, but when we the normal, average $2,200 student are eating in the "Ware House."

Mike Hughes

Dear Bob,

Why are Maryville College students unwilling to participate sometimes even hostile toward—the two programs designed to provide education beyond the classroom experience? We contend loudly that we need a voice in our own campus government. We give lip service to the ideal that all must become actively concerned with national problems. Yet a town meeting takes place, and how many students bother to leave off the stimulating chit-chat in the student center or the even more rousing discussions of sex back in the dorm?

Each week well informed speakers air their views on social and political issues. Who cares? Certainly not those who bring their textbooks, their newspapers, their letters and other toys of distraction into the chapel for C.I.V. As usual during C.I.V. last week the dull roar was louder than the speaker. Dr. Neely's topic of physics is one of the most pertinent topics today, and yet who cared? Who cares what the scientists are developing? Who really cares?

Screams of liberty, responsibility, and equality are common cries heard on the Maryville College Campus, yet several weeks ago a town meeting took place and who showed up? We are often quick to criticize the All College Counsel, but how many of us are willing to give twenty minutes of our precious time? How can we have a voice in our own government if we do not participate?

If you don't care about campus government, then quit griping. If the only education you want is the kind that goes on in a classroom and rewards you with a grade, then have the intelligence to choose a college whose program does not require mental exercise. After all, what is Education?

IN REBUTTLE TO "ATTENTION ARS AND OTHER FRIENDS OF ABORTION"

Last week's antiabortion article was strangely indicative of a new and different type of logic: To the author. . .

You appeared to first arrive at the conclusion that having a tooth pulled was painless. The last time I heard, this was a very unpleasant procedure. Next, as a crusader for "our little friend in the womb", you made the statement that life was sacred in Viet Nam. Present and past U.S. administrations seem to think differently.

The only impression one could gain from your literary perception was that if abortions are against some people's morals, all should be denied them. There are two main reasons why the hipocracy of your thinking is over-evident:

(1) "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." In your line of thought, it would be just as horrible to prevent conception as it would be to have an abortion. Every unfertilized egg has the right to develop into a child and therefore birth control is also a form of murder. I sure am glad you weren't trying to moralize.

(2) I don't care what you believe. I don't even care if you hide behind religion as a defence for your beliefs. All I want to show is that our so-called educational system prides itself on presenting facts to the individual so that he might be better equipped to make his own decisions. Hipocracy is again obvious in your discussion. You call for equal time yet you tear down the notices that give people the chance to choose for themselves.

The new abortion reform is making it possible for people who might otherwise be killed during a back-alley abortion to obtain a legal, safe abortion at less cost. Please allow the free system of thought to operate. I'm sure it won't affect one way or the other.

Letter to the Editor:

It seems to me that Maryville College has waited long enough for the establishment of Co-Educational dorms. The student body is not only responsible enough for its enactment through the All College Council, but seems to be vitally interested in this new and exciting concept in co-educational living.

With this thought in mind, I would hope that at the next All College Council meeting a period of preliminary discussions concerning the establishment of at least one co-educational dorm for the fall of 1971 be placed on the agenda. As usual, there are two ways which the All College Council could approach this pressing matter. The first is the total and absolute bloating of the issue out of proportion in a moral sense. Accompanying this, one might find the President and some key administrators manipulating parliamentary procedure in order to thwart proposals aimed toward the establishment of co-educational living. However, I feel that the student body has been made aware of these manuevers through past experiences: i.e. (establishment of visitation).

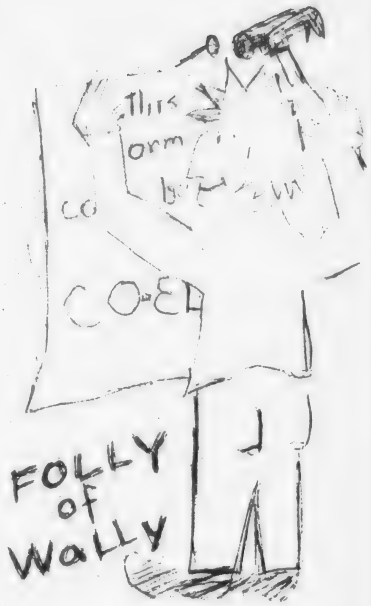
The second method, of course, would be the most preferred. It would mean the immediate discussion at the next All College Council meeting of the concepts involved and an immediate assignment to an appropriate committee for research, discussion, and development of a comprehensive program for co-educational living on the Maryville College campus beginning in the fall of 1971.

Time of coures is of the essence in approaching this matter. It is obvious that after preliminary discussion in the All College Council, and after it is sent to committee for discussion, an endless number of roadblacks might be erected to stall formulation of a proposal. Do not get the idea that we wish the hasty and careless formulation of an unthought through proposal. We would encourage careful and intensive research and evaluation of other co-educational living systems at other colleges, in trying to determine what program would be most beneficial to Maryville College.

It is possible to accomplish this before May 31 of this school year, providing the All College Council realizes its responsibility and answers the call of the members of its community. And in that same respect that the committee which is chosen for development of a program get swift All College Council permission and themselves start the wheels turning at the greatest possible speed.

It is needless to say that this will without a doubt be the most profound and exciting program that this year's All College Council might enact for our community.

The ball is in the All College Council's court. If they are truly the vital and concerned governmental body they pride themselves in being, they will score with co-educational dorms in the Fall of 1971.



A Friend of Co-Ed '71

*In all fairness we think it important to note that the "vital interest" on the part of the student body could be misleading. The one person who wrote this article is the same person who placed all those signs on campus. Possibly the sentence in the fifth paragraph should read "providing the All College Council realizes its responsibility and answers the call of a few of the members of its community."

Dear Bob:

I have followed your editorials throughout the year with much interest, sometimes disagreeing, sometimes applauding, and occasionally even acting (as in buying soap instead of detergents and controlling my penchant for lavendar Kleenex). Last week's editorial about CIV was to me one of your most provocative. You asked questions that many of us have been asking; you were fair in reporting the results of your informal survey; and you offered what seemed to you to be the best solution.

Your statement that "the consideration of community issues and values is a vital part of a Liberal Arts education. . ." evoked memories. These were almost the exact words–certainly the basic premise–of the enthusiastic students who conceived CIV. Convinced that they had become too insulated and that college should provide more than classroom learning, their reasoning was that CIV would be an effective way to bring the world to the campus and to give college credit that is not attached to grades. Here each one would be exposed to the ideas, then left to discuss them, pursue them, or ignore them. In short, without the pressure of grades, he would be free to do as he pleased with what he was offered. Attendance, they reasoned, would have to be required because the success of the program would depend upon at least initial exposure for everyone.

I remember how good we thought it sounded–so good that the administration promptly pledged the financial support to bring well informed speakers (and I still contend that the speakers have been consistently thought provoking, even if all have not been dramatic.

Why is the program now in trouble? Mainly, I think it is the abdication of responsibility on the part of those who could offer leadership. Let's face the facts. We are not born with maturity, with a built-in sense of responsibility and discipline. It does not come automatically at eighteen. And let me assure you that it is not a gift handed to you on your fiftieth birthday. It's something you work for–struggle for–and know you are progressing toward when you have conquered the adolescent impulse to declare, "I won't because it's required." Requirements, whether they be attendance at CIV, or, in post college years, attendance at staff meetings or Rotary, are simply a recognition that human nature is so constituted that we all need outside help to develope inner strength.

The CIV audience is composed of three groups: (1) the adolescents who are saying, "Look at me–you can't tell me what to do, and to prove it, I will rattle this newspaper"; (2) that maturing

SCOTS, 13–6

The Scots split their last two outings and now have a 13-6 basketball record.

Last Friday, Birmingham Southern invaded the new gym for a ballgame. The game was sandwiched in between the local high school tournament games. The Scots fell behind at the outset and never did catch up and finally succombed 81-70.

The Scots trailed 31-26 at the half. Two quick buckets made it a one point margin but the Scots got no closer. Russel Thompson for Birmingham took over and scored twelve straight points.

Final statistics showed the Scots shooting 35% Birmingham shot 57% overall and in the second half alone was 13-17 from the field and 24-26 from the foul line.

Warren Morgan paced the Scots with 27 points, but got little support from anyone else. Dan McKinstry and John Weston tallied 12 apiece. Mike Butler had 8, Mike Barrows contributed 6 and Gary Childress dropped in 5.

Tuesday, the Scots venture to Chattenooga to play Tennessee Temple in their last game of the season. The Scots fell behind early and at one stage trailed by 12 points. However, at the half the lead had been narrowed to 40-32.

The Scots began rolling in the second half and after four minutes trailed 48-45. Then the Scots exploded behind Warren Morgan, John Weston and Dan McKinstry. The Scots controlled the boards and rolled to a 85-71 lead with three minutes left. At the point the starters were replaced and the final was 87-75.

MORGAN SCORES 59

Last night at 9:00 p.m. the crowd at the MC–Johnson Bible College basketball game rose to their feet and gave a standing ovation for Warren Morgan as he broke the school's individual scoring record. Warren, a senior who was playing his last game for the Scots, led all scorers with 59 points. This broke the previous record of 56 set by Tom Morris back in the fifties. Warren has served this past season as Captain of the team.

Graduating senior Mike Barrows also had a tremendous game, scoring 44 points. Mike and Warren's total point output of 103 was enough to defeat the Preachers who only scored 77.

The Scots took a commanding lead right from the start and at one point tripled the score of JBC at 33 to 11. In this runaway rout which was the last game of the season, all of the players got a chance to get in some game time. The final score was Maryville 144 and JBC 77.

group who are saying, "This man is a scientist who has better answers about our space program than I do–he can help me clarify my thinking"; and (3) those in between who can go either way, depending upon the climate of opinion in which they find themselves. I believe, Bob, that those in the second group, though in the minority, are more numerous than you think, with the power and influence to bring about the change of philosophy that you offered as one alternative.

The other alternative, in the light of what we know about human nature, is not viable. To do away with all attendance requirements would be to do away with the program altogether. We could not justify inviting a speaker to talk to the small group who would be completely free of the need of an external stimulus. We would thus be taking one more step toward conforming to the kind of education that any state university can offer. And that may be the answer. It would certainly be less expensive in time, effort, and money.

But I hope that we refuse to accept that as an answer. A few years ago I had to listen to an alumna indictment that haunts me more than anything that has ever been said to me. Regarding a point about which the perspective of six years had caused her to change her mind, she said, "You had had the experience. Why didn't you care enough to insist that I listen?" My only defense was that I was tired and worn down by all the griping.

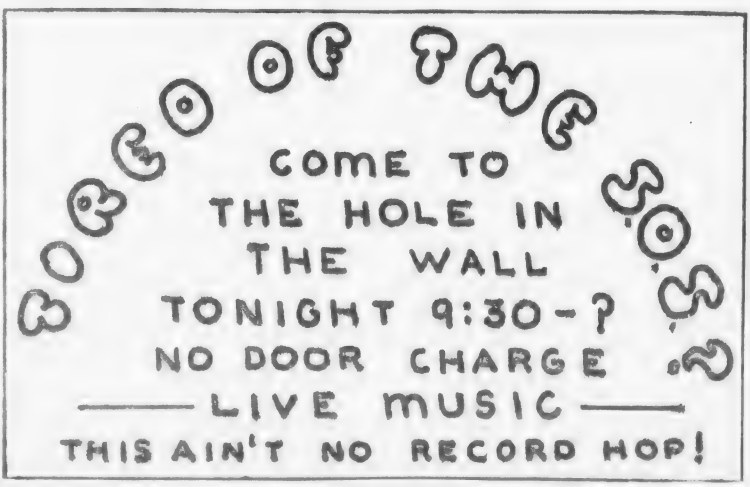
If we allow CIV to die, will it be because we no longer believe it to be "a vital part of a Liberal Arts education"–or because we are too tired to fight any longer? Do enough people care enough to offer constructive leadership? I hope we do.

Sincerely,
Carolyn Blair

Dear Editor,

After reading the letter in last week's Echo directed to ARS and friends of Abortion, I thought that an immediate reply was needed. In the hassle over whether abortion is "moral" or not, so much attention is given to the unborn child–that it is "murder" to eliminate a two month old mass of tissue. Granted. But have you readers ever considered why most women want abortions? Usually because they are emotionally, psychologically, physically, or financially unable to bear and raise a child. No matter what the reason, the fact is that they do not want the child. Do you know what it's like for a child to be raised by parents who do not love or want him? Are you not aware of the now famous "battered child syndrome" and can you not understand why it exists? If life is so precious to you, can your "conscience" rest seeing it endure such torture? Can you even call that living? I say better the child were mercifully saved from a living hell in his second month of existence than for him to end it himself in his twentieth year.

So much for the unborn child. Have you ever considered the plight of its mother? Certainly an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. But what if she cannot use the Pill because of a family history of heart trouble? Any other method is not even 90% effective. Until men begin to share the act of contraception (maybe not even then) there is always a risk of pregnancy. Supposing this hypothetical woman is a poor college student, unmarried, and unfit to bear a child emotionally, etc. Her only recourse is an abortion and, because she is so desperate, she will willingly (and until now, illegally) put herself in the hands of a quack whose instrument may not be any better than her own knitting needle. Each year approx. 1 million women go this route, 10,000 of those women die from a botched operation, thousands more are infected or made sterile for life. Are not the lives of these women sacred?



The answer is yes and I hope this sick society opens its eyes and stops this slaughter. As a woman, I am not so concerned about being equal with men–all I care about is the right to fulfill my life the way I choose to. But what I demand (not ask) is that women be given the right to control our own bodies and the consequences of our actions. To give us anything less is inhuman.

"AMERICA" TONIGHT

"America Hurrah," the ironically titled sequence of three plays that unsettled the complacency of New York theatregoers for 80 weeks through the spring of 1968, will be presented at the College Theatre tonight and tomorrow.

Written by a young, promising author named Claude van Ittallie, "America Hurrah" achieved its 640-performance New York success on two counts—its stunning contents and its original form.

In content its "three views of the U.S.A." were found to be a chilling portrayal of those everyday aspects of American life which, in the author's highlighting of their recognizable absurdities, are frightening—the indignities and sense of cheapness and shallowness that everyone is unhappily aware of, but tries to overlook.

The form of "America Hurrah" is a complete break from previous plays in which characters represented recognizable persons, and in which scenes with definite beginnings and endings followed one another in a logical progression.

In this experiment in changing the nature of the stage, fluid shiftings within each of the short plays transform actors from role to role at barely-markedpoints, as scenes merge almost unperceptibly from one locale to another.

The performances will be held at 8:15 p.m. and tickets can be purchased at the door for $1.00 or $1.50.

RELATIONS WITH NORTH VIETNAM

South Viet-Nam. President Nguyen Van Thieu reportedly told a group of lawmakers a few days before the lunar New Year that his administration was ready to have economic relations with North Vietnam "although we are now at war with Hanoi". On this occasion, the South Vietnamese President also declared his readiness to accept the notion of dual Vietnamese representation at the United Nations if the problem should come up at the international body.

If confirmed, the new South Vietnamese stand marks a noted divorce from Saigon's attitude in the past. Throughout the administrations of the late Ngo Kinh Diem and his successors, Saigon had been demanding monopoly of representation for the entire Vietnamese nation, and the Hanoi regime has also adopted a similar stand. And either Vietnam had been using the word "nguy" or "rebel" to describe the rival political regime.

Vespers will be held in the chapel building at 7:00 p.m. this Sunday. Topic: "Social Scientist Looks at the Christian Faith." Kathryn Nelson, Kamala Anandam, and Eugene Hileman will speak.

CONTROVERSIAL A.C.C. MEETING by Susan Hayba

The most exciting All College Council meeting of the year was held Wednesday in the presence of about 30 visitors, primarily students concerned with the report on the visitation questionnaires. Also presented were policies affecting the faculty, an evaluation of January Meetings, certain measures concerning the Echo and the Chilbowean, and commencement plans.

The two proposals of the Instructional Program Committee to clarify school policy on faculty illness and sabbatical leave were accepted by a concensus of the Council. For the first two weeks of sickness a teacher's responsibilities will be carried by his department or a substitute before further action is determined by the dean. In the future those faculty members selected take a half year sabbatical leave at full pay during the winter and spring terms will teach a free summer term in compensation.

Among the suggestions of the group which evaluated January Meetings were the ones that the rap sessions be held in quarters cosier than the chapel, that art and theatre be employed, that only two speakers be invited to come on a Tuesday to become acquainted and remain through Friday, and that classes be suspended just on that Wednesday for two CIV programs while other events be scheduled in the evenings. Carol Christofferson suggested that the theme be a mroe controversial issue. Alan Childs feared that sandwiching the free day between two class days would tempt people to use it just for study. Dr. Walker noted that if the free time made a long weekend, as it did this year, the session ought to be scheduled early in January to discourage the exodus.

Mrs. Murfree, chairwoman of the Publications Committee, reported that three qualified candidates have applied for the editorship of the Echo...and after Spring break each will edit a trial paper." It was ascertained that the editor has permission to print the paper on newsprint off-campus if he can do so on his budget. Several years ago the paper was brought to the campus printing office for a better rpice (approximately $77.00 per issue), a later deadline, and excellent cooperation from our printing office. The editorial candidates would like to see the paper run more ads from merchants for the profit of both parties. The Publications Committee received support for its recommendation that the junior class, with consent, be relieved of its responsibility for the Chilbowean and that the selection of an experienced editor for the annual also be put under the supervision of the Publications Committee. Qualified freshmen and sophomores are invited to apply immediately for the position.

Ethel Ann Scruggs, senior class president, explained the compromise of the debate over whether the class would wear caps and gowns or contribute the money to a scholarship fund. Each senior will be permitted to decide whether he will attend the graduation ceremony in a robe or in street clothes. A student from both groups, as well as a faculty member and a parent, will speak on what the occasion means to him.

VISITATION CONSIDERED

By far the most explosive and time-consuming discussion of the afternoon dealt with the evaluation of the questionaires on visitaiton by the Residential Life Committee. The controversy began over the replies to two questions in the questionnaire:

III. Are students accepting responsibility for mechanics of the program?

Yes	448
No	7
Sometimes	59
No Opinion	9

IV. Are students misusing the visitation policy?

No	470

Drawing attention to the last question, an exasperated Mr. Ramger said at length that there is a great deal more abuse of visitation than was admitted in the questionnaire and that the students are therefore just as hypocritical, irresponsible, and lying as the church, industrial polluters, the faculty, and the adult world in general are accused of being. Mr. Ramger declared his disbust at student disinterest in cooperating with a policy they had long argued for so nobly last year. He repeated that he wanted nothing more to do with his committee's painstaking job of setting up visitation standards that attempt to deal fairly with the community if students continued to demonstrate so little integrity in upholding them. To emphasize the gravity of their concern, and not to punish the responsible majority, the Residential Life Committee unanimously passed a resolution that visitation be suspended for a week to remind student that visitation is still on an experimental basis and to stress the House Council meetings that

DOGS

Nobody minds a nice friendly pet dog, and that includes a college student. But most college students do not like it when someone is attacked by a pack of dogs and bit by one of these dogs. This example points up the growing problem this campus has with dogs. Not only are they in the dining hall, but there is also one that sits in the kitchen. There is no way it can be argued differently—the dogs ought to go.

LIBRARY HOURS

If, and I do say if, this college is here primarily for academic pursuits it would appear that there might be a case for opening the library on Saturday and Sunday nights. Even though there are so very many social events that go on each Saturday night on campus, some people do not attend for various reasons, and these people should not be deprived from use of the library. Also, whether anyone knows it or not, not many people go to Sunday evening church or vesper services and it seems that Sunday night is a great time for studying. Let's make the library open at these hours and maybe someone will bump into the religious section of the stacks.

FOOD

I wonder how many people spoke to Miss Ware and said how good those cornish hens were on Tuesday?

SIDEWALKS

Since good Spring weather will soon be here to stay, it would seem practical that the mud path from the northeast corner of the library to the post office be fixed. This worn down tract has been around for at least three years. Is concrete that expensive?

FOLLOW-UP

My editorial last week created more of a stir than I had anticipated. After an interview iwth Dr. Harry Harter, I feel it is necessary to continue the subject of discrimination further.

I realize I was at fault in not listing the amount of money some departments receive. Such information is not easily attainable, however, so perhaps I spoke without full conviction in last week's editorial. According to Dr. Harter, the choir receives no more financial assistance than other fine arts sections. The choir has an advantage in that it makes money when it tours. Therefore, an obvious fallacy exists, campus-wide, that the M.C. choir benefits monitarily. Where did this "rumor" begin? Where, then, is all the money going?

The Highland Echo hopes to interview Dr. Copeland on this matter within the next week (in time for thenext issue!) The staff, as well as myself, is anxious to receive any and all opinions on this.

Remember, it's your money and your support which is drifting away!

Dear Editor,

It has been reported that 69,000 abortions have been performed in six months in New York City—69,000 babies put to death, not a pretty fact, but a true one.

We have lost 45,000 lives in Viet-Nam in 10 years. We hear cries of outrage over these deaths, but not one protest or demonstration, no crying out against the medical death toll, no priest or nun willing to go to gail against the mass deaths of babies in the United States.

The headlines scream out against the murder of children and babies in My Lai—I don't understand.

I wonder why Father Berrigan, Senator Fulbright, Senator McGovern are silent.

Who can dare point the accusing finger at anyone as long as we allow the death of our unborn babies in this country?

Sincerely,
LMC

Please beware of people selling things in the dorms (non-students). Many students have complained about getting cheated or having their money taken under false pretenses. If you are in doubt about anyone canvassing in the dorm ask to see their clearance from the Student Personnel Office. If they have not been cleared please ask them to do so. Let's cut down on people getting gyped.

REBUTTAL III

It is interesting to note the extremist reaction that our letter of Feb. 19 caused—as was evidenced on Feb. 26. What were the reactions against?—not what was actually written, but rather, what we implied. Let us make ourselves clear.

First of all, the letter was not written to the world in general nor to the pentagon, but rather, to this "academic community." An education should facilitate the acquisition of values based on one's own evaluation of objective fact. We have detected a generally pro-abortion attitude "here at Maryville." And guess what! ——we too support legalized abortion (note: nothing in the previous article contradicts this position). In the spirit of "academic community," however, we felt and feel that a meticulous searching out of values and moral implications has been utterly and completely omitted. On the whole, we respect the members of this community, and feel that they are capable and responsible for their actions. We are not addressing ourselves to the emotionally, psychologically, or physically inept or disabled. In fact, we are addressing ourselves to a group that is often super-sensitive; a group that feels that life in Viet Nam is sacred, etc., Tim.

The pain involved in getting an abortion is not unlike getting a tooth pulled—it is physical. We simply question whether there is anything else at all involved. This author has had much experience working with unwanted children. It is indeed a tremendous tragedy. An educated, responsible person has the will to choose. However, most unwanted pregnancies are not caused by faulty birth control precautions—but by no birth control at all. When abortion is the lesser of two evils it should certainly be legalized and utilized. (When we said that life is sacred, we weren't excluding that of the Mother's!) But more than not, it is caused or made necessary by abdication of preventative responsibility on the part of the parents. And Tim, there is a big difference between prevention and cure—especially if moral responsibility is involved. Legalized abortion must come, but there is no way to enact responsibility. This is something we as educated, thinking people must be conscious of. Who will ever listen to us cry out against waste of life in Viet Nam or our own city streets if we cannot be responsible in our personal lifes?!? Hopefully this has clarified our position. We apologize for the ambiguity.

Incidently Tim, we didn't touch a single abortion notice!

Sincerely,
F. & J.

Dermatologists will be seeing skin cancer in places they have never seen it before as a result of the popularity of the bikini, says the March Science Digest. Light-skinned sun worshippers, who began wearing bikinis after World War II, should begin paying for their beach outings in about 15 years. Skin cancer is controllable if spotted early, however.

Dear Editor,

Last week's editorial was concerned with financial discrimination, and a lack of support, financial and otherwise from the (I hate that word) community. Both are two valuable and appropriate issues.

I must, however, object to the way in which the matter of discrimination was presented. The editorial implied that the M.C. choir receives more from the school than any other organization. The truth of the matter is that the choir is just as penniless, if not more so, than any other organization on campus. If indeed the choir is in reality receiving this extra amount of money, why must its members wash by hand their robes instead of having them dry cleaned? And why did those members who toured Europe last summer (How many, by the way, knew this tour existed?) pay

Also why have the robes lasted for 15 yrs. when they were only meant to last 5 yrs? Finally, why can only 40 out of its 53 members go on tour?

Yet the general consensus is that, because the choir does not have to pay for its tour and the band does, it has more more money. I am not in the position to know the financial arrangements the choir makes for its tours. I do know that the choir gets most of its expense money for the tour from the churches they perform for.

In response to the second issue, it is very unfortunate that the choir and band do not receive the support they deserve from the campus community. I am speaking of these organizations, because I know about them. However, I am fairly certain that other organizations also feel this lack of support. It is sad too that oftentimes the choir and band do not even support each other.

Music is for the moment. Few people on this campus realize the amount of time and effort that goes into making that one moment beautiful and memorable. The musical organizations must often wonder if their preparations are worthwhile when they perform for a handfull of people who act as if they could care less about what they are listening to. What these organizations need to survive is an honest awareness of their value as well as the appreciative support by the community of what they are attempting to achieve.

A chemical recipe that can turn oil about to spill from a ship's tanks into a gelatin pudding is described in the March Science Digest. The recipe, which has been developed by Esso, makes the oil solid enough for a man to stand on it.

How Much Phosphate in Your Wash?

Much confusion has arisen over the content of phosphorus in washday detergents. The phosphorus, of course, not only helps clean clothes—it also helps convert the country's lakes and streams into reservoirs of stinking algal slime. But lists heretofore published have, at best, been contradictory—because of varying test methods and standards. Now, Consumers Union has prepared an authoritative list, reprinted here with permission from Consumer Reports, which can guide Audubon readers in the purchase of no-phosphate or low-phosphate detergents.

What Consumers Union has done is to translate each brand's pollution potential into the phosphate which a single wash or dishwasher load would actually yield. This is based on information on phosphate levels furnished by the manufacturers to a Congressional subcommittee or to Consumers Union. It is calculated from the minimum amount of detergent which the package label recommends for a top-loading washing machine (or, where appropriate, a dishwasher).

Beginning in 1971, all detergents sold in New York State must list their phosphate content. And several large suppliers have already reduced or eliminated the phosphates in their products. Further changes are likely under threat of Congressional action and public pressure.

WRESTLERS SUCCESSFUL IN TOURNAMENT

by John Powell

The Scot wrestlers wound up their season last Friday and Saturday by competing in the annual Southeastern Invitational Wrestling Association tournament at Chattanooga.

Three of seven Scott wrestlers that entered placed in the tournament and accumulated a team score of 20 points.

Wrestling at 126 lbs., John Poore placed first. Both Brad Kehler, at 177 lbs., and Roger Reiter, 190 lbs. took third places. Sidelined with injuries were 2nd ranked Dave Russell, 134 lbs., and Dave Gaughan, 158 lbs. In other weight classes, Ed Johnson, at 150 lbs., won in the first round, but was overcome in the finals. Larry Bodine, 167 lbs., and Bob Evaul, 142 lbs., were eliminated in the first round. Dick Maloney was eliminated after losing to the winner of the heavyweight division.

In team standings, Maryville ranked 6th following LSU which accumulated points to take 1st place. With 61 points apiece, host school, UT Chattanooga, and Georgia Teck tied for 2nd place. Following them was Alabama in 4th place with 69 points and Troy State in 5th place. UT-Martin finished 7th with 12 points.

In February, 1972, the SEIWA plans to hold its annual tournament at Maryville. Next year's tournament will be expanded to 11 teams as newcomers, Georgia, Sewance, Florida, UT Knoxville, and Auburn join the SEIWA.

would make an effort to discover the most efficient method of realizing the intent of the original visitaiton program so that students will assume the responsibility for the program.

Over cries of protest that such action would alienate the community the resolution was not passed. Nevertheless, the bill achieved its authors' desired effect in arousing a good deal of serious, though highly emotional discussion. The immediate objection to Mr. Ramger's interpretation of the replies on abuse of visitation was the the students feel that generally visitation has been a success. Walter Barker pompously informed the Council that he has been taught since childhood to go by the facts, and so if 470 students replied "no" to that inflammatory question, there must not be much abuse. The point was then made that students usually avoid censuring their peers for infractions. Alan Childs felt that it was useless to make more rules without knowing why the existing ones are broken. Mr. Ramger suggested Alan ask Dorm I how it has apparently achieved some success with the program and quickly put everyone on the defensive about the other dorms. There were complaints that the examples were irrelevant or petty, cush as whether or not a student signs in. Dean Elia exploded that what was relevant was the boy in Dorm III last year who gave propane (or butane) gas to a girl and then took advantage of her, the people in bed for half an hour or more whose roommates are locked out, and the summer-time party with girls dancing nude. The trite reply to that was that students had intercourse in the woods before visitation and so sex had nothing to do with visitation. There was no mention made of the staggering number of abortions among the freshman girls alone.

By this time the discussion had raged on for about an hour and had to be halted. Because of a strong desire on the part of the students who took time to attend the meeting to talk more than the 10 minutes they were allotted, a Town Meeting was called for Friday.

Milton speaks tomorrow at Recognition Ceremony

Dr. Ohmer Milton, Director of the Learning Research Center of the University of Tennessee, will speak tomorrow at the Alpha Gamma Sigma Honor Recognition.

The ceremony will begin at 9:20 A.M. It is public recognition of students chosen as members of this scholastic honor society which is parallel to Phi Beta Kappa nationally. Requirements to belong are the same: a minimum cumulative average of 3.33 good character, and full-time and senior class status. There is a quota of 10 percent of the senior class. Occasionally a junior of exceptional scholarship is elected by the unanimous vote of active members.

New members are chosen after each term, providing the 10 percent limit has not been reached. Following the Fall ter, Beverly Yates Barber, Robert Gardner, Mack Garner, Joan Gates, Alma Hannah Hardy, Lloyd Kramer, and Robert Snow were honored.

Picked following Spring term were Mary Ellen Barr, Doug Cox and C.F. Smith, Jr.

Bonham recital is Friday evening

Robert J. Bonham, pianist, assistant professor of music at Maryville College, will present his faculty recital at 8:30 p.m. Friday, April 2 in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center.

Mr. Bonham has chosen the following selections for his program: Basso Ostinato, Op. 5, Arensky; Sonata, Op. 53, "Waldstein," Beethoven; Sonata, No. 3, Op. 28, Prokofieff; The Fountain of Acqua Paola from Roman Sketches, Op. 7, Griffes; Prelude, Op. 23, No. 4, Rachmaninoff; L'isle joyeuse, Debussy.

In 1963 Bonham received his B. Mus. from Phillips University, Oklahoma. He studied during the summer of 1963 at the University of California at Berkeley. In 1964 he received the M. Mus. from the University of Kansas.

For several summers he has worked with Alexander Fiorilla at the Temple Music Institute in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Before coming to Maryville College in 1965 as an instructor in music Bonham served in the Army for six months as pianist in the Post Chapel Program.

He grew up in India, where his parents were medical missionaries. He attended the Woodstock School at Musoorie, India, where he won the Poad Music Shield for outstanding achievement.

He is married to the former Sherry Proffitt.

Johnny Cash is Coming

Johnny Cash is scheduled to appear in a show sponsored by the Dogwood Arts Festival, April 24, at Stokely Athletic Center, in Knoxville.

Tickets, priced $7.50, $6, $4.50 and $3 are available now at the UT Central Ticket Office or the Valley Fidelity Bank Lobby.

CIV on Good Friday, April 9, will be a program which will follow the last day of the life of Christ. It is being presented by the religious life and activities committee.

Changes at the MC Bookstore

Alan Rhyne, bookstore manager, is a man on ecology's side. Despite the fact that it has meant a loss in sales, he no longer sells laundry detergents. In place of best-selling Tide XK he now stocks phosphate-free Ivory Snow.

Mr. Rhyne first began stocking soap powder because of the efforts of Alvin Baker. He stopped selling Tide after Dr. Nelson and members of her Sociology 211 class confronted him with a chart showing the phosphate-content of various laundry products. This list is now posted on the cash register.

In addition to this change, Mr. Rhyne has ordered a varied selection of paperbacks and magazines which should be arriving soon.

Future plans for the bookstore include an idea to purchase used texts from students at half the selling price. This, however, depends on the termination of the presently operating book rental system. If this new re-purchase policy is permitted, it is doubtful it will be operational before Fall term.

Course evaluation will begin this term

PROGRESS

By Jim Showalter

A committee, formed by the Instructional Programs Committee and under the chairmanship of Dr. Waters, is currently drawing up a form to be used toward the end of this term for the student evaluation of courses.

The evaluation would be used at the end of each term after that also, and would initially be used solely by the teacher of the course for improvement of the course. There are a few implications in this that are important.

First, the fact that students are being asked to evaluate courses is an open acknowledgment of the fact that students have a unique position from which they can view a teacher and a course. It is unique in that they are the targets of this whole apparatus called academia, they are the reason for its existence. If a student is not getting the content or stimulation that he feels is needed, the whole thing is a waste. This committee, by its existence, shows that this fact is not lost on those on the opposite end from the student.

Secondly, implicit in a course evaluation is a teacher evaluation. Each course is unique, even each section of a larger course, because of the unique assemblage of students and teacher. Although even the best teacher can do nothing with a group that does not want to learn, the largest responsibility for that classes

'Thoreau' cast listing posted

Henry Thoreau is alive and well in the Concord Jail, or, rather, he will be when Maryville College Playhouse presents "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail" on May 7-8. This play will feature freshman Philip Gibson playing Thoreau, Walter Barker as Thoreau's cellmate Bailey, Mark Stoub as Ralph Waldo Emerson, Diane Wood as Emerson's wife, Lydia, and Lloyd Kramer in the role of John Thoreau, Henry's brother.

ECHO resumes off-campus printing

Two years ago last February the Highland Echo began the experiment of on-campus publication. As the paper said at the time, "The Highland Echo now enters into a new developmental stage with its new physical format. This is an experiment in which we are giving up some of our newspaper look for a bigger chance to have the true newspaper quality: current and vital news . . . our deadline is now Monday and the paper will be distributed on the following Thursday." This experiment may have been a noble one, but it is time to admit its shortcomings. It has simply been a failure. The Echo has had neither the look nor the quality of a newspaper since it was first published on campus. Certainly the physical design of the paper has not been the sole cause of the poor quality of the newspaper. Student apathy has been just as damaging, but perhaps this problem can be solved by making the paper more physically attractive. We all agree that something must be done.

If the Echo could be published at the same price and with the same short deadline as the campus printing office now gives the paper, would it not be sensible to do so? This issue of the Echo is costing no more than the typical issue printed on campus. If advertising was sold, a much larger paper could be printed without additional cost to the college. The editors of this issue propose to do that. If the three day deadline could be obtained with an off-campus printer, would it not be more advantageous not to publish on campus? That short deadline is now available. Thus, in a different way, this copy of the Echo represents a new experiment in format. It has all of the advantages the current system purports to have, along with the unique quality of looking, feeling, and smelling like a newspaper.

Bill Hutton to join Dr. Ogren this Summer

Dr. Paul Ogren announced that Bill Hutton and one other student not yet named will work with him this summer in a 10-week chemical research program.

The Research Corporation of New York City gave a $4000 grant which will enable Dr. Ogren and his students to work on a problem entitled "Stabilities of Aluminum Halide Complexes with Oxygen-Donor Molecules".

The money represents a funding renewal of the program in which Dr. Ogren participated with Jim Cannon and C.F. Smith, Jr. two summers ago.

Sociology prof. in Africa

Dr. Kathryn Nelson, accompanied by her husband Henry and five year-old daughter, Fay, left yesterday for a trip to Africa. Among their many stops will be Nairobi, Kenya and Olduvai Gorge, where the famous anthropologist L.S.B. Leakey discovered the remains of Zinjanthropus.

The Nelsons will return May 5.

MACCI has first debate tournament

On Saturday, March 13, Ken Murr and Michael Montgomery participated in the first MACCI Debate Tournament, sponsored by Union College, Barbourville, Ky. In the round-robin meet, Murr and Montgomery placed second with a 3-1 standing, losing only to a guest team from Middle Tennessee State University.

Following this meet, coaches and teams discussed the possibility of forming a MACCI debate and individual events league, with periodic tournaments rotating among the colleges in the Mid-Appalachia College Council Incorporated consortium.

Faced with rising travel costs as well as the competition from very professional debate programs of major universities (which are fostered by large travel budgets and scholarships), small colleges are finding it equally difficult to "cut it" in debate as in the sports arena.

Because Maryville College and Carson - Newman are the only small colleges in Tennessee which still enter into major tournament competition consistently, it was decided that they could aid other small colleges in developing programs which would be competitive within the MACCI league. Maryville will host the first workshop in late April or early May, inviting students and faculty from the other 11 MACCI schools to take part in a forensic learning experience. Any MC students who would like to attend the workshop, either to hear the demonstration debate by teams from two major universities or to participate in the sessions, are invited to contact Mrs. Proffitt, MC Director of Forensics.

In accordance with Echo policy, each candidate for the position of Editor-in-Chief is responsible for publishing a copy of the newspaper. This issue is edited by Judith Greer and Michael Montgomery (co-editors).

Comments on this trial issue should be submitted in writing to Box 2820 and will be considered by the Echo staff and the Publications Committee when they select the editor for 1971-72.

The Editors of this issue are:

Michael Montgomery, a junior English major from Knoxville, is a candidate for co-editor of next year's Highland Echo. The following is an off-the-record interview which was leaked to the press in time for this week's edition:

Q.: Mr. Montgomery, could you tell the world of Maryville College what your real motives are for running for co-editor?

A.: Well, uh, so that everyone can share my wealth of ignorance. Besides, it's a great way to sublimate.

Q.: Why are you qualified to run for this position?

A.: Because I am conscientious and open-minded, as well as knowledgeable about many facets of campus life. For that matter, I have pledged to work unselfishly on the staff even if my competition happens to win.

Q.: Can you tell us what experience you have in newspaper work?

A.: I didn't know experience is required. However, I have worked for the Echo to a limited extent for the past two years. I have also taken a course in journalism at UT.

Q.: One last question--it has been reported that you want to give ratings of G, GP, R, or X to the articles submitted to your paper. Is this true?

A.: I'm afraid that my time is up. I won't be able to answer that question. You will have to wait and see.

Henry R. Luce: Journalism is the art of collecting varying kinds of information (commonly called "news") which a few people possess and of transmitting it to a much larger number of people who are supposed to desire to share it.

Judith Siver Greer is an art major, originally from Hackensack, New Jersey. She attended MC from 1962 to 1966, and during three of those years was a member of the Echo staff, advancing from paperfolder to assistant editor.

Judy would like to be an editor because she is well-qualified for the job and feels it is selfish not to utilize her journalistic knowledge. When she returned here last Fall she promised herself she wouldn't get her fingers in any extracurricular pies. But winter term, she took Religion 201 in which Dr. Stine kept saying "get involved."

If Judy graduates in June 1972, she will have spent six years attending Maryville College. She feels that this lengthy association, in addition to her newspaper experience are her primary assets for this job.

"When I left here in 1966," she said, "The Echo looked and read like a newspaper, rather than a newsletter. I believe the decline of the paper to its present joke-status is unfortunate and unwarranted, especially because there is a small but useful collection of books on journalism in the library, and there are people such as Mrs. Bennett and Dr. Blair from whom advice could have been sought."

Dr. Blair was faculty advisor of the Echo for many years. Mrs. Bennett was the editor-in-chief a few years back. Her husband, Duncan, who is now the News Editor of the Knoxville News-Sentinel, got his start in journalism as member of the staff of this college's paper. Concluding, she said, "I want to make the Echo a newspaper once again."

Unwanted pets pose problems

Students encourage the presence of dogs by feeding them and allowing them into buildings. If this were not the case, however, the dogs would probably still be here because of the lack of control by the city and individual owners.

There is no city ordinance prohibiting dogs to run loose, and Maryville has no pound for unwanted animals. Alcoa recently opened a shelter, and officers from it will pick up animals from anywhere in the county, but the city of Maryville is not contributing to the support of this facility.

In addition to being a traffic hazard, dogs are a menace to farmers and are responsible for killing more deer than hunters do. Unwanted dogs and cats, left to fend for themselves, have an average life span of only two years.

Throughout America there is an excess of pets. "Unwanted dogs and cats are born . . . at the rate of 10,000 and 15,000 every hour--night and day, every day of the year," stated naturalist Roger Caras in the March 1971 'Family Circle.' Annually $100 million is expended collecting and destroying strays. Caras says the effort " . . . is like bailing out the ocean." According to him the responsibility lies with owners who fail to have their pets neutered or spayed.

ON TOUR

The Maryville College Concert Choir, under the capable direction of Dr. Harry (Watch these hands) Harter, returned recently from an extensive 11-day tour of the Northeast. Once again the choir combined the talents of Trailways driver H.F. (One for the horse) Steele, Business Manager Don Squirrels--excuse me, that should be Dan Quarles--Tour Manager Bruce (I'll drink to that) Birch, and 'histronic' Gary Nier (to mention a few) to help the choir through an invigorating, exciting Spring Tour.

Many things happened on tour, and among the highlights we find the incident at Albany, New York. As the next number was being introduced the lights in the church went out. The next song?---"Arise, shine, thy light is come." Lesson #1: How to sing while dying of laughter.

Long live Whitinsville, Massachusetts. It's a nice place to visit, but does anyone live there? But really, despite the distracting long hair on some of the men in the choir, (Thank you, Mrs. Swift) the tour was a lot of fun and the choir was well received almost everywhere it appeared. Through standing ovations and sitting graveyards the choir sang on. Through high school lunches and tired voices the choir sang on. As the final concert ended, many tears gathered in our eyes, for many were sad to see the tour end. For the seniors this tour had to be an exciting climax in their careers in college.

By Roger Stiles

The now distinguished concert band of Maryville College has returned from another spring break tour. The purpose of the trip was two fold; to enlighten high school audiences to the fact that small colleges can and do have superb performing organizations (contrary to popular rumor), and to recruit new students.

This year the band played nine times in Nashville, Louisville, and Cincinnati, some of the better concerts being in the latter city. Sleeping accomodations for band members found them welcomed in people's homes. One of the more memorable visits was the encounter of a corpse (dead body) named Hazel. Seems as though Hazel has been preserved by an undertaker for use as a prototype (sales gimmick) of his artistic merits.

Speaking of artistic merits, in one Nashville concert Dave Bedell jumped out of his chair, faced the audience and let out some unbelievably shrill notes! This reaction was not due to frustration and tension before the concert or the fact that he thought he had seen Hazel in the audience, but was a direct result of the command from the concert master, nun (sic)-other-than Mr. Dan B. Stallings, our fearless leader who travelled with his trusty sidekick, Joan.

Letter To The Editors

Dear Reader,

"As they reckon it, they and only they are the true image; very well, then it follows that if the image is true, they themselves must be God, and being God they reckon themselves entitled to decree, 'Thus far, and no farther.' That is their great sin. They try to strangle the life out of life."

The quote is taken from a story called "Re-Birth" which explores the basic nature of man and his resistance to repression. Of course, the subject is visitation. I have no personal interest in it at all and am not concerned with whether it goes or stays or steps on its own toes or whether people are abiding by its rules. However, I am concerned with the attitudes indicated by the controversy over what visitation should or should not be. Administration, faculty, and students in general, if you thought visitation was the answer, you are fools. Visitation is no more than a symbol, an exchange of the shackle for the choke chain in an attempt to gain what is really desired, and that is individual freedom.

Some very strangled minds are at work on the visitation problem, and that thing that is causing the brouhaha (ha ha ha ha, etc.) seems to be the fact that there is sexual activity taking place in the dorms. For what little difference it makes, this has always been so. Rules have never been sufficient to stop the call of the wild and never will be. However, now we are dealing not merely with that ancient call but with an idea whose time has come. And you know what that means.

For some reason people are getting very upset about what's going on in the private lives of others. This is confusing but fairly common. Everybody likes a good piece of gossip, especially me, but they don't generally froth at the mouth and demand censure as is occurring in this case. What a person does on his own time behind his own door has no effect on you, unless you allow it to. There is a certain feeling (reputed to have green eyes) that springs up frequently in the life of man. It occurs when a person feels that he is lacking something that another definitely has. If you are the religious type, it first appears in the Bible on about page three. The only reason I can fathom for a person getting all tense about another's private parties, nude dancing girls and sexual experimentation is that he somehow wishes -- possibly, maybe, just a little bit--that he could get involved in something so objectionable. As far as I can ascertain, no one has been injured by the extra-visitational activities, not even Little Miss Propane Gas. The excuse is only one day older than intoxicants themselves and the events are hardly believable. I would first question what this young paragon of virtue was doing fooling around with a gas freak in the first place. I mean, everybody knows that drug people are sex fiends anyway and, well, what can you expect? At any rate, the effects of a good whiff of propane gas last, at most, three minutes. Although the experience is rather novel and startling, there is nothing in it that prohibits vocalization, reaction or purposeful movement. I can only conclude that this young lady was a victim of one of the most interesting and devastating qualities of drugs, that of circumventing the ego and allowing the person to do whatever he or she really desires.

All in all, I find the whole situation extremely conducive to the development of mature thought and actions. Now when a girl says no, it must be from her own convictions. She can no longer lean on the convenient societal rules of the college situation. In fact, it is almost like real life! It is none of your business, any of you, what decisions the individual makes. One should have the right to live his own life as long as, in that living, he harms no other human being. I would prefer to see this concept take precedence over that of the right to intervene in matters that concern the individual and the individual alone.

Man is a curious, two-sided creature. While he is many times not very wise, he has an inerradicable sense of human dignity that warns him when his freedom is threatened. This dormant sense of self-worth, given time and encouragement, can at almost any age allow one to form a workable set of personal beliefs that will allow him to manage his inner life with great efficiency. Of course, he will make mistakes, buty no amount of rules can protect him from that. Man cannot be saved from himself.

VONNEGUT

By David Nighbert

In spite of all the cries for involvement, realistic reappraisal, social consciousness and the freeing power of truth, a hunger for escape from the real has never been so insatiable. This is the time of the dreamers, illustrated by the ever-increasing demand for literary opiates to numb those who impatiently await the Apocalypse. Unfortunately, after a liberal diet of paperback fantasies one develops a certain immunity, the level of tolerance is raised and one seeks headier stuff which will offer philosophical succor instead of tranquilizing release.

Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., is one of the premiere poets of this era, offering his escape fantasies blended with his own special brand of philosophy. As one reads a Vonnegut novel one hears howls, peals, trickles of laughter bubbling out of a mustachioed semi-psychotic German guru who is trying valiantly to avoid crying. He is cynical and pessimistic to the extreme. He peoples his novels with satanic saints and beneficent tyrants who strive vainly and ineffectually for contentment.

There are no heroes and no villians in Vonnegut's novels; all are victims. His characters are free to stagger their mumbling, bungling way within the narrow confines of their destinies. Each is given just enough freedom to make a complete mess of his life. All of this is done for the amusement of God who really runs the whole show. All the complicated and unpredictable machinery of life is actually under the whimsical control of the Big Joker who apparently finds something excrutiatingly homorous in the lonely, diseased, mad debauchery of man.

For Vonnegut everything is meaningful as a clue to the mystery of an individual's destiny. He suggests that under the circumstances, the only proper way of life is to face hopelessness with utter abandonment, to float on the tide, let it carry you. He writes: "Peculiar travel suggestions are dancing lessons from God." Thus, freedom lies in becoming one with the ebb and flow. In CAT'S CRADLE, a religious leader named Bokonon writes:

> Oh, a sleeping drunkard
> Up in Central Park,
> And a lion-hunter
> In the jungle dark,
> And a Chinese dentist,
> And a Brittish queen--
> All fit together
> In the same machine.
> Nice, nice, very nice;
> Nice, nice, very nice:
> Nice, nice, very nice--
> So many different people
> In the same device.

Not all people need succor--some people are so simple that they cannot recognize frustration; others so intelligent that they remain victorious over frustration. But if by happenstance you occupy a position between these two groups, then you may find a temporary remedy in the very amusement and warm glow of cynical well-being that Kurt Vonnegut, Jr., has bequeathed to the world of literature.

PHI MU ALPHA

By Jim Buxton

Phi Mu Alpha will be holding another smoker in the near future. We hope there are some guys on campus who are really (we mean really) interested in the significance of music. Phi Mu Alpha does not stand for only classical (traditional) music and the lot, but emphasizes individual interpretation of musical values.

Everybody is affected by music in a big way. Today, especially in contrast to just fifty years ago, we hear music hour after hour because of radio and television. If you need some answers as to why our society is the way it is, listen to music; it has ideas, thoughts, and possible cures. You do not have to be a music major to join the men's national fraternity of music. You must be, however, the type of person who knows that music is becoming one of the largest forms of human communication and therapy.

success or failure lies with the teacher. Although there are some questions in our preliminary questionnaire dealing with the teacher, teacher evaluation will be a side-product, so to speak, of the course evaluation. But it will be very important if used correctly by the teacher. The threat to the teacher of being fired if a lousy course evaluation is received. It would just be reasonable for the teacher to pay some heed to what is said.

The committee, Mrs. Largen, Mr. Olsen, Mrs. Proffitt, Drs. Love, Walker, and Waters, and myself, have used a form drawn up by W.J. McKeachie as a basis. The final form will be in three parts: Course evaluation, teacher evaluation, and student evaluation. A preliminary form is being drawn up now, and the final, as stated before, will be ready for use this term. If anyone has a suggestion or is interested in more details, they may contact any of the committee. Griping is perennial. Constructive alternatives are rarely offered. We students should not take this opportunity lightly.

JOURNEY III

With the summer's intense heat the desert animals seek the shade.
Lying there, sides heaving,
Body heat and sun's heat
With no place to go.
Still panting, they fall asleep
And their souls leave on Brilliant artful hunting epics
Only to snap back, alert
At the first smell of danger
Ready to stand fast or Fly into the hot desert.

We chased them from the Cool resting place and drank
Of the bubbling liquid wetness until
The sliding heavens rainfall were Filled with it, and sinking onto the grass, I saw the snow topped mountains shivering in the heat waved distance.

Spring sports are underway

With the tennis and baseball seasons already in progress, and the track team to have its first meet Wednesday, the outdoor sports scene is once again alive. The sounds of tennis balls bouncing, popping catcher's mitts, and starters' guns will be filling the air. Prospects for baseball appear to be good, while the tennis and track teams may be lacking experienced members.

Coach Kardatzke's tennis squad has already played three matches. The team dropped their first two decisions to Ohio Wesleyan and UT Chattanooga, and met Sewanee Tuesday afternoon. Ward Brooks and Alan Childs, as first and second singles players, lead the team. Other starters are Dave Kidder, John Cochran, Scott Fisher, and Malcolm Westbrook. Alternate players are Dave Buckwalter, Steve Compher, and Jeff Grubbs. The team visits Carson-Newman for a match this afternoon and returns to play home matches tomorrow (vs. Lincoln Memorial) and Saturday (vs. Berry). Both events begin at 1 p.m.

Whether or not the MC baseball team can equal last year's 17-8 record, the general outlook for the current year is optimistic. A stronger pitching staff, along with the return of several power hitters, will mean a more balanced team. The infield is set, with Leon Hart starting at first, Mark Brooks at second, Larry Stephens at short stop and Bill Cochran at third. Playing catcher are Joe Kozel and Hugh Hunter, while the outfield will be manned by Steve Boggs, Dan McKinstry, Joe Bilella, David Clinto, Dusty Miller, and David Russell. Pacing the pitching staff are Rob Randall, who was 7-3 last year, along with Wayne Bassler, Glenn Doig, Earl McMahan, and Kent Smith. The first opponents for the nine was Messiah College of Pennsylvania whom Maryville played two times on Tuesday. After today's game at Bryan College, the next home game will be on Saturday afternoon against Western Carolina.

The track team kicks off its 1971 season with a five-way meet at Western Carolina this Wednesday. With only four returning lettermen, Tom Piper, Bill Postler, Chip Pusey and Harry Robertshaw, all juniors, a rebuilding year is anticipated. The squad figures to be strong in the intermediate distance and jumping events, but weak in field events and sprints. The coach is Howard Tomlinson.

REDS WIN INTRASQUAD GAME

The Reds defeated the Whites by a margin of 18 to 6 in the annual spring intrasquad game last Saturday night. This game, which was the conclusion of spring practice, featured a Red offense led by quarterback Joe Costner, who scored one touchdown and passed for another. Larry Stephens also scored for the Reds, as he returned an intercepted pass for 100 yards. Bill Corbett provided the White score with a one-yard plunge.

ACC team demonstration is conceivable falsehood

Following days of exhaustive tracking, The Highland Echo has been unable in any manner to substantiate the rumor that members of the All College Copulatory Team held a lay-in at the office of Bookstore manager.

The story which circulated with great celerity was that 12-1/2 people with sheets over themselves to conceal their identities (ACC Team is a secret society) entered the Bookstore when it opened in the morning. They remained on the floor of Mr. Rhyne's carpeted office until 12:30 when the dorms opened for visitation.

The reputed leader of this team was said to have been draped in pale green Wamsuttas. It was he who supposedly said the group was there to demand the sale of contraceptives.

The administration reacted immediately upon receipt of the story. A spokesman said that this was a typical action which was not representative of the student body as a whole. After it was fairly well established that ACC Team sortie was merely rumor, the spokesman said that this was just a typical action of some students to cajole the administration to take a stand on preventing pregnancies other than the withdrawal of visitation.

Miss Blunt Contest to be held this evening

The annual Miss Blunt contest, sponsored by the Fourth Floor of Carnegie, will be held tonight immediately after dinner.

Applicants will still be taken until 5:30 p.m. To be eligible one must be between the ages of 18 and 23, against the war in Vietnam and think all killing should end. This event does not discriminate against any race, religion or sex. Contestants are requested to walk slowly down the hallway of the fourth floor in order to be viewed by the judges, and then wait in the lobby until a decision is announced.

The winner, in addition to going to Jackson, Tennessee, to compete for the title of Miss Tennessee, can also be virtually assured of winning the Fall 1971 MC Homecoming Queen election.

DDT challenges Ass Professor

Within the next several days, the Dorm-III Drinking Team (DDT) is expected to extend an invitation to the "secret, evil conspiring" biology assistant professor. If the offer is accepted, selected members of the team will challenge him and his choice of comrades to a chug-a-lug.

The delay in sending the invitation has been caused by quibbling over the site of the contest. The group is not accustomed to having to find a place to drink.

In a gesture of sport-like fairness, DDT indicated that the opposition could consume beverages of their own choosing.

The winners of the event will each be awarded a quart of Boone's Farms Best.

City kid gets country air

Miss Wunda Lust, the Fresh Air Fund Scholarship winner, today received permission from Dean Massey to camp on the ledge outside her dormitory window.

Wunda, who is from Bayonne, New Jersey, made her request after her roommate began smoking. Rather than move to another room at this late date, she decided to sleep out. She originally thought of setting up a tent on the lawn behind Lloyd residence but abandoned the idea because the campus animals would probably disturb her.

BULLETIN

"We've been trying to keep it quiet," replied Jan Eby when queried about the rumor that Pat Paulsen had approached her about joining his 1972 presidential ticket.

Asked to elaborate, Mrs. Eby said she had heard from both Paulsen , who also ran in 1968, and Spiro Agnew, who is rumored to be planning to dump Nixon. However, Mrs. Eby did not yet know with whom she would run because she had not decided which kind of watch she wanted.

Dr. Willey hands out newest ruling

Dean Willey, this morning released a statement of CIV rule changes.

The basic objective of CIV, to expose students to ideas outside of their major without the pressure of grades, is maintained. Because CIV is worth academic credit, credit will now be worth CIVs. In other words, if a student has undertaken and passed courses outside his or her major but not included in the core curriculum, those courses can be counted as credit in place of CIV credit. The ratio will be 3 courses to 30 CIVs (one CIV credit).

This new policy is retroactive to the beginning of the Community Issues and Values program. As a result, some of the 84 people who are lacking only CIV credits to graduate will be receiving diplomas in the mail shortly.

Potters seize Band Room

Seven art majors liberated the band room for use as a ceramics studio sometime before dawn today.

Armed with a manifesto which stated that the band could just as easily practice in the music hall and store their uniforms and instruments in lockers which could be built in the present drawing room, the group vowed to hold their ground at least until the end of the term.

The art majors who have dubbed themselves the "Brazen Bunse Bravadoes" stocked the room with an eight weeks supply of food and beverage, two kick wheels, three hundred pounds of clay, a TV, and in case the electricity is cut off, some of Mother Greer's homemade candles.

The militancy of the potters shocked members of the faculty who for years believed that the budding dilettantes were content wallowing in their mud in the pig pen (present ceramics studio). No official statements were released prior to presstime, except a denial by Mr. Bunse of any foreknowledge of the event.

Speculators believe that the takeover may have been triggered by an announcement of campus improvements. These included a memorial plaque on the site of Baldwin Hall, and an outside stairway to the theatre roof for all who want to enjoy the view. No mention of any change in pot-making facilities, was made however.

Student reaction to the news was varied. Some felt that use of the band room for a ceramics studio would solve the problem of dirt being tracked all over the Fine Arts Center, while others could only comment that only a bunch of weirds would try to pull something like this off.

MARYVILLE COLLEGE

VOL. LVI | MARYVILLE, TENNESSEE 37801, | APRIL 9, 1971 | Number 21

FORENSIC TROPHY RECIPIENT - Success at Evansville, Indiana is not a first for Stuart Smith. Here he is congratulated by Mrs. Lucy H. Proffitt for a former debate triumph.

Faculty Member Proposes Student-Oriented Interdisciplinary System

Dr. David P. Young, Associate Professor and Chairman of the Chemistry Department, has been on leave of absence for the purpose of advanced study this academic year at Cornell University. He returned last weekend to speak to a conference of high-school guidance counselors on campus about "A New World in the Morning." Student and faculty friends were anxious to talk with him and he ended up spending his "vacation" talking with and persuading students and faculty that he has come to experience some new insights concerning education.

He has concluded that the professor must meet the student where the student is rather than the student meeting him. The latter has been the case far too often in the past and the time has come he says for a re-apportionment of the educational system in college.

Instead of the classroom being a place where the professor orally declaims knowledge and then expects the student to discern as to how the information relates to him and Life, it should be an atmosphere where, through candidness, the professor stimulates the student to take hold of the information relative to himself and then to reconcile or reject either the information or his former position. Of course, this involves value judgments as well as a thorough comprehension of both the facts of a particular discipline as well as the overall disciplines of life itself.

The confrontation must be made in the beginning. The professor must discover who the student is (impossible without a reacting, conversing student), and, once found, the student must question. The questioning, responding and relating to position are indispensible. The contact must be made by the professor and the direction of the contact must be determined and maintained by mutual growth in understanding. No longer will a professor teach Chemistry; he must teach Life.

Quartet to Perform Next Friday

The Maryville College Performing Artists Concerts will present the Kull-Marable-Schoen Quartet Friday, April 16 at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall of the Fine Arts Center.

The quartet is made up of Barbara Marable, violin; Lee Kull, viola; James Marable, cello; and Sallie Schoen, piano. They will be assisted by Ernest Szugyi, bass.

The program will include Mozart's Quartet No. 2 in E-flat Major, Martinu's First Piano Quartet (1942), and Schubert's Quintet in A Major, Op. 114 ("Trout").

Mr. and Mrs. James Marable are well-knwn members of the greater Knoxville musical community. Barbara Marable received her B.Mus. Ed. from the University of Denver and is presently a private violin teacher and is associated with the Suzuki program at the University of Tennessee. Mr. Marable received the Bach. of Science degree from the University of Colorado and his Ph. D. in theoretical physics from the University of Tennessee. He is a research scientist at the Oak Ridge National Lab and assistant conductor of the Oak Ridge Symphony.

Lee Kull, assistant professor of music at Maryville College, received his B. Mus. degree from the University of Texas and his M. Music degree from the University of Houston. He is principal violist of the Knoxville Symphony and artist-teacher of the Taos School of Music, Taos, New Mexico.

Sallie Schoen, also assistant professor of music at Maryville College, holds a B. Mus. degree from Oberlin Conservatory in Ohio, a M. Mus. degree from Indiana University, and a performer's certificate from the Mozarteum in Salzburg, Austria. She has completed additional study with Menahem Pressler at Indiana University toward the degree of Doctor of Music in piano performance.

Ernest Szugyi holds the position of principal bass viol with the Nashville Symphony and is on the faculty of the Blair Academy of Music in Nashville.

Admission is $2 for adults and $1 for students.

Credit cards are changing

In a speech to Maryville Optimists Tuesday, Bank of Maryville President William C. Adams described credit cards as the beginning of a changing payment system.

Adams, who also serves as president of the Tennessee Bankers' Association, said in the future most stores will employ a computer center and that the credit card will transfer money from the buyers' account to that of the store.

Most objections to credit cards, he said, are their high interest rate and tha fact that low income groups are hurt by their use. In his speech, Adams said that 1970 was a unique year in that the flow of money in this country and throughout the world was affected more than at any other time in history by interest rates.

Religious Service to Celebrate the Glory of Easter

Maryville College is planning three Easter weekend services to which the community is cordially invited. At 9:20 a.m. a Good Friday service will be held in Wilson Chapel as part of the Community Issues and Values program. At 6:09 a.m. Sunday the traditional Easter sunrise service will be held in the amphitheatre in the College Woods, and at 6 p.m. Sunday a vesper communion service will be held in the Fine Arts Center Amphitheatre.

The service Friday morning will be conducted by the Religious Life and Activities Committee in Wilson Chapel. It will be a Reader's Theatre presentation of the Biblical story of the crucifixion.

Mark Mertz, senior from Maryville, will be the narrator for the dramatic presentation. Harry Robertshaw, junior from Holden, Massachusetts, will read the part of Christ, and Stuart Smith, senior from Maryville, will portray Pontious Pilate.

The Maryville College Choir will sing, and Dr. James A. Bloy will be at the organ.

At the Easter sunrise service the meditation, "The Sun and the Son," will be given by President Joseph J. Copeland. He will be assisted by the Rev. Richard Harrison, college chaplain. The College Choir will sing and the full College Band will accompany them in the mass from La Fiesta Mexicana by Reed. The brass choir of the band will herald the coming of sunrise and the coming of the choir to the amphitheatre stage.

The vesper communion service will include informal singing and will move inside in case of rain.

The community is invited to worship at all three of these services.

Scot's Successful at Oral Interp

Stuart Smith walked away with second place at the National Invitational Oral Interpretation Marathon at Evansville University, Evansville, Indiana, April 2 and 3.

Stuart progressed up through 5 preliminary events and then entered the semi-finals and final rounds where he lost by a slim margin to a student from the University of Michigan.

Mark Mertz and Sue Drees ranked in the top ten. At the end of the five preliminary events Mark ranked fifth in the Marathon in number of total points accumulated.

All the participants in the Marathon performed material which ranged from Greek Tragedy to great American speeches; short stories from the macabre, Restoration comedy, original poetry, and American folk ballads. In the final round Stuart performed works from J. R. R. Tolkien.

PREPARING FOR CONCERT - Shown in the final stages of readiness before their concert next Friday evening, April 16, are Barbara Marable, violin, Lee Kull, viola, James Marable, cello, and Sallie Schoen, piano, assisted by Earnest Szugyi, bass. The concert will begin at 8:15 p.m. in the Music Hall and will charge no admission.

Editorial:

The Blessed Joys of Eastertide

Easter joys are in giving of ourselves to others in their interest rather than in our own. As we become a part of the mass of Eastertide celebrants selecting small gifts for our loved ones, friends, and neighbors, let us choose gifts that express our concern for and understanding of them. Let us hope that our offerings regardless of cost, embrace each with an abudance of love and joy. More importantly, may we impart to others less fortunate in spirit than ourselves, an understanding smile from the heart, forgiveness where there was once suspicion, and faith where there was once despair.

Easter joys exist in the memories of people unified in purpose and spirit and in the material representations of these unities -- the fragrance of Springtime greenery, the returning home of loved ones, the open latch, the scent of good things baking, Easter eggs hidden in the grass, children's laughter filled with expectation of the Easter Bunny's basket overflowing with chocolate rabbits and multi-colored jelly beans, the jubillant refrain of church-goers on Easter morn, and most of all, the representative pictures of families gathered around the dining room tables, eating the Easter dinner.

Easter joys are in the blessings that have persisted for two thousand years when first the angels brought the glad tidings of Christ's victory over Death. Each Easter season we lift the veil of centuries to gaze with humbleness at the figure of Christ upon the cross who has served to draw mankind even more closely together. Each Easter we say a prayer of hope that the promise of two thousand years ago is still enshrined in our hearts and will continue to allow us to be instruments of peace that will live through life's eternity.

Initiative for Cogitation:

Cigarette Butts

By Phillip J. Gibson

Spring is here! Birds are singing! Go out of doors and enjoy nature. Explore the campus, and make sure to pay a visit to our newest buildings, especially Dorm III. Even though you have to kick aside assorted Trop-i-cal-lo bottles, disgorged hard-boiled eggs, toilet paper blobs, mutilated milk cartons, and mountains of cigarette butts and other assorted unidentifiable rubbish, a visit to Dorm III can be the chance of a lifetime. Come to think of it, in walking to the door of Dorm III, you may be taking your life into your hands.

All kidding aside, the problem of discarded luxuries is becoming acute on campus, particularly around dorm balconies. Not only personally disgusting to me and other campus residents, it's destroying the ground (and incidentally it makes walking rather difficult). I know that by and large people already regard these new buildings as totally repulsive; and these basically ugly structures are being further demeaned with a light snow of unusables.

Some interested parties on campus are doing their utmost to make litter-stuffing fashionable and alluring – hoping to appeal to your aesthetic appetite; maybe dragons or beer cans or stars and stripes or zagnuts! The college waste-barrel is quickly becoming the most unique and refreshing man-made attraction on campus. Thanks to a few swabs of a paintbrush and some painstaking attention to detail and relevancy, the Maryville College trash cans may prove to be the biggest attention-getters since the "New Curriculum."

Perhaps the most we can hope for is that people will be more appreciative and more eager to employ the new chic wastebaskets than they were about the "New Curriculum." Let us hope that when the trash is emptied, the College employees will not completely mutilate the baskets artistic appeal. I hope that people, once attracted, will use them to their fullest capacity and not continue to contribute to the mountains of discards lying around dorm balconies.

Bows and Arrows:

An Easter Tragedy?

By Debra J. Branch

What are you thinking about as Easter draws near? Last year there was an article in the Echo about someone who had smeared out the artificiality of Easter by covering a white cross with red mud. This Easter, America has a cross to bear that she dare not try to hide bheind any artificial surface.

I wonder what kind of cross Lt. Calley will bear this Easter? And all our boys and men in Vietnam? What sort of artificiality has made society blind enough to condemn a man for what he is forced to do? What sort of artificiality conceivably exists on our own campus?

It is time for more than hope to resurrect this Easter. Think about life imprisonment or a death sentence this Sunday when there is no hope for the return of many soldiers from their graves in Vietnam.

Letter to the Editor

In all the controversy over finances, especially the cost of new buildings, and rise in tuition, little attention is given to a situation in which we cheat ourselves. The theft of books from the library has been on the rise during 1971. Time is lost and tempers grow short when someone tracks down a book or article that could be of use to him, only to discover the theft or mutiliation of the material. Particularly maddening is the theft of a volume in an encyclopedia or set of reference books. An incomplete set of the International Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences is of use to no one. It is often difficult to replace one volume in such a set.

Instead of adding material to the library, funds must be used to replace stolen material. Red tape makes ordering books a long and complicated process. The number of books needed must be cut to meet the budget, then ordered. Months elapse before essential material is back on the shelves. In addition to the price of the book, the ordering and processing may cost up to $10.

The growing problem f theft leads to a re-evaluation of our open stacks system. An open stacks system gives the most freedom to the student and requires less personnel. The ACC committee on Learning Resources has found that stationing a guard at the door during library hours would be financially unfeasible. Another alternative is closed stacks. This system would be a strain on the library staff and would severely limit the freedom of the student. In order to even look at a table of contents or index of a book, one would have to fill out a call slip and wait until one of the library staff finds it. U-T's grad library is a good example of such a system. And as a last resort there is the honor system. We can solve this problem by realizing that we are the root of this problem and the solution is in our hands.

Dr. Mary S. Calderone, M. D.

SIECUS Director to Address Community

The Maryville College Community is honored to have Dr. Mary Calderone, Director of the Sex Information and Education Council of the United States (SIECUS) as speaker for the CIV convocation on Wednesday, April 14, 1971. Her visit to Maryville will concern itself with problems college students face when confronted with their own sexuality. For students and faculty interested in conversation, Dr. Calderone will stay at Lloyd Residence and will hold various informal meetings as well as attending some classes.

Dr. Calderone's visit will be under the supervision of the psychology department, and will arrive in the afternoon or evening of the 13th and will leave on April 15th.

In keeping with Dr. Calderone's wish that her visit to MC be more than a single, simple speech, the college has planned a FOCUS program interview, has issued invitations to over 200 area educators and counselors for the CIV convocation, and has hoped that MC students will take the initiative in both discussing and doing. Dr. Calderon wants to establish how human sexuality should be taught at the college level in connection with the community level, and Maryville College students are going to have the opportunity to make it happen.

Included among Dr. Calderone's myriad activities and honors are: Former Medical Director of Planned Parenthood Federation of America, 1953-64; Board of Directors, American Association for World Health Organization, Inc., and U. S. Committee for W.H.O.; authorship of "Release from Sexual Tensions," and several contributions to professional journals and popular magazines on family planning and sex education.

STUDENT APATHY

By Steven M. Maggio

Apathy, a big problem in the social life here at Maryville College, is likewise a big problem in Athletics. The majority of our students simply do not care about their teams, and this is shown by the attendance at all the games. Football has so far drawn the greatest number of students; yet this includes little more than half the college community. It is true that our teams do not play in the Big Ten, but we are a small college capable of defeating the best teams in our league.

Maryville, being the small school that it is, engenders athletic apathy. This being the case, we as a small community should strive to change it. Our closeness should make us a more tightly knit community and we should display more school spirit than many larger colleges. The average high school enrollment is 1,000 students, and it is evident that many of these high schools have fantastic school spirit. This proves that it is up to us as students to do something about our apathy towards our athletic teams.

Many of our athletes are shocked at how little support they really receive from their fellow students. This has a great deal to do with the past success of our teams. The most recent example is the attendance at the Red and White Game two weeks ago. The players themselves were dismayed at the small number of people who came to watch the game, and this has caused many players to anticipate the skimpy support they will get next year.

I would like to state that this editorial is not only related to football, but concerned with all the sports. The players are continually asking why the student body is not backing them. When one of our teams plays a game, it is representing our college. And as such, we should at least support them. I definitely believe that this problem should be looked into very carefully. Maryville College will most certainly need an active Pep Club and a lot of support from each student. Remember that one of the teams out there is our team, and the least we can do is to show our best spirit and pride in them.

It took almost 20 years to build Georgia's Fort Pulaski, which is now a National Monument.

Rehearsals Underway for MC's Most Challanging Production to Date

Rehearsals are now underway for "The Night Thoreau Spent In Jail" - the final Maryville College Playhouse presentation of the 1970-71 school year. The cast, consisting of some twenty-odd individuals, is comprised of members from each class and appears to be a good representation of local theatrical talent.

Evident in the casting of the production is Director Thomas E. Jones' desire to involve more individuals in this production who were formerly not associated with Maryville College theater and based upon initial observations, it is apparent that he has made careful character assignments.

Chosen to play the leading role of Henry David Thoreau is Phillip Gibson. Portraying Thoreau's friend, Ralph Waldo Emmerson, is Mark Stoub, with Leanne Moore playing Ellen, the girl with whom Henry falls in love. The role of Bailey, Thoreau's prison mate, is assumed by Walter Barker with Deacon Nehemiah Ball portrayed by Howard Welsh. Thoreau's mother is played by Nancy McCleary and his brother John is enacted by Lloyd Kramer. The cast is rounded out by a number of persons who portray the townspeople and who will assume individual characterizations.

"The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail" will be presented in the College Theatre on the evenings of May 7th and 8th, 1971. Tickets to the production will become available some time near the end of this month and will go on sale in the College Printing Office. Performance time on the respective evenings is 8:15 p.m.

Financial Appropriation and Visitation Discussed at Town Hall Meeting

Doug Cox opened last Wednesday's (3-31-71) Town Hall Meeting by reading the approved suggestions of the Community Standards and Residential Life Committee on visitation. Scott Thompson then questioned whether or not there was any real problem with visitation. Since the issue seemed to center on the lack of adherence to the procedures of signing in and escorting guests to rooms, Carol Newell suggested that these regulations be changed, and Robert Wertime added that unescorted visitors were in reality not offensive. Linna Schotter and others present stressed student ability to successfully carry out visitation without such procedures as the registration of guests. Coed and/or open dorms were again suggested as solutions to the problem.

Another student suggested that signing in be dropped in boy's dorms, but this suggestion was greeted as being discriminatory.

Carey Cox and Robert Wertime felt that the segregation of Freshman was likewise a discrimination without justifying benefits. Ruth Houheshel pointed out that, although she favors the integration of Freshmen and upperclassmen, it would make the proposed orientation to visitation extremely difficult.

When Dr. Copeland volunteered to answer any questions on the college's financial operation, Carol Newell requested a specific break-down of the room and board fee and details on the manner in which the dining hall budget is established. The president reviewed the designation of the fees (e.g. room fee goes towards paying off the forty-year loan on the new dorms, tuition money is used for academic purposes.) and stressed that student money was not used in the construction of non-residential buildings and was insufficient to cover academic expenses.

Lynn Mitchell asked why tuition would be raised by $200 next fall. Dr. Copeland replied that it was necessitated by inflation although Maryville did try to keep costs down. Linda Cox and Robert Wertime agreed with the president's opinion that Maryville students receive a high-quality education at a comparitvely low price.

Someone that inquired about the will of the late Dr. Kittrell, who left an estate of $350,000 to the college. Although Dr. Kittrell did not approve of much that had come to pass here during the last decade, she believed in the college enough to leave everything to it in the hope it would be put to use to create academic scholarships.

The mention of scholarships raised a lively discussion about the alleged preferential treatment of athletes in financial aid as well as in the classroom. Although only the Honaker Academic Scholarship is specifically for athletes, a number of students felt that a disproportionate number of athletes were receiving aid in the form of Leadership grants. Scott Thompson, a recipient of a Leadership Grant who is not involved in varsity sports reminded the group that last year Dusty Miller presented the ACC with a paper concerning the distribution of the grants. It has yet to be discussed.

Richard McVay felt that emphasizing sports by recruiting athletes and awarding them financial aid ran contrary to the purpose of this school and was unfair to the rest of the students. He believed that an athlete program should be maintained by students who are primarily interested in learning, but who enjoy athletic competition. Bob Eickelberg said that the public relations value of an active sports program and the training time spent by the athletes justified the scholarships.

A number of students still remaining in the theatre nearly an hour and a half after the meeting commenced, protested the alleged preferential treatment which allowed athletes to remain in school in cases where other students would be forced to drop out. Dr. Arda Walker pointed out that the vast majority of these stories were based on hearsay or on appearances and could not be substantiated. Students retorted that they had heard the athletes themselves brag of such treatment and were quite aware of the frustrating fact that these stories could not be proven to the administration. Dean of Men Don Elia was implicated several times in helping athletes with poor academic records remain in school.

Playhouse Sponsors First-Run Film Tonight

The Playhouse will present the second of the Janus Concert Society's 1970-71 season films, Marco Bellocchio's "Fists in the Pocket." Tonight at 8 p.m. in the theater, the first of this series was Ingmar Bergman's "The Ritual" screened earlier this year by the playhouse.

Friday night's film concert consists of three short subjects by various European directors, setting the mood for "Fists." The program begins with "Worek" a study in visually-appealing stop-motion photography which gives the viewer an allegory on greed. Next is "Striptease," a one-minute anti-commercial. Concluding the short subjects is "Ceremony," a vignette in which six people are grouped in front of a wall as if posing for a photograph. The entire ceremony is supervised by a seventh person, who is supposed to be a photographer. He looks at the group from different angles and re-arranges them by hand signals.

"Fists in the Pocket" is a statement of the Italian and world middle class, through a close-up on the sickness of one particular family. It "... depicts their decadence in terms of exterior illness. Instead of neuroses, hostilities, alienation or incestuous yearnings, we see deformity, mental retardation, epilepsy, matricide, fratricide, blindness and actual incest between brother and sister." (Joseph Morgenstern in Newsweek).

Bellocchio manages to make all this decadence entirely believable through magnificent performances by his actors even though they are playing perhaps the most difficult and unreal of parts seen on the screen. The touch of Bellocchio is so uncommonly delicate that you emerge from the theater stunned but exhilerated."

"Fists in the Pocket" forces us to identify with the middle son of the family. "He can be either sweet or demonic, for he is the alienated young man who faces his contricting environment with his fists not up but' in his pocket.' " (Maurice Rapf in Life).

Language grant given instructor at Hiwassee

Durwood C. Dunn, instructor in political science and American history at Hiwassee College, Madisonville, has been chosen to receive a grant totaling $1,250 to study in an intensive language training program this summer at Columbia University's East Asian Institute.

Dunn, a native of Townsend, received his B.A. and M.A. degrees in history from U-T where he was a Woodrow Wilson Fellow and a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Only eight awards are granted each year by the American East Asian Relations Committee of the American Historical Association to receive awards. It is highly competitive and only first-rate scholars, who are either undergraduates or graduate students not beyond the second year level, enrolled in American history or in East Asian Studies are considered.

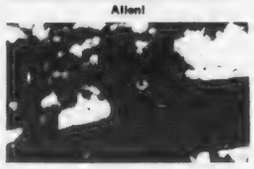
The purpose of the program is to further the study of American East Asian Relations and pertains to scholars who will become specialists.

An author, Dunn is currently writing a book on the history of the Cades Cove area of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. The book; tentatively entitled "The Oliver History of Cades Cove," covers the period from 1818, when John Oliver, the first permanent white settler, first entered the cove, to the 1930's when this area was taken over by the National Park Service.

Christmas seal fund record set

Blount Countians contributed $7,237 to the 1970 Christmas Seal Campaign, an increase of $1,863 over the previous year.

These unofficial figures were released by Richard Cochran, director of fund raising of Tennessee TB and Respiratory Disease Association.



Cochran also reported that $432,000, a new high for the association, was raised during the Christmas Seal campaign in 1970. He added that the increased donations would strengthen the public health education and professional education activities of the organization.

Respiratory health needs are increasing and are being acted upon, the director said.

Town Meets Gown

Receiving an impetus from members of the surrounding community, the ACC is sponsoring a series of conversations between a distinguished member of the community and a selected cross-section of about twenty MC students. On Monday, April 5, the first in the "Meet the Establishment" series featured Mr. Tutt S. Bradford, publisher of the Maryville-Alcoa Daily Times, as the Establishment. After three prepared questions and answers centering around Mr. Bradford's personal field of endeavor, the floor was thrown open for discussion.

When asked about the problem between the town and the gown, Mr. Bradford replied that the major reason for mistrust is that the town, as a whole, is not as interested in rapid change as it thinks college students are. He believes, however, that people are beginning to come around in their understanding a little more than in years past.

In reply to the statement that the suburban newspaper is on the way out, Mr. Bradford illustrated with valid statistics that the Times, has been growing tremendously over the last 15 years, both economically and statistically.

Mr. Bradford's opinion regarding recent criticism of the press was that a writer, regardless of what he writes, is bound to step on some toes. He cannot be non-committal and still give an accurate report of the news. Bradford added that the most distasteful part of the press controversy is that it is always the incumbent party that receives the bulk of the criticism and it is usually that party which manages to accuse the press most vehemently.

Other topics of discussion included the recent conviction of Lt. Calley, Mrs. Madelyn Murray O'Hair's visit to MC last year, and the war in Indochina, which Mr. Bradford has been opposed to ever since the fall of the Diem regime.

Next Monday's Establishment representative will be Mr. Roy J. Fisher, director of ALCOA's Tennessee Operations in Alcoa.

Vol. 56 MARYVILLE COLLEGE, MARYVILLE, TENNESSEE, APRIL 16, 1971 No. 22

1971 - 72 ACC ELECTED

SYNDICATED COLUMIST TO APPEAR IN ECHO

Minneapolis, April 16 (Special to the Echo)--Beginning with the April 16 issue, the HIGHLAND ECHO is introducing a nationally-syndicated column. "It's the Right Time" is being written for the ECHO by Rick Mitz, a four-year staff columnist for the University of Minnesota Daily.

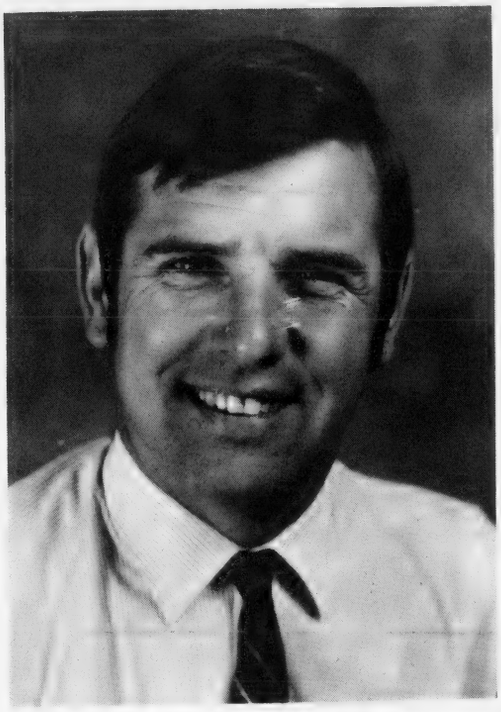
"It's the Right Time" seeks to deal with trends, directions, and philosophies affecting the current generation of students.

At the present time some three hundred college papers in thirty-four states have become regular subscribers to the column in addition to the ECHO. The colleges these papers represent, range in size from seminaries of less than a hundred students to major universities.

A senior at the University of Minnesota, Rick Mitz comes from what he terms "a sickenly affluent suburb" in Milwaukee. After being involved in student government for a year at Minnesota, Mitz became a writer and editor for the Minnesota Daily.

"I don't know how to write," he replies when asked how he manages, once a week, to turn out columns. "I mean--well, I get an idea and then I let it sit there in my head for a while--anywhere from an hour to, to forever. And then just before the deadline I try to write it and usually can't, but I do anyway. Or I don't."

Mitz describes himself as the "typical-normal-average-token-student." "I please everyone," he says. "My hair's just the right length. My grades are okay. I'm fairly productive. I use deodorant, mouthwash, all the leading brands--the whole bit. Radicals think I'm 'Right On', conservatives think I'm okay, old ladies think I'm cute, policemen think I'm a credit.



Mitz's columns have great variety in both tone and subject matter. Future topics include such areas of interest as curriculum of experimental colleges, student evaluation, coed dormitories, and alumni associations.

"The Flute" CIV Film

"The Flute and the Arrow" will be presented at CIV April 21, 1971, at both 9:20 a.m. and 7:00 p.m.

Directed, written, and photographed by Arne Scuksdorff, the film depicts life among the Muria and Gonda tribesmen in a jungle area in central India, presenting a study of their daily life, work, play, fears, pleasures, and religious practices.

Music is by Ravi Shankar.

Andrew L. Miles, new assistant director of the Environmental Education Center at Tremont and Instructor in Education.

SEX IN THE SCHOOLS

As a follow up to Dr. Mary Calderone's visit, the Student National Education Association will present a film entitled "The Three R's, and Sex Education." The film demonstrates this controversial topic of sex being taught in the schools. It is geared to the future parents in our community and to the prospective teachers.

Three showings will be presented in the theatre on Tuesday, April 20th at 4:00 P.M. and 7:00 P.M., and also on Thursday, April 22nd at 7:00 P.M. No admission will be charged to the college or to the Maryville community for this 50 minute film.

KITTRELL BEQUEATHS SCHOLARSHIP FUND

Dr. Beulah M. Kittrell in a beautiful hand written will left an estate valued at approximately $350,000.00 to Maryville College. Dr. Kittrell who lived in Louisville died March 6, 1971 as a result of an automobile accident. Aççording to the Maryville-Alcoa Daily Times she directed in her will that the money should be used for scholarships for students rather than buildings. She felt the scholarships should be given to deserving and needy students. "Allocation is to be on the basis of integrity and dependibility rather than on competitive scholarship, remembering always the conscientious average student usually succeeds."

Part of the reason that Dr. Kittrell left her estate to the school was because she felt MC had been responsible for her father entering medical school, which in turn influenced her towards a medical career, and she felt that her will "made a partial settlement of the Kittrell family debt to the college and county."

Although Dr. Kittrell went

NEW FACULTY

Dr. Malcolm M. Willey, Academic Executive Officer of Maryville College, has announced the appointment of Andrew L. Miles to the College's education faculty. Mr. Miles will serve as assistant director of the Maryville College Environmental Education Center at Tremont and instructor in education.

A resident of Maryville, Mr. Miles attended Purdue University in forestry and received the B.S. degree in elementary education from East Tennessee State University. He is presently completing study toward the M. S. degree in elementary guidance at the University of Tennessee, which he will receive in August of this year.

Mr. Miles has experience in business and teaching. From 1964-68 and from 1969 to the present he has taught in the Alcoa City Schools.

He and his wife Patricia live at 103 Lincoln Circle.

Copeland Comments On Council

Participation and flexibility. These are the hopes of Dr. Joseph J. Copeland on the future of the newly elected All-College Council as stated in an interview with ECHO editor, John Powell.

Dr. Copeland emphasized participation and flexibility as traits leading to fulfillment of the concept of community through the new ACC's leadership.

"I feel keenly that the new thrust of greater participation has moved the community to greater flexibility," said Dr. Copeland.

Dr. Copeland sees the new flexibility present in several areas of college life. In the academic sphere, the independent major, delayed sequence of core courses, and credit for reading were cited as part of the ACC's move to flexibility.

With the great change in needs that has occurred in the last few years, Dr. Copeland feels that the solution to many unsolved problems of the community lies in participation, although such participation involves much time and energy.

"The reality of what we have really learned from our experience with the All-College Council is that participatory goverance involving a much larger number of people is definitely in keeping with our conviction about learning; that is, we learn by doing," Dr. Copeland stressed.

Through involvement and participation as in the recent ACC elections, Dr. Copeland feels that Maryville College has experienced some of the realities of community.

Commenting on the directions and goals of the new Council, Dr. Copeland again emphasized flexibility. "We must understand the new structures and be patient until the ideal of community is satisfied. We must devise new ways to overcome problems," he stated. The best use of time and energy of participants was cited by Dr. Copeland as an example of flexibility.

While past Councils have occasionally bogged down in dealing with immediate problems, Dr. Copeland hopes that this council will be able to obtain the goal of discussion of long-range planning. "We've been so consumed by the immediates, that we haven't spent enough time on long range planning. This year's council, however, got out of the way a goodly number of these decisions. Currently, we are in the first stages of the self-study required by the Southern Association."

Change is an important part of the ACC's longterm plans, Dr. Copeland feels. While holding on to basic policies as Maryville's status as a private, liberal-arts college, Dr. Copeland feels that with a flexible structure as the ACC, change is an essential part of MC's operation.

Stressing the changes in the last four years as opposed to the lack of change in the preceding fifteen, Dr. Copeland stressed: "Now we have a structure which permits change. For example, the Board has restructured itself to consider ACC proposals and to assume the terrific burden and responsibility of finding financial reserves."

Five and ten year plans have been instituted to ensure the College's continuing existence said Dr. Copeland. Through such planning in the Board and the ACC crucial financial necessities may be met.

Commenting on the problems preventing the realization of Thursday, April 8, 1971, marked the election of the fourth All-College Council. With an average turnout at the polls, Mr. Lastar, Recruiter, was elected from the staff. Mr. Brahams, Administrative Assistant; Mr. Elia, Dean of Men; Miss Lightfoot, Registrar; were elected from the administration. From the faculty in the five year group, Dr. Stine was elected. Dr. Swenson and Mr. Ramger were selected from the six to fifteen year group. Chosen from the over fifteen year group were Dr. Bloy and Mr. Bushing.

IDEALISM

Idealism is a curious thing. Like the platitude about hope, it always seems to spring eternal. Perhaps its latest manifestation is the March on Washington.

For ten years, idealists have employed similar methods of seeking an end to the Indo-China War. Their hope lay in penetrating the envelope of self-righteousness in which the national leadership has sealed itself. For ten years, they have failed. You might think that such idealism would have its limits. Don't idealists ever stumble into the snares of cynicism or apathy? Apparently, many do. However, the Americans, who march on Washington on April 24, haven't.

You might reason that they would see the futility of their struggle. A general public, lost in a maze of self-deception, is not interested in them. Political opportunists, in the role of national leaders thriving on the apathy, self-deceit, and self-deception of middle America, ignore them. Society's tools of enforcement, brutalized by militarism, harass and vent their tender mercies on idealists. You would think they would learn not to protest.

After ten years, times are beginning to change. Following the Calley case, many Americans threw off their self-deception as witnessed by the end-the-war resolutions in state legislatures and the resignations of several draft boards.

After ten years, Americans are just beginning to realize that the Indo-China War is not just a partisan political issue, but a truly national tragedy that transcends partisan politics. Today, some Republicans no longer kow-tow to self-deceived leaders out of party loyalty. They are realizing that the tragic wound that Indo-China has made in American society cannot be healed by continuing to aggravate it through current politics. It is the idealist's dream of an America at peace that has planted this realization.

For ten years, idealism in America has lain smouldering beneath a damper of apathy, self-deceit, and self-deception. Perhaps it is time to remove the damper and let idealism assert itself once more. Perhaps it is time to march on Washington.

Summer School Seeks Students

Students who wish to make up course deficiencies or accelerate their academic programs are reminded of the MC Summer Session.

The summer term is designed to be of value to students with widely varying needs. Full college credit of the equivalent of three semester hours may be earned in one three-week term. Students take one subject at a time.

In a recent survey of summer school students, 92 1/2% of those responding indicated that the MC summer term was "about the same as" or "more satisfactory" than the regular ten-week term. "More satisfactory" was the choice of 70%.

Fine Arts is particularly stressed. The summer term includes a total of twelve courses in this area. Included are three in speech, four in music, five in art.

The fees for courses taught on-campus are the following:

Tuition: $112.50 per three-week term.

Room and Board: $75 per three-week term.

Group Insurance: $5 per term.

Linen Service: $5 per term.

Courses taught at the Maryville College Environmental Education Center at Tremont and at the Field Biology Teaching and Research Center, Norris Lake, Tennessee, have special all-inclusive fees which include tuition, room and board as follows: Biology 310d, 310e, 310f -- $219.50; Biology 310b (4 weeks)--$350.00.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

It has suddenly become apparent that for the students, membership on the All-College-Council means little or nothing. It was rumored that only 19 people were present for the sophomore class nominations meeting and only 40 or so for the freshman class. Even the junior class meeting had little more than 50 present.

Suddenly there is nothing meaningful to the act of participating in the management of the college's affairs. Is this because more students are listening to those students on the council previously who relate the frustration involved in sitting on a puppet panel? Perhaps the possibility of being on the college's most responsible committee and using the prescribed time to discuss matters like "Dogs in the Dining Hall" is a little less appealing than certain administrative members would think that it may be. When some of our student body's most responsible individuals find their studies more important than wasting time on the "President's Cabinet" then I would imagine that it is about time for a serious re-evaluation of the role and purpose of our council. It was originally designed as a two year program subject to review and revision but that matter seems to have been conveniently forgotten as the council becomes more and more a rubber stamp for administrative decisions reaching their peaks in the president's office.

I'm in favor of having that much needed review and revision soon or just leaving it as it, but then the name All-College-Council should be altered to exhibit the true nature of this panel. Don't you think that it's about time we stopped fooling ourselves?

EARTH WEEK

April 22, 1970, marked the first nationwide observance of Earth Day.

Wisconsin Senator Gaylord Nelson and California Congressman Paul McCloskey, Jr. have introduced a Congressional resolution designating the third week of April as "Earth Week." The National Governors' Conference has unanimously adopted a resolution recommending that each Governor proclaim the third week in April "Earth Week" in his state.

On Earth Day last year some 2,000 communities, 10,000 elementary and high schools, and 2,000 college campuses took time out to seek ways they could clean up that part of the country they call home.

Preserving our environment through the wise use of our natural resources will not happen because of an Earth Day, Week or Year; it is a full time, round-the-clock job. But a special commemorative week can be extremely valuable as the focal point for the year's activities; a goal the public can focus upon; and therefore important.

You can help by writing your governor and urging him to declare April 19-25 as Earth Week in your state. And then hook up with the activities planned for your area; if there are none planned, you've got a job.

"I DON'T BELIEVE"

Perhaps it is because of the presence on campus of the candidates for the position of the Dean that the failures of Maryville College in general and the All-College Council specifically have become so visible in some minds. In conversation with these men, who for the most part quickly grasped our problems, two frightening and significant comments kept surfacing in one form or another. The first is that Maryville seems to have no sense of what it wants to do, what it wants to be. The second is that there are glaring contradictions in the school, in its programs and curriculum, in its purpose and practice as a result of this non-direction.

The position of the ACC has always been a nebulous one, but it seems that if any discussion about the future and direction of the college is to take place, then this would be an ideal setting. Instead, the council has hardly deliberated on matters of great import. The better part of three meetings have been spent on visitation. One time, twenty munutes was devoted to our "canine problem." The matters of substance that should be weighed are missing. We have truly missed the boat.

The student body of this college is by and large unconcerned with any important matters. Students over the years have rolled around "bread and circus" causes. First it was chapel, then alcohol, visitation and now, coed dorms. Until students get fired up about things like curriculum changes and the very future of this institution, then forget the future of the ACC. Students comprise 90% of its constituency and if that constituency is so self-centered as to waste its energy on things like coed dorms then both the college and the ACC are dead for lack of interest.

But it is not all the fault of students. On the other hand the council is not providing any leadership into matters of substance. The members latch onto superficial issues and ride them to death. The agenda of the council is not full of important issues facing this college. This college is in a time of crisis (it is going thousands of dollars into the red this year) and yet to look at the ACC agenda you would hardly know it. The time spent discussing exciting new academic ideas as compared to visitation is shameful. And the man most directly responsible for the agenda is the Chairman, President Copeland. The students may be at fault on one hand but on the other, dynamic leadership has been non-existent.

We have had the ACC elections and some classes had trouble finding people to run. The council doesn't seem to do anything so why be on it? For the students on the council it has been a disappointing and frustrating year. Maybe next year will be better but don't count on it unless two things happen. First, the students start getting concerned about their education, instead of their social life, and second, the council grows up to what it's supposed to be, not some junior high school debating society.

Poetry

And there was rain on the window, and the lamp wasn't on.
The streets were all gray
And the sky had melted,
and run down at the edges.

There was a quietness
hard to describe
and harder to bear.
There was a coldness within,
even dampness was warm.
Words were unknown--
Even tears would not come.

The world was destroyed and I didn't care.

Thoughts ran in patterns
of memories and pain--
Things I regretted,
or more things of pain.

Love was a memory
and hate was there too.
Lives had been met--
then dismembered in turn.

The world was destroyed and I didn't care.

I stood on a plain
Where the sane are not blest,
Where the living are deaf
and the dead will not speak.
My body was cold and damp.
My thoughts, like the house,
were dingy and bare.
My feet were still wet
with mud from the grave.
I was here in this house where God is fake
And love -- Love is the fool's mistake.

"I'm going to college in order to get an education," says the average student upon being asked the big Why. But recently, students have shown--as they complain of dreary days on campus, as they tear down the walls, as they drop out faster than they dropped in--that "getting an education" obviously isn't enough for some. Many students around the country are feeling a desire to plan their own educations and to administer those educations themselves. And they're making that desire a reality.

Student educational dissatisfaction is resounding. In the Higher Education Process it has over and over been found that the medium is tedium. The psychological results are a claustrophic classroom catatonia and educational annihilation, giving university students 'in loco parentis' paranoia and a big pain in the assignment book.

The result of these severe educational dissatisfactions has been the advent of the Experimental College, usually a free-wheeling, do-your-own-thing non-school, dedicated to the proposition rahter than the preposition, by the students as well as for the students, providing that academia is in the mind of the beholder, not in the gradebook of the lecturer.

Experimental Colleges are structured something like this: they aren't. Their educational philosophies change as often as their students grow, and are difficult to describe. If an Experimental College has 96 students, then that college most likely has 96 mini-colleges going on.

That seemingly universal university ennui has shown that--for many students, anyway--there is a drastic need for some sort of educational system that isn't pre-planned for students by Forces Above. And through the many sprouting Experimental Colleges, it has been shown that classroom participation doesn't necessarily have to take place in the classroom; homework doesn't have to take place in a 45-minute period several times a week; education doesn't have to take place within four plaster walls.

Eleanor is a good example of what an Experimental College education can do for a person. Until this academic year, she majored in archaeological anthropology. "My education," she said, "consisted of reading, term-papers, and a lot of slide shows." Last fall, she transferred to Experimental College and got credit for traveling around on various archaeological digs. "There is no reason," she said, "that education can't be fun. I mean, there's a whole world behind those textbooks."

The list of case studies is endless. Rick received credits for traveling to Vietnam. Sue made clothes for a boutique for a semester. Fred studied opera with a music critic. And, not only did all of them learn, they all enjoyed learning.

Many students spend their four years in the student role majoring in learning how not to learn--exiting stage left four years later with black gowns on their bodies, diplomas in their hands, and not much more on their minds than their mortarboards.

Of all parts of the alleged Student Rebellion, disillusionment with education has been the most constructive. Rather than destroying the existing traditional educational systems, student college critics merely have left their almost-Alma Maters and built new ones. Even such reputable, conventionally structured institutions as the Universities of Oregon, Washington, Minnesota and California have branched out with experimental programs.

But Experimental Colleges themselves are not without their problems. Bill Caspary is an educational consultant who spends much of his time traveling around the country examining Experimental Colleges and their problems. As instructor at St. Louis' Washington University, Caspari says that the largest problem of the new schools is a lack of communication and understanding between students and staff members.

"Many students have been disabled by 12 years of conventional education, resulting in a sort of 'culture shock' when they enter an experimental program," he says. The same, he adds, is true for faculty members who have spent many years learning how to teach--but not how to relate to students as people.

Adjustment, Caspari said, is one of the hardest problems. "But," he said, "there are an awful lot of students around who once liberated from the constraints of conventional education, can do marvelous things."

And those "marvelous things" could indeed be anything from working and traveling and--yes--even thinking, to the old standard Basket Weaving joke that finally has become an educational reality.

But, in many ways, experimental education is a frightening experience--the true test of learning, an examination of values that has nothing to do with multiple choice and even less to do with true and false.

Experimental education raises serious questions and proposes difficult challenges. How relevant is your education? Are you learning or merely being educated? Given the freedom to plan your own education, what would you do with it?

Possibly, learning can only begin when the institution of education ends. Experimental college students don't "go to college"--they are their own colleges. And through the advent of these new non-schools, maybe the answer to the big Why will be "I'm not going to college in order to get an education.

How To Really Make A Dent In Pollution

Legislation to bar federal contracts to manufacturers who pollute the environment has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Michigan Congressmen James G. O'Hara and John D. Dingell.

In a joint press release, the legislators declared "It is time that the federal government stopped subsidizing pollution by federal contracts. And it is time that the federal government used the full economic weight of its multi-billion dollar contracts to require firms to stop polluting our air and water and the environment generally."

The Congressmen said a survey of 10 firms charged by the Justice Department with mercury contamination of rivers and lakes in seven states last year indicated that two held federal contracts at the time the charges were filed and three others had held contracts in the past and could be expected to again bid on federal work.

The Congressmen also reported that twenty-two Michigan firms with federal contracts were cited last year by the Michigan Department of Water Resources has having inadequate pollution controls.

The legislation provides:

---that all contractors hired by the federal government to perform work in excess of $10,000 must pledge, as part of the contract, that they will comply with all local, state and federal regulations against environmental pollution and any additional standards or regulations which the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency feels is proper.

---that any federal contractor who breaks his pledge and pollutes must take all corrective measures necessary to clean up the pollution.

---that no payment will be made to the contractor until the EPA determines that the anti-pollution clause has been satisfactorily met.

community through the ACC, Dr. Copeland stressed the impatience as one such problem. "One person can make a decision in far less time than a committee. The selection of a commencement speaker took three times as long, but chances of the speaker being more significant are greater this year," Dr. Copeland stated.

In closing, Dr. Copeland feels that much of the problem of realizing community lies in communication. Too many people think of the council in terms of "they" instead of "we" when they are actually participators themselves, he said.

sharply against some of the feelings of the establishment in her day by becoming one of the first women doctors, she had some strong feelings about current social issues on campus today. She said, "I have disapproved of many things that have taken place at Maryville College the past 10 years. I realize they are caught in this social revolution and that these are changing times. They (the college) have weathered many storms in the past and I'm sure will come through this."

REVIEW: FISTS IN THE POCKET

by Tom Coe

R. D. Laing would have liked "Fists in the Pocket." It is the story of a family whose house is more like an asylum. They are all caught up in dependent, destructive webs. One's madness contributes to another's, but the characters are very much aware of their situation. The most withdrawn of all, Leone, an epileptic idiot, sums up much of the film when he murmurs, "what a torture it is to live in this house." And in a broader sense, director Marco Bellocchio seems to be saying, "what a torture it is to live in the world." We are all in the relationship of destructive dependence. The world is, in R. D. Laing's assessment, mad to its core. We know what nuclear bombs do to people, we know what carbon monoxide does, yet we make only the most feeble attempts to end their threat.

Bellocchio's family destroys one another just as societies do. These people are desperately in need of one another; Alesandro needs his sister Julia in a strange sexual way that is continually only hinted at in the film; Mother, who is blind, needs her children and in these later years she has become an overbearing financial burden; and the family all depends on the eldest, Augusto, the most conventionally sane of the lot. Ale keeps switching his allegiance between Augusto and Julia. He wants to assert himself in the family. At times he wants Augusto to be free of the mad siblings that tie him down and he offers to drive himself and the rest of the family off a cliff. Augusto, hinting at his own desperate mad drive to be free, does nothing to stop his brother. Ale finally settles for pushing his mother off a cliff and drowning his brother Leone in the bathtub. This is Ale's desperate grab for freedom. This is the essential tension in the family; everyone depends on the others, dragging the others down. Each attempts to be free, even at the cost of destroying the others. The burden of dependence is destructive in the first place but the mad dash for freedom is even more so. It is not unlike the story of humanity.

Technically this is a beautiful work of art. The depressing black and white is sometimes even filtered to give it a more unreal feeling. The play here is between the real and unreal. One doesn't know whether to believe what he's seeing or not. The scenery is not beautiful. The Italian Alps are foreboding and dangerous, almost as if evil has risen from the ground to stand as an ever present backdrop. The acting is superb; the insanity is believable, not laughable. The characters are terrifying, but at the same time as the film builds one comes to feel a certain closeness and understanding towards them. Bellocchio's technique too is polished, his cutting is quick and sure; often we find outselves in the middle of the next scene before we realize it. His camera work is fluid and intimate, helping us to climb into this strange situation and suspend our disbelief. The work clearly shows good direction; the timing is precise and the film is without breaks. We are faced with a parable of our time brilliantly brought off in a young director's first film.

Only Yesterday

By Nancy Rankin

The files of the HIGHLAND ECHO bring to light spring concerns which plagued students in seasons past.

Couples, it seems, had to search for entertainment and enlightenment. Easter, 1941, brought all-day dating privileges. The women and faculty had a guided glimpse of the notorious corners of Carnegie as an open house -- the first since 1939 -- gave the chance to see the insides of a men's dorm. The student center closed at 6:30 p.m., but the Capitol Theatre was showing "Go Naked in the World" for the edification of a student body without the insights of visitation.

Athletics fared better than the social life. The 1939 track team defeated both Vanderbilt and U.T. while the baseball team, in turn, defeated U.T. 5-4 in a hair raising ninth inning. 1956's track season was sparse, however. East Tenn. State refused to run on Maryville's poorly conditioned track which the campus work force had neglected due to stacking wood for a new tool shed.

Food, as always, was a controversial ECHO topic. The 1956 co-eds complained of an acute problem: cold, soggy food coupled with Sunday night appetites. Their problem was speedily solved, for by 1961, the HIGHLAND editorial cheerily announced that 99% of the student body favored sack suppers.

1961, a mere decade ago, was a banner year. Pending acceptance, Dr. J. J. Copeland was unanimously elected seventh president by the Board of Directors. The college -- not to become a community until the following term -- awaited his decision with bated breath. Finally, '61 was indeed a year to remember as Kappa Phi/Chi Beta took the intramural sports trophy, triumphing over Sig and Theta who masked their loss by scheduling a guest program speaker from the Chinese mission field.

DERBY DAY DRUNKS

LOUISVILLE, (Special to the ECHO) -- Churchill Downs will continue in force this year a rule prohibiting the bringing of alcoholic beverages onto the track, particularly into the infield.

The rule was invoked in 1968 at the request of lawenforcement officials. It is a violation of Kentucky law to bring such beverages onto licensed premises such as Churchill Downs.

The rule will be enforced at all grandstand and clubhouse gates. Churchill Downs opens its spring meeting April 24 and closes May 22. The Kentucky Derby will be run May 1 at 5 p.m. EDT.

LIBERAL BUSINESS GROUP ANNOUNCES NEW NATIONAL RADIO PROGRAM TO COUNTER-BALANCE RIGHT-WING COMMENTATORS

Ultra-conservative spokesmen on radio are new facing a new kind of competition from a group of well-known moderate-liberal Americans serving as news commentators.

The mainly liberal public officials, businessmen and other public leaders are being presented on a new national radio program by the Businessmen's Educational Fund, expressly for the purpose of counterbalancing the Far Right broadcasts of such men as Melvin Munn (on H. L. Hunt's "Lifeline") and the vociferous Rev. Carl McIntire and such arch-conservative organizations as the American Security Council.

BEF's new radio project was started February 15, as a two-phase experiment in "balanced broadcasting" with Senators William Proxmire of Wisconsin and Fred Harris of Oklahoma, Pulitzer Prize journalist Seymour Hersh, former Senator Eugene McCarthy, Common Cause chief John Gardner, and Bank of America chairman Louis Lundborg among its lead-off guest speakers.

The list of BEF radio commentators also will include author James Ridgeway, Washington Post writer Robert Maynard, women's liberation leaders Lucy Komisar and Dolores Alexander, former Midas International president Gordon Sherman, SATURDAY REVIEW Editor Norman Cousins, and California industrialist Harold Willens, who is also BEF's national Chairman.

CONSERVATIVES WILL SPEAK, TOO

Though moderate - liberal spokesmen will establish the essential character of the program, differing views are invited and conservative spokesmen will be heard regularly as guests -- to help assure program balance. The ultimate goal of the program, as Mr. Willens puts it, is "to enable the listener to make up his own mind on national issues."

The first phase of the radio project began with distribution of tape-recorded commentaries to a selected list of 200 radio stations in 44 states, for broadcasts beginning in mid-February. The program is divided into five-minute segments for use five days a week, to facilitate easy inclusion of the commentaries into existing local news, interview and news analysis programs.

The 200 stations were chosen from a group of 476 throughout the country which responded to test mailings of advance information and pilot tapes by saying they want to use the "In The Public Interest" program. About one-third of the 200 selected outlets are affiliates of major networks -- ABC, CBS, NBC and the Mutual Broadcasting System. Others are mainly major independent or publicly-supported stations, or were selected because they broadcast significant amounts of ultra-conservative material.

"In a small but we hope growing way," Willens said, "we want to create a clearing in the thicket of extremist rhetoric where the moderates and liberals can get a word in edgewise. We are convinced, on the basis of our test marketing, that the listener -- driving to work or tuned into the larger world from home -- will appreciate this approach."

The program is produced for BEF by Robert A. Maslow, based in Washington, D. C. Mr. Maslow selected the test group of 200 stations in order to achieve the widest geographic spread and diversity of kinds of outlets and audiences for a trial broadcast period of several months.

CARE for Mother

May 9 is Mother's Day, a day when millions of students will follow the American tradition of giving Mom something special.

May 9 is also a day in which half of the world's population will go to bed hungry. A day in which half of the 200 human beings born each minute are destined to die before age one.

It's a day, too, when American students can pay tribute to their mothers in unique form. Bee H. Brown, Atlanta Regional Director of CARE, says that his organization has a gift plan through which students can give their mothers something special on May 9 and, at the same time help the world's needy. The plan: simply make a contribution of one dollar or more to CARE in the name of your mother

For example, money contributed to last year's honoring of American mothers helps support mother and preschool feeding programs in Colombia. CARE feeds 132,585 mothers and preschool children each day in Colombia—a land where the total income of many, many families is less than $200 per year. The preschoolers are part of 900,000 children receiving CARE food in Colombia.

Last year's Mother's Day funds also were used in Ecuador. Here some 300,000 school children eagerly drink the CARE milk so vital to their meager diets. About 290,000 of them also are fed a highly nutricious bread made of wheat flour and vegetable oil. Another 55,000 preschool children also are fed by CARE.

Funds from 1970's Mother's Day also are helping to provide food for 155,927

ECHO resumes on-campus printing

The Editor-in-Chief of the Highland Echo, Bob Eickelberg, has announced that the Echo will begin to be published in the college printing office again. As most readers noticed, there were three issues printed off campus on newsprint during the last three weeks. These issues were merely trial issues edited by persons running for the editorship of the Echo. The All College Council gave its permission to allow the trial issues to be published as they were.

LITTLE FAITH ON CAMPUS

According to a recent survey, Maryville students see no connection between church attendance and "religiosity" but they do retain a belief in a personal God and Jesus Christ and are concerned with their religious futures.

These findings came from a survey made by Mr. Olsen's Social Methods class during the winter quarter. The class studied the basic principles underlying social behavior and then administered questionnaires to a random sampling of the student population.

All students surveyed indicated a decrease in their religious participation since coming to college. The freshmen were considerably more active than the sophomores—almost 50% of the freshmen attended some community church at least once a month as compared to 30% of the sophomores.

There was a definite indication that all students hold a general discontent with the community churches and the weekly campus vespers. A significant discrepancy between the "actual" and the "professed" role commitments of the College was noted.

Other findings were: Students who attend church at least once a month were more likely to go with friends than alone; students who were not forced to attend church during childhood and adolescence were more likely to participate in religious activities in college than those who were forced to attend.

In reporting to the All-College Council on the results of the survey, Mr. Olsen suggested that no single factor should be considered more important than any other and said all findings are subject to further verification.

Vespers will be held in the Little chapel at 7:00 p.m. Sunday. The Rev. John Wright, Pastor at the Presbyterian Student Center on the University of Tennessee campus will speak on "Signs of Hope in the Campus Ministry." There will be an opportunity for dialogue.

In the April 1, 1971 issue, it was erroneously stated that it was no more expensive to print the paper in town than to have it printed on campus. The cost of each of the three newsprint issues was $25.00 more than a "regular" issue of the Echo.

As to the matter of deadlines as reported in that same issue, it should be noted that one of the trial editors was told his deadline for a Friday issue would be the preceeding Friday. With that sort of an arrangement the Echo would cease to be a "news" paper. In the present set-up the deadline is Wednesday afternoon (and when absolutely necessary it can be fudged to Thursday for an important news item).

In Conjunction with the trial issues, an annonymous note was received by the Publications Committee that said this person enjoyed the "personal appeal" of the legal sized Echo. It is hoped that people will not be too disappointed by the return to the old format for the remainder of the year.

SMITH GIVEN AWARD

C. F. Smith has been selected to receive one of the 1971 Outstanding Senior Chemistry Awards sponsored by the East Tennessee Section of the American Chemical Society.

C. F., who played football for M.C. for four years is from Loudon, Tennessee, and is a chemistry major. He has participated in track for two years, is a resident assistant in the freshman boys' dormitory, and is a member of Alpha Gamma Sigma academic honor society.

During the summer of 1969, C. F. participated in a research project with Dr. Ogren and Jim Cannon, a former chemistry student. As a result of that research, an original paper was published in the "Journal of Physical Chemistry." C. F. spent the 4-week interim term last fall at L'Abri Fellowship in Huemoz, Switzerland, studying philosophy. He plans to

Today we are five sevenths of the way through Earth Week and probably most people didn't even realize that it was going on. This time last year rallies, demonstrations, marches, teach-ins and the like were held all over the nation and everyone knew about Earth Day. But this year things are different and we think that this is good.

This year, on the national scale, Earth Day is seven times longer than before. Over half the states have proclaimed Earth Week as have many mayors. The observances this year have been on the "do your own thing" level with the emphasis on local action rather than a national show. Among the leaders of the movement it is felt that last year's Earth Day did very little except acquaint Americans with the word "ecology." This time around the emphasis is on the depth of the activities and it is felt that if special stress is placed on action at the local level, where pollution of more manageable size looms, people will be able to see results quicker and this in turn will help their patience while waiting for national problems to be solved.

According to Jan Schaeffer, who helped to organize Earth Day, "the strategy of using Earth Day to fight environmental destruction was, like the Moratorium as an antiwar tatic, a fad." It is the hope of the Echo that here at Maryville and across the nation the people who are truly concerned about the condition of our environment will be involved in action rather than rhetoric, and that we will prove that ecology is more than a fad.

THE PROMISED LAND

FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.—8 p.m. and the Crunch begins. From crowded four-on-the-floor hotel rooms. From under palms, from out of the water, from anywhere and all over, the teeming masses with Youth written all over their faces and tanned bodies, emerge and keep emerging. Cruising down Atlantic beach-line Boulevard, walking for hours to get no-place, they search for something. . .watching, peering, looking relentlessly and restlessly, their bodies squirming from beneath patched denims, scraggly hair, torn T-shirts, marching in the promenade toward promiscuity. Girls are transformed into chicks, guys into studs—equally the spring break exodus, a lonely harts club in the sand, where every night is singles night, a beach teach-in in a one-week life-style course consisting of sun, fun, sex without guilt and guilt without sex. Freedom, liberty and the pursuit of hipness.

They've come from all over, these youths, and they meet as Midwestern twangs blend with Southern drawls and New York overtones mingle with Boston undertones. And the shocking culture is no culture shock to them: they have come expecting what they are getting. They want to be free. It's the Fort Lauderdale spring vacation pre-Easter college youth-type scene. A pimple on the chin and you qualify, with long hair and bell bottoms as this year's badges of the youth culture. The passwords vary from "Got any hash or acid, man?" "Don't I know ya from somewhere, girl?" to "Hey! Sig Delt!"

Each morning, daytime arrives and a night's sleep is continued on the beach—the sun's rays hover over as people display their Fort Lauderdale bodies, sunlamped and dieted in preparation for their one-week sojourn. And, if it rains, as it did one overcast spring-break morning, they'll lounge there anyway, solar perplexus.

The beach scene. Like something you didn't believe was real—right out of a 50's beach-bingo flick, without Frankie and Annette, but with a cast of a thousand others playing the same cinematic games without the fade-outs.

A boy passes, tanned and muscled, carrying a yellow surf board. Two goils from the East ("We're from the East," say the girls from the Bronx) squint at one another and one meekly mutters an "oy" that she really didn't mean to say. She corrects herself ("Oh"), the surfer smiles, and the girls' mornings are made. Now for the afternoon.

The afternoon drones on and on as did the morning. Walking to see the many non-existent sights of this fun-in-the-sun city or back in hotel rooms to wash, dry, comb hair, preparing for the evening Crunch, writing quick letters home saying wish-you-were-here, glad that you aren't.

Why are they here? They arrive in groups and stick together like molasses. Some of the most beautiful people come here; others come here to become beautiful. They've all here—Marjorie Morning and Evening Star, every Joe College, every football hero, every cheerleader, their bodies their social security. And they've all come looking for the same thing: an instant one-week mecca, a nightime nirvana, a college Karma, and something to bring back home as a souvenir: a golden tan, their trademarks of where they've been.

Everything is heavy, everything is quick, everything is temporary. Shades of Toffler, turning Future Shock into an alarming present. Toffler says, "What the Fort Lauderdale rite supplies is a transient agglomeration of people that makes possible a great diversity of temporary interpersonal relationships. What attracts the young people is more than an irrepressible passion for sunshine. Nor is it mere sex, a commodity available in other places as well. Rather, it is a sense of freedom without responsibility."

It is the ciyt of Fort Lauderdale and its merchants who bear the responsibility. More than 15,000 college students move in on the city, leaving about $1.5 million in local cash registers. Although the merchants are more than happy to accept the students' money, they aren't happy to accept the students. This year, one hotel prepared a three-page list of Dos and Dön'ts for students "made necessary through prior experience," almost pleading with the guests not to dress in "beatnik type dress. . .you are guests in a first class hotel and you are expected to dress and conduct yourself in a manner befitting your durroundings—to act as ladies and gentlemen." The rules go on to say that students residing in the hotel are not allowed to have visitors in their rooms. Corps of policemen are stationed at hotel doors at night to enforce regulations that grew out of students' bad behavior last spring bread.

8:30 and the Crunch continues. Hair in place until windblown. Off to Lum's for dinner or, if you can't afford, the Corner Drugstore or the corner drug store where cries of "Got any Acid or Mesc?" are meal-time entertainment for the side-walk cafe clientele. People whisk by, shouting after girlies, radios blaring the sounds of the Top Twenty and "Welcome to Fort Lauderdale, students," as obscenities sprinkle the air. "I want that girl in the black," a hotel "beatnik" guy says over his breath. "Yeah," says his cronie. "And I want that black with that girl." And the throngs of young people are astounding: college sweatshirts glare with yellowed sew-on stickers of universities and colleges and fraternities and sororities all over the country, binding these members of the academic single set together. Occasionally, an elderly way-laid Miami Beach type hobbles across a crowded sidewalk, reminding the youths that they indeed are youths.

They mingle, congregate, circulate, dropping cigaretts and who knows what other kind of ashes into the sand, nightly turning the beach into a mega-ashtray. One girl is noticeable: alone, tight-fitting jersey, with that desperate look in her eyes that says someone -please want-me-I've-saved-up-all-this-money-and-maybe-I-should-have-done- the

MORE DDT

MORE DDT—Los Angeles Food and Drug Administration officials announced in early March that a batch of fish caught off the Southern California coast contained more of the globe-traveling pesticide than federal limits allow. Preliminary testing of twelve bonita and ten jack mackerel showed six of them—three of each species—were toting DDT amounts above the five parts per million the FDA tolerates in inter-state market-bound fish.

The news drained the morale of state commercial fishing industries who supply most of the country's demand for bonita and jack mackerel. In late December 1970 they watched FDA officials seize some four tons of kingfish containing around nineteen parts per million DDT.

Although the samples of bonita and jack mackerel were small, the March 2 San Francisco Chronicle said "the FDA showed concern that they would indicate a trend."

Dear Editor, Friends, Associates:

Some of you may not know who S. Smith is, or care, so that's O. K. He used to draw these wierd cartoon strips in the Echo last year and the year before that. Some folks liked them, some folks didn't Nobody understood what they meant, Not even Smith. People used come up to him, and ask him what his cartoons meant, and he'd have to think up some dumb metaphysical answer so they'd go away.

So this letter is to explain the whole thing. First, Smith is probably crazy, right: Okay, warped anyway. And his cartoons were always pretty simply drawn, and didn't sign alot of them out of forgetfulness. (?) This might lead one to believe that the entire thing was just a collection of graphic daydreams. Nothing really makes anymore sense, anyway.

Sincerely,

NEW EDITOR ELABORATES

Can a small, liberal-arts college ever publish a first-rate newspaper: This question was asked of John Powell, Echo editor for 1971-72. His answer was a definite yes.

"The Echo has a lot of potential and, hopefully, will become one of the more viable areas of involvement at MC," Powell said.

Although he had not fully developed his policies for next year, Powell did comment on several goals he sees for the Echo. "First, I feel that the Echo can become an outlet for creative journalism. We are seeking to broaden the Echo's scope from that of a weekly newsletter to encompass standards acceptable on major newspapers."

To accomplish this goal, Powell remarked that plans are underway to institute some type of journalism workshop next fall.

A second goal Powell sees for the Echo is in its unique position in the community. "Traditionally, the Echo has maintained its independence from the power structure here at Maryville. We must continue and we will continue to maintain this position of independence in order to retain our journalistic integrity," Powell stressed.

At the same time, Powell added that the Echo's independence would be tempered by a sense of responsibility that represents the best of journalistic practice.

As a result of the Echo's unique po-

MONEY FOR VETERANS

It's about that time again," the Veterans Administration today reminded 692,000 veterans, servicemen and dependents attending college under the G. I. Bill.

That reminder was designed to induce veterans to return their certification of attendance cards to VA during the last full month of their current enrollment period.

And there are two very good reasons for jogging their memories:

1. VA cannot prepare a final check for the spring 1970-71 school year until the agency has received the certification of attendance card from the student involved.
2. If the card is not returned at the end of the current semester, the student cannot automatically be enrolled under the G.I. Bill for the upcoming summer or fall semester.

Failure to complete and return the cards on the part of both college level and below college level trainees will automatically stop payments.

VA further pointed out that it is the responsibility of students attending school under VA programs to keep the agency informed on changes in their number of dependents, or their education programs.

VA also reminded college registrars of their role—to promptly return students' re-enrollment certification so students may start receiving their checks on schedule the next semester they are in school.

Bahamas-instead. She walks and walks, silently sulking. By 10 p.m. she is still there. Ten minutes later a short Cincinnati sweatshirted boy takes her away. She is smiling. All that hard-saved money hasn't been for nothing after all.

The students move into bars, they move into restaurants, they move into each other's lives and beds, if only for a short night.

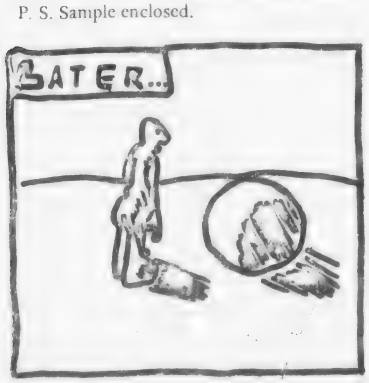
What are you doing here?" an old friends asks another in disbelief during a late-night encounter.

"Well, you know. . ."

"Yeah."

Yeah. They're all there for fun, to frolic and laugh and, most important, to forget. To forget about responsibility and text books and what they were back home.

But the sad fact is that Fort Lauderdale, with all its teeming youth types with their sordid search for self-indulgence in a strange land that they've made stranger, is boring.



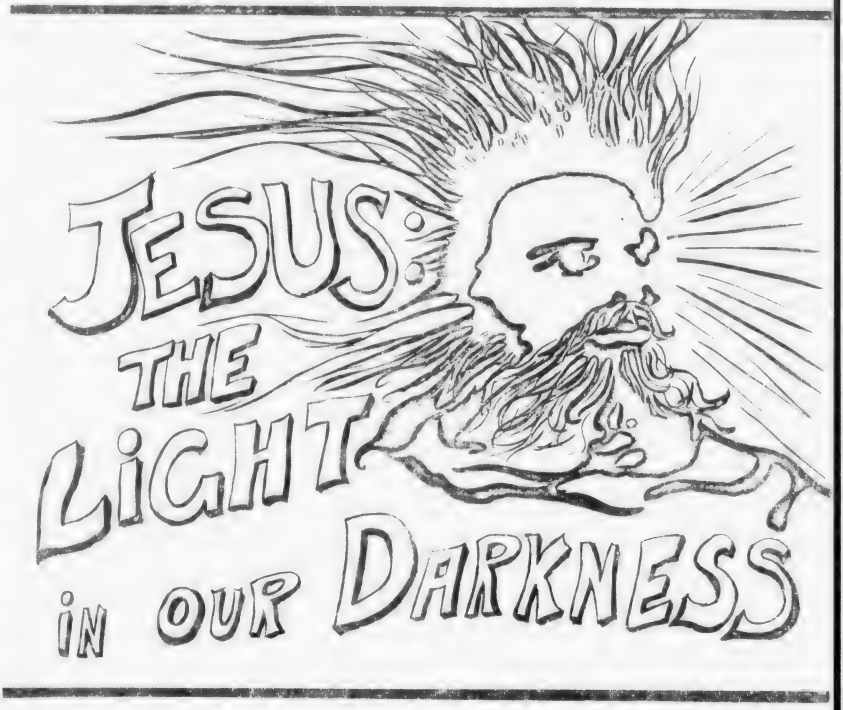
It is late. The Crunch is ending. Students are going back to their hotels, camping out on the beach, alone or together.

A weaving car drives by and then halts at a stop light. In it are two couples, each member molded into the other's arms. The radio is screeching and from it comes the news. . ."Today, President Nixon announced that the Vietnam War. . ."

"Turn that crap off, Mike," the girl says to her one-night beau.

He turns it off. The light changes. And they drive off.

The masses now are all in bed as the sun is waiting to come up.



'Jesus Revolution' spreads from California

By Bill Swain

"What would you like?" It was the usual question for a Shoney's waitress.

"I'd like a saved waitress," replied Barry Westbrook, "Preacher Whiteshoes" to the hippies of Atlanta's Peachtree Street.

"A what?" she exclaimed.

"I mean, do you know Jesus, ma'am?"

For Westbrook, who will be speaking at the U.C. Theater this week, such a conversation is commonplace. He raps with preachers, students, housewives and business men with the same candor.

The young evangelist several months ago left a secure preaching position in Georgia to join a spontaneous movement the national press has labeled the Jesus Revolution.

This revival, which initially broke out among Southern California's young people is an unlikely combination of fundamentalist Christianity and the hippie culture.

Now from Hollywood's Sunset Strip to the "turned on" district of Atlanta's Peachtree Street and even to the Vanderbilt University area in Nashville hip kids are giving up drugs and turning to a foot-stomping Bible-toting brand of Christianity.

At MTSU, signs of the revolution are becoming apparent. Some of the movement's local followers greet each other with an extended forefinger, referring to Christ's statement "I am the way, the truth and the life." They say it's a response to the peace sign.

Others wear bright orange buttons labeled "Join The Jesus Revolution". Less obvious signs of activity are the dorm devotionals, prayer groups and Bible studies that have sprung up on the campus.

In Southern California, least likely birthplace of a Christian revival yet hardest hit by the Jesus Movement, dozens of go-go clubs have turned into Christian coffee houses where kids go to sing and pray.

Along Los Angeles' Sunset Strip, long-haired kids in faded bell-bottoms and leather-fringed vests stop passersby with "Do you know Jesus?" and "He's coming soon."

These kids have a lot to sing about because many are ex-drug addicts.

Fifteen thousand of their fellow drifters have passed through one California church, according to Look magazine's Feb. 9 issue. Over a two-year period 4,000 of the addicts have stopped using heroin, said the group's preacher.

Closer to home, in Nashville, a young man named Ron Clark with several other Christians of the long-haired variety have opened a home called the Twenty-third Psalm.

There on Wednesday and Friday evenings blacks, whites, well-dressed matrons and blue-jeaned hips crowd the living room floor, often overflowing onto the porch. They come for Bible teaching and prayer.

The service, which runs from one and one half to two hours, is filled with amens, hallelujahs and strange melodious whispers that would put backwoods all-night sing to shame.

Jerry Hollis, former director of the MTSU Christian Center, appraised what he feels is happening, "People are taking a second look at Jesus."

"Some of us who are more established are afraid to seek Jesus as He is," he said. "The hippies may find it easier to find Jesus than perhaps someone in a seminary."

"In Jesus," he said, "they see an individual who shows and gives a new way of life--not an establishment or a traditional church."

One young man intent upon reviving the present church establishment is Westbrook, who is in the third week of revival here at Bellwood Baptist Church.

Unlike traditional revivals with big-name evangelists and well-known entertainers, Westbrook and team came to town virtually unknown.

The week before their arrival in Murfreesboro, the team had staged a Jesus rally in Nashville's War Memorial Auditorium. With the gusto of a football game crowd, the rally participants poured out of the auditorium to witness to anyone whom they met.

Unsuspecting passersby were astounded when some of the more zealous crew roared into "Give me a J-E-S-U-S-------JESUS!"

Ircel Harrison, director of the MTSU Baptist Student Union, is still considering some of these more unorthodox aspects of the Jesus Revolution -- like the cheers and the rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar----but he is excited about the effect of the movement. He said that churches have too often "segregated Jesus from their daily life."

"This overflowing of sharing--the Holy Spirit," Harrison said, was a "tremendously healthy thing--not monastic withdrawal but into the world."

"Young people are discovering that there is something in Christianity and the valid thing is Jesus," he concluded.

The above reprinted from Middle Tennessee State University student paper SIDELINES, March 23, 1971.

sition, Powell sees the Echo serving a special role in the community: "Hopefully, the Echo will become more of a unifying factor in the creation of community ideals than in the past. It must represent all the facets that the community represents and at the same time serve a concilitory role among the various disciplines."

Also, Powell added that he felt the independent editorial position could be used to move towards community ideals.

Besides these goals, Powell commented on the more mundane mechanical difficulties involved in publishing next year's Echo. He indicated that plans are underway to publish the Echo using a newsprint format. "Whether or not we publish off-campus depends to a great extent on the Business Manager and his staff," Powell said.

Finally, Powell suggested that since the Echo seeks to be a community newspaper that anyone, faculty, administration, upper or underclassmen, interested in working on either the editorial or business staffs contact him.

Males who think well of themselves date prettier girls than those with inferiority complexes, according to the April Science Digest. Men who were told they were doing poorly tried to date the less attractive girl.

RELIGION AND THE ACC

by Susan Hayba

Religion at Maryville College was the topic focused upon at last week's All College Council meeting. About 15 visitors, mainly members of the University Christian Movement and the Worship and the Special Meetings Committees, attended.

The first report came from Dr. Bloy, chairman of the Worship Committee. He commented that interest in campus religious services such as vespers and chapel has dwindled to almost nothing. This reality contradicts the college's professed commitment to Christianity. Dr. Bloy wondered what sort of effect this "drift toward a shallow, secular" humanist indifference might or should have upon recruitment of students and faculty, interpersonal relationships, service, and required courses. Dr. Walker said that MC could not be called uncommitted to religion simply because it has not achieved its goal, whereupon Dr. Blair quipped that we could try to come a little bit closer.

The Special Meetings Committee, chaired by Dr. Stine, is basically concerned with January Meetings. He briefly outlined next year's program, which will center around "The Christian and Politics."

Mr. Harrison, the chaplain, proposed several changes in the area of religious life. The two existing committees, Worship and Special Meetings, will be combined to cover religious activity on campus. Outside interests will fall under either the new groups for Community Outreach and World Concerns. The chaplain also requested a budget for the committees so they could make definite plans.

Mr. Harrison also raised the question of how the University Christian Movement relates to these committees. The answer came, after some discussion, that it does not. President Copeland was concerned that these new committees might eliminate any field in which the UCM could work. The members of that group present agreed with Kathy Snatchko, president, that they preferred to work on spontaneous projects and that the vitality of the movement would be damaged by incorporating it into the formalized structure of a committee. Most of the Council members saw value in having some organizations independent of the central committees.

UCM has been working as much as it can this year in spite of student disinterest, Melissa Collins explained. Because UCM does not usually advertise, few people realize that it backed such projects as the movies and rap sessions in the Hole-in-the-Wall, community clean-up days, Nu Gamma, Key Men, and the March on Washington.

Some tentative, general observations about students and their non-involvement with organized religion were gathered from the survey conducted by Mr. Olsen's sociology classes. Most Maryville students were forced to attend church in high school and now most do not go. More freshmen participate in religious services than members of any other class, yet during the sophomore year a student is least likely to go to church. Church attendance is related to whether or not one's friends go. Unstructured worship, which most students felt was the kind available on campus, was favored over formal services, yet hardly anyone attended vespers or chapel. Some respondents expressed a personality difference between themselves and the local congregations, ministers, or chaplain, but often informally admitted that they had not given these people a chance. Ninety-one percent answered that one could be religious without going to church and a majority indicated that having some kind of faith is important and that they prayed occasionally. The Worship Committee was encouraged by these initial findings because they will now be more certain of what trends and forces with which they must cope.

WITH YOUR HELP, ALICE COULD . . .

Alice Leng-li Yang

Alice Leng-li Yang, a Chinese student living in Kobe, Japan, plans to come to school here next year. Alice heard about MC from a friend of her parents. Her application has been accepted by the college, and she expects to be here in September.

A major problem lies in her way, however she will not have enough money unless someone helps her. Her parents are not able to pay all her expenses.

With this in mind, this year's Fred Hope Fund campaign will be directed toward helping her. Within several days, a campus drive to raise $500 for her benefit will get underway.

The Fred Hope Fund sponsors such an annual campaign to raise money for a chosen project. Since the fund was begun in 1900 by Fred Hope, a MC student at the time, the money has aided foreign students and church workers.

Alice, whose hobbies are piano and sports, will graduate in June from Stella Maria School in Kobe. Her father is a minister and kindergarten director there.

EVERYONE'S FOR CLEANER AIR

Except perhaps, a few Chicagoans, who have been making life tough for Philip Mole, field evaluations manager of Chicago's Environmental Control Department.

Mole, a key witness in a pollution control hearing involving U.S. Steel Corporation, told the Department's appeal board at a late March meeting that he had been threatened by phone calls for four months with warnings not to testify at board hearings. According to the Washington Post, city hearings are aimed at revoking a 1965 certificate giving U.S. Steel's South Works and three other steel makers some leeway with Chicago air standards.

Mole said windows on both his family cars had been smashed before hearing dates; and that midnight phone calls rasped: "We're going to get you. You're not going to shut down United States Steel."

A DIFFERENT KIND OF DEMONSTRATION

In the Spring of 1971, one million or more concerned young Americans will come together under the leadership of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation for development—calling upon the people of the United States for a new and vigorous attack on the causes of domestic and international poverty.

These youth anticipate the active participation of citizens in more than 300 cities and towns nationwide on International Walk for Development Weekend, May 8-9, 1971. Such a walk will be held in Knoxville.

To raise money, sponsors (businesses, civic clubs, etc.) promise to pay a certain amount of money for each mile that its contracted walker covers. Most of the walkers are student volunteers.

Proceeds from the Knoxville Walk for Development will be channeled into two projects. A portion of it will be given to the Knoxville Child Care Center. The remainder will be used to assist a well-digging operation in Upper Volta, West Africa.

Student participants from MC are wanted. For more specific information about the project, see any of the following people: Andy Barker, Robert Cortese, Jim Covington, Michael Montgomery, Doug Ruth, or Kim Rugh.

This Sunday, vespers will feature poetry and will be held in the Little Chapel at 7:00 p.m. under the leadership of Margaret Jefferson.

IN APPRECIATION . . .

Social Injustice, Poverty, Pollution, and Racial Tensions are problems that face any college community—as well as the whole world. But as usual, it is hard to come up with some sort of constructive avenue for making a dent into these problems. Marches, demonstrations, riots, and/or violence may make a big impression on some people—but the question that remains is how productive are these methods in the long run?

There are constructive methods to eradicate the above (see "Development" article on p. 1), and we have here on campus several groups that are working in constructive ways to help people, places and causes.

One of the organizations is Circle K and the Echo would like to publicly recognize them and give them a word of well deserved "Thanks."

Circle K has spent many weekends up at Tremont doing manual labor such as clearing trails, etc., and some of its members work regularly with the Tremont staff in other educational activities. Circle K also, on a weekly basis, organizes activities down at Parkside—just recently sponsoring an Easter party. Other activities have included working at the Children's Home, a Big Brother program and helping the local Kiwanis Clubs in their service projects.

The Circle K group works silently without a great deal of recognition and once again the Echo expresses its appreciation for the services Circle K provides in the Maryville Community.

RIGHT ON!
ACADEMIC ORTHODOXY

by Wayne J. Thorburn

STEVE KELMAN, A Democratic Socialist of the Michael Harrington school, has some interesting comments on his fellow Harvard students in his book, Push Comes to Shove. In speaking of the SDS influence over Harvard students, he observed:

> "Unreality doesn't, however, incubate automatically because of a favorable environment. Concrete steps must be taken to disorient students from any sort of bearings or points of reference to reality. Black must be made to appear white, two plus two equal five. This task is easier because most students come to Harvard without very definite or strong political beliefs. . . Most Harvard students will confess to changing their minds back and forth depending on which side's polemic they read last. . ."

Students come to Harvard, as they do to Wayne State or Valley Junior College, without a concise view of political reality or a developed idealogical outlook towards the values on which society and its government should be based. Think back to your high school years and your own view of politics. Most of us had no personal foreigh policy or well-developed stand on universal medical care. We entered collegiate life ready to learn, to become familiar with the great issues of man and the state, to know of where we could find meaning and then come to our own conclusions as to Truth.

Yet, this is too often not the situation on American campuses today. It is interesting to note how SDS gained hold of the political beliefs of many Harvard students. Kelman explains the manner in which many students found their political answers.

> ". . . when political beliefs are molded merely on the basis of reading and talking and not on the basis of experience, it becomes relatively easy to change students' minds by exposing them to a constant diet of one side only. . .This pressure, all from one side is constant and takes its toll."

Harvard is no different in this respect than most American college campuses. Nor does the indoctrination come only from SDS. Witness the results of a recent faculty opinion survey by the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, which polled over sixty thousand faculty members in all academic fields. It found that forty-seven percent of all faculty members (in all fields) considered themselves Left or Liberal and only twenty-four percent labelled themselves Moderate or strong conservatives. Over eighty percent in Sociology, seventy-one percent in Political Science, seventy-seven percent in Philosophy, and sixty-eight percent in History, classified themselves as Liberal or Left. Corresponding figures for Moderate or Strong Conservatives were Sociology 5%, Political Science 9%, Philosophy 8%, History 12%.

It is no wonder that the discussion on campus too often becomes framed in terms of liberal versus radical. As Professor Stephen Tonsor has commented, "The ideological and cultural uniformity of higher education in America is a disgrace. . .Our colleges and universities have conformed themselves over the past two decades to the orthodoxy of secular liberalism.

How many conservatives teach on your faculty? Is Kirk, Voegelin, or even Burke read in your Political Theory courses? Are Friedman, Von Mises, and Allen discussed in your Economics courses? When was the last time a conservative case against our present welfare policies was discussed in your Sociology courses? Unfortunately, the Balanced University, presenting all views in its search for Truth, exists on too few American campuses. Students must express their own independence and search for differing ideas from the liberal orthodoxy of the academy. One wonders what has happened to the practice of academic freedom by those who so loudly proclaim their adherence to the principle.

ALCOHOL AND SEX ARE POOR MIXERS

People who begin drinking a little liquor to facilitate sexual arousal are likely to end up crying in their beer.

That's the conclusion drawn by Dr. Ruth Fox, in the May issue of "Sexual Behavior," a new magazine devoted to serious, authoritative information on sex.

A New York psychiatrist who is a past medical director of the National Council on Alcoholism, Dr. Fox writes that although a drink or two may initially "turn on" someone sexually by reducing inhibitions, alcohol is, in fact, a sedative and its frequent use results in a turning off process.

"It doesn't get your courage up," she writes, "it gets your fears down. But that down process continues. After the first few drinks, the basic sedative nature of alcohol comes into effect. It turns everything off, including eventually the capacity to feel and perform sexually."

Noting that Masters and Johnson found that excessive drinking was one of the most important factors associated with the main type of impotence, Dr. Fox says that a drink before sexual relations is not necessarily bad, but a real risk exists.

"After a while, the drink becomes as important as the sex, and eventually it can supplant it," she writes. As the years go by the number of drinks a person takes has a way of creeping up. And then one day an instance of sexual failure prompted by too much to drink sets off the kind of sexual inadequacy one sees so often."

The real danger, Dr. Fox believes, is that an isolated incident of sexual failure caused by excessive drinking can lead to a vicious cycle in which drinking and sex are transferred from bedside companions into irreconcilable adversaries.

Although few studies on the effect of alcohol on women's sexual functioning have been made, Dr. Fox suggests that a woman who is heavily sedated by alcohol is not likely to enjoy sex. In addition, she points to some cases in which normally staid women have become sexually promiscous while under the influence.

"Sexual Behavior" magazine is sold on newsstands. Its Board of Editors includes some of the most eminent doctors and psychiatrists in America. Other topics in the May issue are: "Clothing and Sexuality," "Are American Men Afraid of Women?," "Obscene Telephone Callers," and a debate on "Are Fantasies During Sexual Relations a Sign of Difficulty?".

it's the RIGHT TIME

by Rick Mitz

TIME

It's not the right time to be sitting here writing this column. In fact, It's not the right time for you to be sitting there reading this column. It's not the right time to do anything. It's the right time to do everything.

It's the right itme to lobby with legislators; to overthrow the system; to work within the system; to work without the system. To stop the war; to start the peace; to clean up the cities; purify the air; crusade for Christ, destroy the establishment; establish a counter-culture and a counter-counter-culture. Picket big business. End racism, Struggle for freedom. Battle polution. Tear down the walls. And enlist in any of the endless lists of sundry fights, struggles, battles, causes and crusades brought about by increased social pressure applied to the social consciences of our relevant existences.

There's a right time and right place for everything. . .Or so says that age-old adolescent adage we've been nutured on. All over the country, the hands on the clock point to the same time—the right time—to do Something. To speak out, to start worrying. To become active in Activism, to become involved in Involvement, to Become.

Time is running out and we are chasing after it. Time is the question and time is the answer. And no longer is it as simple and as uncomplicated as that innocent nursery rhyme definition of time we thought we knew so very well.

> The clock on the wall has a clean little face.
> And it ticks all day long in its neat little case.
> It sings as it works, for its hands, as you see.
> Are as tidy and neat as nice hands ought to be.

Things have changed. Even the watches that adorn our student wrists that hold our clenched fists, somehow show us and the rest of the world what we are so adamantly for and against: the Spiro Agnew watch, the diamond watch, the Mickey Mouse watch. Stop watches, neck watches, under-water watches, time-pieces run by electricity, battery and/or wind-up.

And, like clock-work we punch in and punch out, keeping our eyes on our calender girls and our calendar boys-over sears; seeing that, with every pendulum swing, that we are—indeed—getting closer to getting further away.

Periodicals like Time and The Times tell us about the times: "Planes Get Free Rein in Cambodia," "Welfare Funds Cut to Indiana and Nebraska," "Draft-Raid Defendants Convicted. . ."

We are told: It's time to make Decisions.
We are told: It's time to get an Education.
We are told: It's time to Mature. To get good Jobs.
It's time to keep our country Free. We are told.

And we are told. By out parents. By our peers. By our periodicals. The decision has been removed from our hearts and, magically, medically transplated into our guilt-ridden heads.

And yet, still we rhetorically ask: what is it the right time for?

"It's the right itme to—y'know—to start caring about people. There's nothing to laugh at. It's time to do something about how sad the world is."

"It's the right time to laugh. We must laugh while we still can. To keep our sanity."

But no longer are the issues of immediate importance. The Urgency is what has become so urgent, and somehow, somewhere between the nursery rhymes and the classroom clock, we have learned well how to relate to issues, but not to people. Certainly not to ourselves.

So we run, running after the hour hand as the minute hand chases us.

"Time is running out—and we're being run by the clock, rather than the clock being run by us. We are being told everything—when to sleep, when to get up, when to love, when to hate. And all this talk about honesty and kindness—that can only be achieved when we can overcome the clock, when we can overcome time as our enemy and ruler."

Where is that medium between the innocence of youthful rhymes and the sophistication of truthful times? There are black and white problems—the black and white of peoples' faces, the black and white of our air, the black and white of this newspaper print. But there's also a whole world of gray that desperately needs some color between those youthful rhymes and truthful times.

It's the right time to stop thinking about what it's the right time for and to start doing something."

And the hands on the clock, as they strike the hour, point to us all.

> It helps us to keep up with the time as it flies,
> And it tells us the hour to sleep and rise;
> It's a friend that we need, as it hangs on the wall,
> Ticking lessons of truth and good will to all.

NETMEN AT TOURNY

The Scot netmen, during the past week, have taken two victories before they tackle the T.I.A.C. Tournament on the Tenn. Tech. courts. On Saturday they came from behind to squeak by King 4-3, and then Monday they beat North Georgia 6-3.

Last year the Scots' third doubles team took a runners-up position in the tournament and Coach Kardatzke thinks the team could place again this year. At the tournament, Ward Brooks will represent us at first singles, David Kidder second, Allen Childs third, John Cochran fourth, Scott Fisher fifth, and Steve Compher sixth. In doubles Brook-Cochran first, Kidder-Childs second, and Fisher-Compher third. The tournament begins the twenty-ninth.

TRACK TEAM 2-2

Touring Bryan College ran the Scots here last Wednesday, and were handed a 82-61 loss. This brings the thinclads record to 2—2.

Bill Postler, Alpha Gama Sigma, paced the Scots' with 11¼ points winning the 220 yd. dash, triple jump, mile relay.

In the field, Rich Livernoise placed second in the shotput while Larry McDowell won the discus. Senior C. F. Smith was second in the javelin while Robinson took third in the discus and third in the javelin. Walter Cross outjumped two opponents to win the High Jump. In the Long jump, Harry Robertshaw was first, Chip Rusey third, Malcolm Westbrook won the pole vault.

In the sprints, Bill Corbett and Edd Hill took 1st and 3rd respectively in the 100, while Warwick placed 2nd in the 220. Tom Piper ran a 51.0 quarter to take the 440. Mark Antones placed 3rd. In the 120 High Hurdles, Walter Cross and Chip Pusey took 1st and 2nd respectively while Pusey won the 440 intermediates. The Scots swept both relays. Distanceman, John Powell, was 3rd in the mile and 3rd in the 3-mile.

The thinclads traveled to Milligan on Wednesday, April 28, for a 3-way meet with Milligan and Mars Hill that ended the season.

Dear Editor,

With the season over now, we would like to take time out to thank all the girls who officiated this season's meets. They did a really fine job. Thanks again.

Sincerely,
Track Team

OPEN LETTER TO POOL PRANKSTERS

CONGRATULATIONS. May I compliment you on how clever you were.

I'm sure the life-guards want to thank you for their vacation, of course it is without pay.

The pre-college students don't mind not getting their lesson on Saturday morning, even though they have already paid for it. Naturally, the parents understand what good public relations this is.

Students in college swim classes think you are great. It doesn't matter if they don't get the instruction they have paid for. It's the smart thing now to pay and expect a return, especially in education.

The Maintenance Crew thanks you for the extra work. They wouldn't have a thing to do otherwise, and Mr. Layman is overjoyed at the additional expense involved.

All the recreational swimmers give you a hearty cheer—there is nothing like having someone spoil the play places. After all, you are just following the leadof the clever people all around you who pollute the land.

Women's Intramurals isn't disrupted because the Monday night Swim Meet was cancelled. Mrs. Davis has plenty of time in her 12-hour day to make further arrangements.

The outside groups renting the pool are glad to have their plans changed—that way they don't have to contribute to paying part of your expenses.

Last, but most important to me. . .may I grieve a little for the burden your conscience will bear (hopefully) under the knowledge that this prank was perpetrated via the criminal act of breaking and entering.

YOU REALLY ARE HONORABLE MEN.

SCOTS 11-6

The Scots by virtue of an impressive 3-2 victory over Chattenooga pushed their season record to 11-6. The Moccasins were 17-3 before the defeat to the Scots. Rob Randall pitched the victory for the Scots, upping his record to 5-2. Joe Kozel and Mark Brookes each collected two hits for the victors.

The winning run came about in the ninth inning when Dave Clinton singled, Earl McMahon singled and Clinton scored when the centerfielder threw the ball into the dugout in an attempt to pick off Clinton at second base.

Saturday the Scots split a doubleheader with Temple. Wayne Basle gained the victory in a 3-2 game. Joe Kozel collected three hits, Mark Brookes and Larry Stephens two each. The nightcap went to Temple 6-2. Larry Stephens collected three hits and Joe Kozel and Mark Brookes chipped in with two apiece.

Thursday, Cumberland with 4 runs in the eighth inning edged the Scots 8-6. Dave Clinton had a triple for the Scots.

Last Monday the Scots took a doubleheader from Bryan 6-4 and 19-2. Joe Kozel's home run with two out and a mate aboard won the game. The Second game was no contest as the Scots got six runs in the first inning. Dan McKinstry had six hits and six RBI's in the doubleheader.

Yesterday the Scots played Carson-Newman at Jefferson City. Saturday, Emory-Henry pay a visit to Maryville. The Scots are looking to avenge a defeat last year. A doubleheader is scheduled with the first game beginning at 2:00 p.m. Everyone on campus is encouraged to come Saturday as the Scots tangle with the Wasps.

Next Tuesday, the Scots go to Tusculum and on Thursday at 2:45, Carson-Newman another big Scot rival invades for a single game. Everyone is asked to support the Scots next Thursday also. After next Thursday the Scots have only two games remaining, one being at Milligan and a game with Cumberland here.

MAY MADNESS HAS ARRIVED

May Madness, with its traditional highlight of the Sunday afternoon team competition, is scheduled for this weekend. Developing from what used to be an unorganized but annual Mother's Day riot, May Madness is now an organized and annual Mother's Day riot. In past years, the grand finale has been the Sunday afternoon activities and the same is true for this year. There will be team competition with such things as the Sac Race, an Egg Throw, a Pie Eating Contest (Lynne Gregory is going to try to retain her title), Bat Races, Bed Races, Water Bucket Races, Greased Pig competition, and of course, the last event will be the Tug of War across "The Pit".

Although there will be no CIV credit for what goes on Sunday afternoon behind the New Gym, Chris Gritzmacher, chairman of the Social Committee, promises that there will be a super-good time for everyone there. If you don't believe her, just ask anyone who was there last year.

On Saturday afternoon at 2:00 the second annual Powder Puff Football game will be held. M-Club is sponsoring the game at Honaker Field and there will be a 10c admission charge. The girls have been practicing all week under their Varsity Football coaches and both teams are expecting to win. Needless to say, it should be quite a game!

Saturday night there will be a Dance held in the new Gym. It will begin at 11:00 and will end at 2:00 a.m. The Dean of Women has announced that the Girl's Dorms will close one hour later than usual Saturday night. The extention from 1:00 to 2:00 a.m. is in effect only for May Madness Saturday.

On Sunday night there will be a Barbeque at 6:00 outside Pearsons. The "usual" will be served. Once again, the irregular time should be noted. Later Sunday evening there will be a series of Movies shown in the Music Hall. They will begin at 8:30 p.m. and will include the Road Runner, Daffy Duck, Spanky, and the feature of the evening will be Haunted Palace staring Vincent Price. The charge will be 50c per person or 75c per couple. The Social Committee has worked hard to put this weekend together and it promises to be one of the best ever.

ORCHESTRA TO PERFORM

Maryville College will be host Sunday May 9 to the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra for the premiere of orchestra conductor David Van Vactor's "Walden" (Symphony No. 3) for chorus and orchestra with the Maryville College Choir and the College-Community Chorus participating.

The event is scheduled for 4 p.m. in Wilson Chapel and is the first performance in the third pair of Connoisseur Concerts presented by the Knoxville Symphony Society this year. A repeat performance with the choir and orchestra will take place Sunday May 16 at 4 p.m. in UT's Clarence Brown Theatre in Knoxville.

SUPREME COURT RULES IN FAVOR OF PARKS OVER HIGHWAYS

The U.S. Supreme Court's unanimous decision announced March 2 that highways may not go through parks except under extraordinary circumstances must have caused some head-shaking in the bastions of the pavers and razers.

For in its decision in the case of Memphis, Tennessee's Overton Park, the high court made it clear that trees and grass stand even before them with steel and cement.

The court sent the case of the six-lane highway and the 342-acre park back to the District Court in Tennessee for hearings to determine if the Secretary of Transportation acted legally in approving the highway plans and design. Highway requires that parkland not be used for highways unless there exists no "feasible and prudent alternative."

In writing the opinion for the court, Justice Thurgood Marshall cited the highway legislation protecting parks and said, "This language is a plain and explicit bar to the use of federal funds for construction of highways through parks, only the most unusual situations are exempted."

Marshall noted that interpretations of "feasible" and "prudent" could allow the paving of parks because the land would be cheaper.

"But no such wide-ranging endeavor was intended." Marshall wrote. "it is obvious that in most cases consideration of cost, directness of route, and community disruption will indicate that parkland should be used for highway construction whenever possible. . .And since people do not live or work in parks, if a highway is built on parkland no one will have to leave his home or give up his business. Such factors are common to substantially all highway construction. Thus if Congress intended these factors to be on an equal footing with preservation of parkland there would have been no need for the statutes."

"But the very existence of the statute indicates that protection of parkland was to be given paramount importance. The few green havens that are public parks were not to be lost unless there were truly unusual factors present in a particular case or the cost or community disruption resulting from alternative routes reached extraordinary magnitudes."

The Supreme Court also ruled that although the courts hearing challenges to Transportation Secretary decisions may not substitute their own judgement for that of the Secretary, they are empowered

THOREAU TO BE JAILED

He blasts the war as unjust and imperialistic.

He hates the way the schools are being run.

He went to jail rather than pay taxes because he doesn't agree with the way the government operates.

He's a weirdo, a kook. He dresses funny and lives in a tumble-down shack way out in the woods.

He is Henry David Thoreau, the great New England philosopher who died more than a century ago, the subject of The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail now in rehearsal at the Maryville College Playhouse, under the direction of Mr. Thomas E. Jones assisted by Debra Branch.

The set, designed by Robert Hutchinson, is constructed of many-angled ramps, on which the characters ebb and flow to mark the shifts in locale and the changes in time. The lighting, and construction, by Ernest Foster, converts the stage into a dynamic field of life. The sound effects are combined with the forces on stage by use of Soliloquoy for Flute and String Orchestra by Bernard Rodgers.

Featured in the role of Henry David Thoreau is freshman Maryville student, Philip Gibson. His friend Ralph Waldo Emerson is portrayed by senior Mark Stoub, with John Thoreau played by senior Lloyd Kramer.

Presented in a fragmented style, the content moves back and forth in time, embracing many of the people and situations that influenced Thoreau. It is an extraordinary portrayal of a man that Lawerence and Lee call ". . .history's free-est human being." Thoreau was a man uncompromising in his quest for freedom, and this is best described at the close of the first act.

Informed that Thoreau is in jail for failure to pay his taxes, the powerful Dr. Ralph Waldo Emerson rushes to the aid of hsi young friend. But Emerson was not prepared for Thoreau's indignant certainty that being in jail represented a personal freedom.

WALDO: "Henry! Henry! What are you doing in jail????"

HENRY: "Waldo! What are you doing out of jail????"

And that is very much the substance of The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail. Tickets for the 8:15 p.m. performances may be obtained by visiting the campus Ticket Office. Tickets are $1.50.

TRIP TIME

As we all know, there is an acute and growing drug problem here on campus.

There appear to be two main reasons for their use at Maryville. The first group are bothered and harrassed by exams, term papers, book reviews, labs, etc. They also complain that there is no social life on campus and there is nothing to do. This group is also characterized by the groupishness of their efforts. . . "all my friends use it. . .why shouldn't I?" Most of the girls who use drugs on say, third floor Davis, are in this group as well as most of the other kids on campus. It is the thing to do, much like cocktail hour in either Lloyd, Pearsons, or Carnegie. In fact it is so much the thing to do that it is done in blatent disrespect for the semblence of rules that we do have around here. But most of this group is just trying to run, trying to escape, trying to forget about reality that is always staring them in the face.

The second group is what we will call the serious drug takers. They are following int he school of Aldous Huxley. This sensitive group, as Huxley, are not trying to escape, on the contrary they are hoping that they will experience the reality of something which will give their life some meaning. These feel, as Huxley did, that reason is not going to take us anywhere, and there is no reason to prohibit one from taking drugs, and use this as a help for them to have some kind of experience which one could hope would be optimistic.

But no matter which group one is in, the Echo believes that there is a real need for everyone to understand and know some of the facts about drugs, their use, and their aftereffects. For that reason we are publishing in this issue a partial list of some places where free or cheap information can be obtained. Maybe before you smoke the next time you might want to read the recent report by the American Medical Asosication in their April Journal. At least you will want to consider why it is that you need to go outside the world of reality to cope with the ptoblem of your existance. Who knows, maybe this says something big about what kind of a state man is really in.

to make "thorough, probing in depth reviews."

The Supreme Court decision has implications that reach far beyond Memphis, Tennessee and Overton Park. From now on, whenever remaining patches of parkland are threatened by bulldozers and cement, the man who cannot put a dollar sign on trees and grass will have somewhere to turn. HE now has something to back him up when he says that "feasible and prudent" does not mean "pave the park."

NUMBER ONE

Way back in November 1970, a harris poll conducted for the now defunct Public Broadcasting Environment Center turned up an interesting fact of no small significance for people who've been gouging and kicking in the "new" environmental battle for the past decade or so. When people were asked to volunteer what they felt were the two or three most serious problems facing their communities, pollution was mentioned most often (34%) followed by crime (25%) and drugs (14%).

This is a particularly significant milestone for those who jsut a few short years ago couldn't even draw flies with their pleas for environmental sanity. To them today's environmental fervor is a marked contrast to the old days (two or three years ago) when pollution stories appeared—seldom if at all—just under the bowling scores or "this dog nearly itched to death" ads.

Anything with a title like "A Survey of Public Attitudes Toward Urban Problems and Toward the Impace of Scientific and Technical Developments" is obviously concerned with more than just documenting pollution's rise to the top of the public's verbalized ills. The Survey actually covered two broad areas: 1) attitudes toward the seriousness of certain urban problems and their effect on the lives of city residents; and 2) attitudes toward the impact of scientific and technical developments on American society.

For those who are more than casually interested in exploring and or channeling this elusive creature called public opinion; the Survey makes interesting reading; perhaps even provides insight.

STEELE TO SING

Philip Steele, Affiliate Artist at Maryville College, will present two community programs this Saturday, May 8 at Midland Shopping Center in Alcoa.

Sponsored by the Merchant's Association, Mr. Steele will present a children's program at the Dogwood Theatre at 12 noon which will consist of a sing-talk. From 12:30—1:30 p.m. Saturday he will do a sing-talk on the parking lot at the shopping center.

SAVE MONEY —WRITE A LETTER

People are more likely to return a lost wallet if a letter found with it says that a previous finder had picked it up and was pleased to return it intact. In an experiment described in February Science Digest, a Columbia University group deliberately dropped wallets containing money on New York streets. Letters from fictional "previous finders" slipped into some of them led the real finder to assume this was the second time the wallet had been lost. When the letter was positive and friendly, 70 percent of the

There have been four Connoisseur Concerts so far this season, making a total of six by the end of the season. This program is made possible by the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra being chosen during 1970-71 to receive aid from the National Endowment for the ARts, Washington, D.C.

WHO'S WHO?

It all arrived in the mail the same day—two overdue bills, an overdraft notice from the bank, a draft notice from the Army, a sorrowful why-don't you-write-me love letter from my Aunt Samantha, and a letter from the National Student Register, the Who's Who of college students, proclaiming, as did my love letter from Uncle Sam (not to be confused with my Aunt Samantha) that We Want You.

After calling the post office to complain about receiving obscene mail (although the postman kept saying that a draft notice isn't classified as obscene mail), I sat down and contemplated the National Student Register's letter.

It's one of those form letters that says in large mimeoed type on the envelope "Personal," just so you'll quickly open it. So of course I did.

"Dear Student: You will be pleased to learn that your personal biographical sketch now is being prepared by the Editorial Board. . . .this nomination indicates that your activities fall within the scope of the national selection criteria established for inclusion in the forthcoming edition of The Register. Only a small number of students. . ."

Panic, paranoia, cynicism and skepticism simultaneously struck. How did they know about "my activities?" And what activities? I marched in a peace rally once from the campus to the State Capitol, but took a cab back home after the rally because my feet hurt. I flunked Biology I twice. Was that what rated my nomination for such a, as they refer to it, "prestigious publication?"

I figured it must be a joke, so I read on. The brochure that "Beth Harrison, Research Supervisor" sent me says that the publication is a "reference directory. . .valuable for researchers" and is a "valuable source of information concerning the style setters and the thought leaders of today and tomorrow."

It was after reading that I decided to call The Register and find out what was going on. I asked for Miss Harrison, Research Supervisor.

"You don't want to talk to her. I can help you," the male voice of Patrick Benfield, Office Manager, said.

"How do we get the names and addresses? We subscribe to every student newspaper and receive 50% of all student directories," he said, adding that only one out of every four nominees is chosen.

"This is not an honorary deal—although it's an honor to be in it. It's of use for reference. For recruiters. . ."

So I called several libraries to see whether they stock this work of reference. None of them carried the periodical. Some had never even heard of it. One librarian said, "We don't carry that sort of thing."

Deciding to go right to the top, I called the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C., the Father of all American Libraries, where I talked with a man from the reference department who made it quite clear he spoke as an individual and not as a representative of the library.

He laughed when I mentioned The Register. "Yes. We've had many inquiries from people who've been solicited. There's nothing illegal about it. It's just a matter of people being extremely gullible."

The Better Business Bureaus in three cities couldn't give me any information. But it was the Better Business Bureau in Baton Rouge, La., where The Register is published, that gave me some information.

"We have a small file on them," the lady told me. "In 1969 they refused to give us the name of their printer. We've had a lot of complaints from people who didn't receive their copies—but that was cleared up.

"Confidentially, "she said, "the book has no value other than that your name is in it. It's just one of those vanity publications."

A research manual? Vanity? $22.50? For recruiters? So what does all this mean? Why do people buy the book?

In a time when the job market is so tight, a student could be enticed into getting his name into The Register to become Discovered—a la the 1930 chorus girl elevated to overnight stardom—where some college recruiter says, "Hey, we need a highly-paid junior executive. Let's pick someone out of The National Student Register. Look under M. . ." And what follows? Fame fortune, success?

Unlikely. Recruiters in a tight-job-market world can find less expensive ways to recruit students than by spending $22.50 for a list of primising students.

It's vanity—a false sense of student and parental pride—that keeps sales moving. Although it is unfair to allure and mislead gullible students into thinking that a job could come from a random glance through a book it is the students' own fault. College students' emphasis has been taken off activities—third string quarterback and French Club Secretary—and has been put into thought; today the philosophy is that it's what you are rather than what you do that's important.

There's a who's-who vanity publication for everyone today—Who's Who in Baton Twirling, The Debutante Register ($49), Outstanding Teenagers of America, Outstanding College Athletes of America, to name a few—all of which turn who's who into a so what.

I have since discarded my letter from The National Student Register and have given more attention to my draft notice. At least I can be sure it's for real. And the Army really wants me.

Copeland Leads Convocation

Is it possible to be a relevant, learning community when the qualify of life in the world is undergoing a degrading process of uglification?

This question was raised by Dr. Joseph J. Copeland in an address delivered at last Monday's opening Convocation.

Dr. Copeland, newly arrived as a grandfather, cited James' "Quality of Life" in response. Instead of being a technical training ground, college should serve as a proving ground for one's own values. A college graduate should be able to do nothing specific upon graduation. Instead, he should seek to continue a liberal education. Eventually such humanists will succeed as today's age of science recognizes their need, stated Dr. Copeland.

Continuing, Dr. Copeland observed that in the article "From Yesterday to Tomorrow," the idea is stressed that reality is not found in an ivy-covered college atmosphere of abstractions. Refuting this thesis, Dr. Copeland asked, "What kind of life do we have without abstractions—abstractions like reason, due process, and academic freedom?" People must understand abstract values such as these to understand the unreality of a Vietnam, responded Dr. Copeland.

Then, Dr. Copeland stated that nations require more than technology; they must have spiritual guidelines. To obtain such a national value system, individuals must work out their own value systems. It is from colleges such as Maryville that leaders shaped by such value systems emerge.

"Become such people," concluded Dr. Copeland stressing the need to listen to the striving of life and hope that leads to purposeful objectives.

New Faces on Faculty

In addition to the 340 freshmen and transfer students this fall, Maryvillians will find nine new faces among the faculty.

Mrs. Thelma R. Bianco joins the art faculty as an instructor. She received her B.S. in education from Texas Tech University and her M.A. from Texas Woman's University. Besides having taught part-time at Brevard Community College in Florida, she has also taught in the public school systems of Texas and Florida.

The Department of Health and Physical Education has a new associate professor and Chairman, Dr. Lawerence A. Boroviak. He attended Air Force Technical School in Amarillo, Texas, and received his A.A. from Palm Beach Jr. College, his B.S. from Florida State and his M.A. from Eastern Kentucky University. This year he received his Ed. D. from the University of Tennessee.

Also joining the Health and Physical Education faculty, as an instructor and as assistant football coach, is Mr. Gereld Lee Hasty, a native of Rockingham, N.C. With a B.S. from East Carolina University and an M.A. from Appalachian State University in Boone, N.C., Mr. Hasty has served as assistant principal, as well has having taught and coached in North and South Carolina schools.

This year, Dr. Anne-Marie Fahr, a native of France, will serve as a part-time instructor in Political Science. She has a Diploma in Political Science and a Master of Law Degree from the University of Lyon. She will add to a doctorate in International Law from the University of Paris a Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Tennessee sometime this year.

Joining the community as a visiting professor of French is Dr. Evelyn U. Irving, a native of Buffalo. N.Y. She received her B.A. and M.A. from Florida State University and her Ph.D. from the University of Illinois. Dr. Irving has been director of several National Defense Education Act Spanish Institutes, and has recently served as professor of Spanish at Carson-Newman College.

Dr. Martin J. Mastroianni joins the faculty as a part-time instructor in Chemistry. His B.S. is from Worcester Polytechnic Institute, and his Ph.D. is from the University of Miami. A member of the American Chemical Society, Dr. Mastroianni served as a Post-doctoral Research Assistant at the University of Tennessee and Oak Ridge National Laboratories.

Mr. Andrew L. Miles will serve as an instructor in Education and as Assistant Director of the MC Environmental Education Center at Tremont. Mr. Miles attended Purdue University, where he studied Forestry. His B.S. is from East Tennessee State University, and he expects to receive his M.S. from the University of Tennessee in December. Mr. Miles has taught in the school systems of New Castle, Indiana, and Alcoa, Tennessee.

Mr. Claude Y. Stewart, Jr., joins MC as an instructor in Philosophy and Religion. A native of Tennessee, he received his B.S. from Carson-Newman College. His B.D. is from Harvard Divinity School, and he will receive a Th.D. degree from the same institute upon completion of his dissertation.

Mr. Donald V. Thompson, from Loudon, Tennessee, will serve as an instructor of Sociology. He received his A.A. from Hiwassee College and his B.S. and M.A. degrees from the University of Tennessee, where he has served as a graduate and teaching assistant.

The Echo plans more detailed introductions of these and other faculty and staff members in future issues of the paper.

ACC Charts Course for Year

The agenda for the All-College Council Workshop, held in Sutton Science Center on September 8-9, ranged from the adoption of a master schedule of meetings to a discussion of the quality of life at Maryville. As members of the Council met to plan for the 1971-72 school year, they heard reports on the enrollment, the financial picture, the student aid program, orientation plans, the expansion of the counseling program, the new faculty, and the use of campus facilities by off-campus groups. They evaluated the role of the Council, took steps to complete the committee organization, and listed major issues and areas of concern to be considered during the year.

Serving on the Council this year are seniors Ward Brooks, David Russell, and Janet Welton; juniors Susan Hayba Henderson and Carol Newill; sophomore Louise McNair; faculty members Dr. Blair, Dr. Bloy, Mr. Ramger, Dr. Stine, Dr. Swenson, and Dr. Walker; and administration and staff members Mr. Brahams, Dr. Copeland, Mr. Elia, Mr. Laster, Miss Lightfoot, and Dr. Willey. All except the junior representatives were present for all sessions. Miss Massey, co-ordinator of Social, Cultural, Recreational Life, and Mr. Harrison, co-ordinator of Religious Life, also participated. Dr. Copeland, chairman of the Council, and Ward Brooks, co-chairman, shared the presiding responsibilities.

To stimulate an honest evaluation of campus life, Dr. Copeland posed these questions: What is happening at Maryville? What might be happening that isn't? What relationship is there between our form of governance and what is happening or not happening? Where is the community life rich and full, and where is it weak?

From student members came observations that on the positive side are stimulating classes, satisfying personal relationships, and an evidence of sincere searching for values and a fuller spiritual life. An excitment among returning students, especially sophomores, was noted as an optimistic sign. One faculty member spoke of the vitality of last year's freshman class. Another observed that tensions on campus have become more creative within recent years, as faculty and students have become more rational in dealing with their differences.

A major weakness mentioned throughout the discussion was the breakdown in communication and the failure to use the Echo and other channels to full advantage in keeping the community informed. Regarding the existing council and committee structure, one student commented, "The form does not need changing; we need practice with the form we have." But the opinion was that no structure can be effective until every constituent is aware of its potential, and that such an awareness comes only through being well informed. Plans were made to refer to the newspaper staff recommendations for specific articles and series of articles on Council and committee activities.

Another problem of deep concern was the frantic pace at which most students, faculty, and staff seem to be operating. "It's inhuman," commented one staff member, "the way we drive ourselves." Faculty and students agreed. One solution offered was that the calendar be reexamined with an eye to lengthening vacations, particularly the spring vacation. Another suggestion was that the length of meetings be controlled.

Since the purpose of the workshop was not to solve all problems in two days, however, but to determine needs and priorities, the Council concluded its meeting by listing issues and areas of concern to be referred to the apprpriate committees for study and recommendations. A partial list includes comprehensive examinations, the calendar, the grading system for freshmen, a continuing education program, a master's program in environmental education, faculty load, initiation of preschool orientation at Tremont for all freshmen, women's hours, ramifications of the lowering of the legal age to 18, continued improvement of dining room service, and a more thorough analysis of the implications of the religious survey conducted last year.

MC Enrollment Increases

By Sarah Winbigler

While many other privately owned small colleges around the country are having difficulty filling their vacancies, Maryville College is enjoying the highest enrollment it has had since 1966.

A recent issue of "U.S. News & World Report" reveals that, on the whole, the nation's small colleges are failing, both financially and in enrollment. Maryville's Assistant Director of Admissions, William Laster, feels that there are several reasons that Maryville is managing to buck this trend.

One of Maryville's most important advantages, Mr. Laster feels, is its innovative curriculum. This is being updated constantly to meet the changing needs of today's students.

Maryville's admissions staff works year round recruiting students. Representatives of the college visit over 1,000 high schools each year to talk to interested students, and Maryville also sends representatives to regional meetings and conventions. Not only does Maryville make use of on-the-road recruiting methods, but each year the college schedules several guidance personnel conferences. At these two-day meetings, high school counselors are brought to the college to talk with the admissions staff and to gain a first-hand knowledge of what Maryville has to offer.

According to Mr. Laster, Maryville's primary selling point is its emphasis on the personal touch. This year prospective students received personal letters of acceptance for the first time. In fact, form letters are rarely used now; 90-95 per cent of all correspondance to prospective students is personal correspondance. Maryville honors all requests for information, and anyone who requests any type of information automatically receives a brochure. This year, Maryville ordered 30,000 general brochures and 6,000 posters, all designed to introduce as many people as possible to the college.

This year's enrollment is evidence that Maryville's efforts are quite effective, but the process of giving the college maximum exposure never stops, and the admissions office is already trying the acquaint this year's high school students the progressive learning experience of Maryville College.

How to Enlist

If you are new on campus (or got locked into a closet and never came out last year), a variety of organizations are around and ready to put your talents to good use. Some require WORK ... others are "booster" organizations with occasional functions, while others are "honorary." If someone has not already tagged you for one of the working ones, it was an oversight! The word is that membership is very much open in the following:

HIGHLANDER MARCHING BAND, Dan Stallings, director. Practice is scheduled for Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 4:00. During marching season, Dan says that you should count on an average of 9 hours per week to devote to band membership. If you tootle or beat anything, look him up or drop a note in his PO box. (He'll be grateful!)

CONCERT CHOIR, Harry H. Harter, director. Auditions were held earlier this week, but tenors, baritones and basses are usually welcomed after the deadline. Rehearsals are Tuesday and Thursday afternoons at 4:00 and Wed. evenings. If you missed out on the auditions, see Dr. Harter in the Fine Arts Center.

DEBATE & COMPETITIVE SPEECH SQUAD, Lucy H. Proffitt, director. Involves research and practice on campus to prepare for intercollegiate competition. Squad meetings are Tuesday and Thursday, 4:00 p.m., Room 203 of Theatre-Chapel Bldg. Plans this year include sponsorship of one national tournament in Individual Events on our campus, plus travel to 7 tournaments. Members are accepted with no experience but Mrs. P. has always dreamed of getting in a freshman or transfer who knows the difference between "negative" and "affirmative." If you are the answer to that dream, see her in her office, 2nd floor of the Theatre.

COLLEGE-COMMUNITY ORCHESTRA, Lee Kull, conductor. A growing organization under the leadership of a nationally-known string man. Brass, woodwinds, and percussion membership is generally from the Highlander Band, but if you are reasonably adept at drawing a bow across a string, see Lee in the FAC or put a note in his box.

PLAYHOUSE, Sue Drees, president. An organization for students who are in some way affiliated with the MC Theatre. Presents annual academy awards, sells tickets to plays, etc. Tom Jones, theatre director, is sponsor. Watch for posters announcing first meeting and tryouts for plays. Casting for "Twelfth Night" will be completed by press time, but the technical crew will still be looking for volunteers.

Communicating Community

With its new slogan of "Community through Communication," The Highland Echo begins a new year of publication.

While it is easy to dismiss this motto as trite sloganizing, "Community through Communication" expresses a new set of ideals and goals for the Echo.

Only through communication is there a second key to community. This key is the presentation of community goals. The Maryville College Statement of Purpose states the College "seeks to establish a community in which all activities — intellectual, religious, social, cultural, physical — are coordinated." The Echo hopes to present these goals.

A third key is creativity. Creativity is a necessity for all growth. Since Maryville College lacks an adequate outlet for literary and artistic expression, the Echo seeks to serve as a platform for creative writing.

Still another area in which the Echo can serve is to motivate the College community to improve its standards by stimulating discussion of all questions of concern.

Only by representing its entire constituency can the Echo serve a function of integrating the College community. The mutual recognition and mutual trust of everyone of its members promotes this community. The Echo seeks to give this recognition.

It is with these goals in mind that the Echo seeks to promote the Maryville College ideal of community by following the idea of community through communication.

Highlanders Want You

By Bev Bacon

The Highlander Band Director, Dan Stallings, is looking for instrumentalists at MC who would like to join the band. Practice for the group is every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday from 4:00-5:30 in the Fine Arts Center. Mr. Stallings is anxious to have as many members as possible, and would like to extend a special invitation to the freshmen and transfer students.

Band members' first performance will be on September 25th at the Maryville-Georgetown football game. Other activities for the year include half-time shows at all the home football games and at the Emory and Henry game in Virginia, a performance at the opening of the newly remodeled downtown Maryville on September 28th, two concerts, and a spring tour.

Many of the band's performances will be done in a uniform of Scottish design because of the group's "Highlander Band" name. The women and drummers will appear in authentic kilt uniforms of the Hay Clan while the remaining members will wear the Scots' Guard uniform. Also dressed in the Scottish design will be majorettes Gay Wingfield of Jacksonville, Florida, and Debbie Branch of Lenoir, North Carolina, who is currently Miss Blount County.

Any other questions which students may have can be talked over with any of the following 1971-72 band officers:

President-Dale White
Vice President-Lynn Brown
Secretary-Leslie Bacon
Treasurer-Robert Millner

Maryville, Tennessee - Radio City, USA

By Phyllis Garner

If you are among Maryville's new students and are away from home for perhaps the first time, you will probably miss the companionship of your hometown radio stations. But if you are from middle America, you may not yet have to. With a fairly good radio, you can pick up many out of state stations at night. You will be happy to discover that WLS and WCFS from Chicago can be heard with ease in the evening. WOWO from Ft. Wayne, Indiana, and WSAI from Cincinnati are two of the strongest signals on the dial. You can easliy pick up WKLO from Louisville and the "Sports Voice of St. Louis."

For those of you from New England the only strong signal you can get is WCBS from New York. But if that is not really your favorite wavelength, you can always listen to some of the local stations.

Three Knoxville stations offer programs for the rock listener. WNOX (990), the strongest of the three, was the first radio station west of the Appalachian Mountains. WKGN (1340), featuring the gay caballero of the radio world, Buree Beautiful, offers strong competition to the well established WNOX, and recently WROL (1490) has aimed its beams towards the young.

If Rhythm and Blues is your thing, WJBE (1430) can give you a program to satisfy your musical tastes.

For those of you with more conservative tastes, Knoxville offers WATE (620), WBIR (1240), and WBIR-FM (103.5), and Maryville adds WEAG (1470).

Country Western fans can listen to WIVK (850), WIVK-FM (107.7) and WGAP (1400).

Classical music lovers will be very pleased with the University of Tennessee's voice of the air, WUOT. Besides classical and jazz music, WUOT offers other programs of interest such as World Theatre. If you would like a complete program for WUOT, write WUOT, 1345 Circle Drive, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tennessee 37916, and enclose one dollar.

Friends and Carole King

By Tom Coe

Winter, spring, summer, or fall
All you have to do is call
And I'll be there
Ain't it good to know that you've got a friend

Carole King

Friends are something to be valued more than life. Only in each other can we realize our human potential. Only here is the shelter from the insanity of the outside and only in our friends can we see what Jesus was talking about when he sopke of Love - the love that goes on in the community. One thing about this college-age generation is that they create real open and honest friendships that bridge everything; friendships that are in part a reaction to the insanity of the world and in general to its hostility towards human beings, but most important the sort of friendships that are rarely found in these people's parents.

Carole King writes songs about people. Exploring the depths of human relationships she shows the pain, the love, the sorrow, and the joy of human beings attempting something that their parents apparently have forgotten. Friendship has taken on a new urgency in an age of Kent State, Jackson State, the war, the Maryville Two, and the rotten mess in general. If the world has denied you the right to be human then it's only in your friends that you can be free. Carole King senses the importance of it all in the face of tomorrow.

Her work too is an intensely feminine expression. One cannot help but get the feel of a strong, emotional, beautiful woman at work in her two records Writer and Tapestry. The songs are so highly personal it is almost an emotional embarassment to listen. Yet, since they get at the essence of human relationship, each song becomes something personal for each of us. Cozy is the word one could attach to the feeling she emotes; one gets the feeling that she or he is the only person in the world with this record.

Listen to Carole King. She's forgotten more about love than Erich Segal will ever know. Think real hard about your friends and for God's sake (literally) tell them that you love them if you do. E. M. Forster wrote on friendship:

I hate the idea of causes, and if I had to choose between betraying my country and betraying a friend, I hope I should have the guts to betray my country.

Test Dates For Teachers

PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY. September 13. College seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of the four different test dates announced today by Educational Testing Service, a nonprofit, educational organization which prepares and administers this testing program.

New dates for the testing of prospective teachers are: November 13, 1971, and January 29, April 8, and July 15, 1972. The tests will be given at nearly 500 locations throughout the United States, ETS said.

Results of the National Teacher Examinations are used by many large school districts as one of several factors in the selection of new teachers and by several states for certification or licensing of teachers. Some colleges also require all seniors preparing to teach to take the examinations. The school systems and state departments of education which use the examination results are listed in an NTE leaflet entitled "Score Users" which may be obtained by writing to ETS.

On each full day of testing, prospective teachers may take the Common Examinations which measure their professional preparation and general educational background and a Teaching Area Examination which measures their mastery of the subject they expect to teach.

Prospective teachers should contact the school systems in which they seek employment, or their colleges, for specific advice on which examinations to take and on which dates they should be taken.

The "Bulletin of Information for Candidates" contains a list of test centers, and information about the examinations, as well as a Registration Form. Copies may be obtained from college placement officers, school presonnel departments, or directly from National Teacher Examinations, Box 911, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

Two In Family

WASHINGTON (AP) — To assure the safety of this planet, the earth's inhabitants must come to regard "more than two children per family as a sin against man and a violation of the will of God for our socity," Rev. David O. Poindexter, a United Methodist official, testified before the U.S. Commission on Population Growth and the American Future.

First Impressions

By Becky Buchannan

This year's freshmen seem to be having no trouble getting accustomed to the madness known as college life. Participation in all scheduled activities has been enthusiastic, as well as in some activities not specifically cited by the program committees. Once the sad, yet excited goodbyes were said by parents and students it did not take long for the atmosphere to progress from nervous arrival to the laughing eagerness among new friends. By Sunday afternoon's Splash Party at the swimming pool new acquaintances were being greeted like old friends and arrangements were shouted over a game of water basketball to meet later for Sunday evening picnic supper.

In the course of conversation with one Davis Hall freshman formerly of Harrisonburg, Virginia, the most outstanding thing noted since arriving at Maryville was that homesickness had not yet struck. Having been impressed with a previous visit to Maryville, this particular freshman never applied to any other college.

Having heard nothing but glowing reports of Senior Counselors, RAs, and Sophomore Aides from freshman, the only conclusion that can be drawn is that Maryville is in for some grand relevations, renovations, and just plain good times this year.

Workshop Held

A twelve-hour workshop at the Environmental Education Center at Tremont on Tuesday, September 7, marked the official opening of the school year for the faculty and staff. The program included announcements, introduction of new faculty members, reports on topics of general interest, group discussions, and periods of recreation and fellowship.

Mr. Claude Stewart, Jr., new member of the Philosophy and Religion Department, was in charge of the devotional period. President Copeland, Dr. Willey, and Mr. Brahams introduced the main topic for the workshop: "Presenting the Picture of the College as It Is and Should Be — the Southern Association Report." They discussed the status of the self-study report now underway and the assumptions within which the final report and its projections must be written.

Groups then formed to discuss the major areas upon which the report will focus. Discussions were led by the chairman in each area: Purpose, by Dr. Walker; Organization and Administration, by Dr. Willey; Faculty, by Mrs. Largen; Financial Resources, by Mr. Smith; Library, by Dr. Cartlidge; and Student Personnel, by Mr. Ramger and Mrs. Schoen. The program concluded with a session in which each group presented its findings.

Members of the ad hoc committee responsible for planning the workshop were Mrs. Beck, Dr. Lewis, Mrs. Proffitt, Mr. Ramger, Dr. Stine, and Dr. Willey.

Greek Odyssey '71

Plans for Greek Odyssey '71 are nearing completion, according to Dr. Walker and Dr. Blair, sponsors of the history-literature interim project to be conducted in London and Greece. The Knoxville travel agent, working in conjunction with London and Athens travel bureaus, has completed a tentative itinerary that calls for three days in London and approximately two weeks in Greece and the Greek islands, with a two-day stop in Lisbon on the return trip. The approximate cost will be $800.

This announcement comes in response to a number of inquiries received during the summer as to whether the project had materialized. By June 1 enough students had registered and paid the $50 deposit to insure the trip. Openings remain, however, for interested freshmen and transfer students. Full details may be obtained from the interim booklet published last spring and from talking with either Dr. Blair or Dr. Walker, who can supply additional information about the individual projects and travel details.

The schedule calls for leaving Maryville on Tuesday, November 23, and arriving in London the following day. Arrangements have been made for a full day of guided sightseeing in London and some leisure time for individual interests, as well as time for a study of Greek artifacts in the British Museum. From London the group will fly to Athens, which will be the base for tours to Corinth, Delphi, Mycenae, and other points of particular literary and historical significance on the Greek mainland. Crete and Mikonos are among the islands on the itinerary. The tour will leave Athens for Lisbon on December 11 and arrive back in the United States on December 13.

Film Used in New Curriculum

St. Louis, Mo.-(I.P.) - A completely new approach to the traditional freshman curriculum which will make unprecedented use of films as a basic instructional medium will begin this month at St. Louis University. The goal of the program is ultimate academic synthesis.

The new pprogram will take an interdisciplinary approach to the subjects normally covered in the freshman year, relating each subject to a series of 12 motion pictures called Freshman Film Themes.

Making the announcement of the new program the Rev. John W. Padberg, S. J., academic vice president, said "This is a whole new way of looking at the freshman's educational requirements. It is a way of opening up to the students an expperimental and creative approach to the traditional art and communication staple of the freshman curriculum."

The experimental program which will affect virtually all of the University's 1000 freshmen was approved by Project 21, the study to redesign the University to prepare students for life in the 21st century. That study has been in progress for over a year and is funded by a Danforth Foundation grant.

The program is divided into four main academic structures. The first and most comprehensive, involves common screenings for all of the freshmen. The second involves courses open only to freshmen. The third is a documentary study that expands the program into the upper classes, and the fourth is a "mini-course" designed primarily as a service to teachers and students.

The interdisciplinary program will integrate basic speech, English and possibly other courses by the common study of several films. It will not be a study of the film as art or the study of film production but an approach which integrates the student's whole educational experience with the medium he relates to best.

All the freshmen in the basic English, speech and history courses will see 12 motion pictures in a series called Freshman Film Themes. In English I this will replace the outside reading list.

The Rev. Joseph G. Knapp, S. J., chairman of the faculty group that developed the program, gave an example of the way it would work. "Unlike the film programs at universities like Stanford, UCLA, or Northwestern, the film program of St. Louis University provides an integration of all the disciplines of the freshman educational experience.

"For example, the citizen of the University is a single student who is enrolled in English 1 from 8 to 9 a.m., in History 1 from 9 to 10, and in Speech 10 from 10 to 11, and often ends up with files of information which are not interrelated.

"The fact that he will be seeing the same film and that the same film will be interpreted from the point of view of expository discourse, from the point of view of speech communication, or from the point of view of several other disciplines will provide him with a synthesis that no other program can."

Freshman Face Crucial Period

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (I.P.) - Students entering college face a "crucial period," Dr. Frederick W. Coons, director of the Psychiatric Di sion of the Student Health Service at Indiana University, believes.

"We are who we are because of what we have been taught," Dr. Coons says. This is his basic premise. Man's uniqueness comes from his ability to learn.

When a student enters college, what he has learned may be challenged. Students are bombarded by different values and beliefs. College involves a reworking of personality, Dr. Coons says.

After early childhood, when basic personality is formed, he explains, there is a fairly stable period until adolescence. Adolescence is the first period of redoing of personality. Then, there is another fairly quiet period. College brings about a second reworking.

Dr. Coons discusses five developmental tasks which college students may face:

-Changing from a child-parent relationship to an adult-adult relationship with parents. This task often involves an ambivalent situation for students, Dr. Coons says. For example, they want to be free of parental control, but are satisfied to be financially dependent.

-Establishing a sexual identity. Students often worry because they have different schedules of development, Dr. Coons says. They see only two alternatives—heterosexual or homosexual.

If a freshman has not had many dates or is not very interested in dating, he may panic and think he is not normal, when he is merely at an earlier stage of development, Dr. Coons says.

-Cresting a value system. In college, Dr. Coons says, a student meets all kinds of people with many different values. A student's own system may collapse under the pressure.

One alternative—usually temporary—which some students choose, is the adoption of a new and different set of values, Dr. Coons says. He defends this temporary substitution—inappropriate as it may seem—because it keeps students from collapsing completely and gives them time to develop their own values.

-Establishing true intimacy with a person outside the family.

Students may have problems, Dr. Coons says, in distinguishing between feelings and behavior in man-woman relationships. They may not realize that "sex" is not the same as "closeness."

Dr. Coons says that group therapy is often useful in helping students develop personal relationships.

-Choosing a career. College students also have to choose a life style, Dr. Coons says. Deciding on a career is not the end of the process, he says, because there is often a wide range of choices within a field.

New Staff

By Alvin Baker

Along with several new faculty members and the usual new freshmen, this fall MC welcomes to its staff new dorm Residents, an Admissions Counselor and a Health and Physical Education secretary.

Beginning her first year at Maryville as Head Resident in Lloyd Hall is Miss Mary O. Keister. Miss Keister, formerly a Head Resident at UT, attended Radford College and Roanoke College, both in Virginia, before becoming a teacher and later an employee of N & W Railroad.

Now serving as Head Resident in Dorm I is Mrs. Jean Griffith Davies. Mrs. Davies, a native of Kentucky, attended Maryville College and later received her B.A. from Alverno College in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Dorm III begins this year with another couple, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Semple. The Semples are both recent graduates of Maryville College.

In the Admissions Office the not-so-new face is that of Robert N. Kennedy. Mr. Kennedy received his B.A. from Maryville only this past spring after having interrupted his college career with 3 years in the U.S. Navy weather service.

From Crawford & Associates, Inc., in Atlanta MC has acquired the services of Mrs. Eda M. Clanton as secretary in the Department of Health and Physical Education. Mrs. Clanton joins the Department of Health and Physical Education for the first full year in their new building.

Congress Returns to Fall Backlog

WASHINGTON (WCNS) — Congress faces a backlog of 39 major legislative items and five appropriation measures as it returns to work after a four-week recess. In the words of House Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (R-Mich.), "While time marches, the Congress crawls."

At the top of the list is President Nixon's crash program to get the economy going. The three measures Congress must approve are: (1) repeal of the ten percent auto excise tax, (2) increased personal income tax exemptions to $700 starting next year instead of in 1973, and (3) a ten percent job development tax credit for one year and five percent thereafter to encourage industrial investment and more jobs.

The next priority item is reactivation of the draft until mid-1973. The President's plan for a phase-out of the draft after 31 years' operation (with a year's lapse in 1947-48) was passed by the House and awaits Senate approval. The Mansfield amendment requiring American troops to leave Vietnam within nine months now reads as a "sense of the Congress" resolution that the troops be withdrawn as soon as possible — language that may displease the Senate, although it won House approval on a 298-104 roll-call vote.

Date set for G.R.E.

PRINCETON, N.J. — Educational Testing Service announced today that undergraduates and others preparing to go to graduate school may take the Graduate Record Examinations on any of six different test dates during the current academic year.

The first testing date for the GRE is October 23, 1971. Scores from this administration will be reported to the graduate schools around December 1. Students planning to register for the October test date are advised that applications received by ETS after October 5 will incur a $3.50 late registration fee. After October 8, there is no guarantee that applications for the October test date can be processed.

The other five test dates are December 11, 1971, January 15, February 26, April 22, and June 17, 1972. Equivalent late fee and registration deadlines apply to these dates. Choice of test dates should be determined by the requirements of graduate schools or fellowships to which one is applying. Scores are usually reported to graduate schools five weeks after a test date.

The Graduate Record Examinations include an Aptitude Test of general scholastic ability and Advanced Tests measuring achievement in 19 major fields of study. Full details and registration forms for the GRE are contained in the 1971-72 GRE "Information Bulletin." The "Bulletin" also contains forms and instructions for requesting transcript service on GRE scores already on file with ETS. This booklet is available on most campuses or may be ordered from: Educational Testing Service, Box 955, Princeton, New Jersey 08540; Educational Testing Service, 1947 Center Street, Berkeley, California 94704; Educational Testing Service, 960 Grove Street, Evanston, Illinois 60201.

Writer's Workshop

Do you write poetry? Or short stories? Or plays? Do you sometimes finish writing a paper and then decide its style leaves something to be desired? Have you ever wished that your peers would give you an unbiased estimate of your literary efforts? Then you may be interested in the Writing Workshop to be conducted each Monday and Tuesday at the C-period in Anderson 206. Attendance is voluntary and no credit is involved.

SPORTS

Football Preview

Under the direction of new head coach Lauren Kardatzke and assistant Gerald Hasty, the 1971 Scot football team concluded preseason drills with a much improved offense and a rash of minor injuries. With the addition of Phil Ziglar and Larry McDowell at offensive tackles the team possesses a solid offensive line which should help to produce more points than in the past. Rounding out the offense are: Joe Kozel at tight end, Mike Butler at split end, Earl McMahan and Dan Blevens at guards, Chuck Cary at center, Joe Costner at quarterback, Randy Minor at flanker, and Robert Calloway and Bill Corbett at runningbacks. People who will probably see a good deal of action are Leon Hart at quarterback, Bill Baggett and freshman Ed McFadden, runningbacks, Dean Herden and Steve Loveday, a transfer from Ole Miss, at receivers and Donnie McDaniel at guard.

The defense should remain as strong as last year, as the only loss was C. F. Smith at tackle. The starting lineup should be: George Boronow and Mark Hodge at tackles, Mike Parks and Ondis Bible at ends, Tom Ickes and David Warwick at outside linebackers, David Clinton and Mark Humphrey at the inside linebackers, Larry Stephens, Bernard Drewary and either Steve Gordon or Butler at defensive backs. Some freshmen who have been impressive and should see some action are Mike Dykes at defensive tackle and Jeff Hamilton at defensive halfback.

On the whole, the Scots have the potential to win big this year. The keys to a successful season would be how well the offense performs, the return to top performance of some of the injured players such as McDowell, Clinton, Parks, and Corbett, and the leadership provided by the seniors.

Invisible Prayers

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Signs of an "invisible church of prayer" have turned up in Sweden, Berndt Gustafson, director of the Religious Sociology Institute, reports.

In studying religious trends in the country, he says he placed classified newspaper advertisments a year ago asking readers to send him their prayers. He says he has been overwhelmed with continuing responses, with the prayers reflecting the "highest ideals" and "deepest torments' of men.

Goals at Yale

New Haven, Conn.- (I.P.) - President Kingman Brewster, Jr., of Yale has appointed a special five-member faculty committee to make a year-long study and present recommendations on what Yale's "undergraduate education ought to be for thee next twenty years."

The committee is charged with making an intensive study of the "objectives and functions of college education" and will be making specific recommendations on such critical issues as to cutting down on the four years now required for a bachelor's degree.

In his instructions to the committee, President Brewster emphasized that "no one of you is 'representative' of your rank, or field, or other 'constituency'. Indeed, you collectively have no constituency, except your own vision about what undergraduate education ought to be for the next 20 years or so.

"It will be time enough for 'legitimate' bodies of colleagues and students to receive and chew up your report when you submit it a year hence. Youu can be concerned with feasibility, especially financial feasibility, but you should not worry about agreement or disagreement.

"Your mandate," the Yale president continued, "is intended to be very broad and, I hope, fundamental. We badly need a coherent, purposive articulation of the goals of education at Yale for those between the high school and post baccalaureate careers. This will include a re-thinking of the objectives and functions of college education.

"You are bound to focus sharply on the cirriculum. You will also inevitably be concerned with the appropriate relationship between the undergraduate and post graduate education. This will include the question of how long it should take to obtain a baccalaureate.

"Also, given Yale's residential facilities, you will have to consider the curricular and extra-curricular role of the residential colleges.

"Finally, in the light of your vision of what undergraduate education ought to be in Yale University, you will have to address yourselves to the question of the optimum size of undergraduate enrollment; and the role of sex, career interest, and personal and intellectual potential in the admission and recruitment of students."

The new Presidential Committee is taking on a broad, intensive study of Yale undergraduate education that was last done on a somewhat similar scale after World War II under the direction of the Dean of Yale College, the late William C. DeVane.

This led to changes that are now part of the regular undergraduate operation: the admission of women undergraduates, the broadening of the admissions policy, the decentralization of the Dean's office into the residential colleges, and a closer relationship between the undergraduate and graduate schools especially as its permits qualified undergraduates to start on graduate courses during the four-year baccalaureate program.

"YOU'RE A GOOD MAN CHARLIE BROWN"

Playhouse Presents "Charlie Brown"

The enormously popular "Peanuts" characters have been transmuted from the widely-read comic strip to the musical "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown," which opened Wednesday, and is playing for four performances. The names of two of the strip's characters were used as code names by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for the famous moon-flight of the Apollo 10 mission in 1969.

The lunar landing module was called Snoopy, after "the only dog with flight experience" — because in the strip Snoopy is always doing aerial combat with World War I's Red Baron — and the missions's command ship was coded as Charlie Brown, a defiance of all omens, since in the cartoon Charlie Brown is a constant loser of ballgames and everything else.

On the moon-flight, Charlie Brown was magnificiently safe and successful — as is this musical made from the comic strip.

Thomas E. Jones is directing this phenomenally popular musical that has brought to the stage the tender and often touching as well as funny sense of the ridiculous that has made "Peanuts" the most popular comic strip in American history. Mr. Jones is assisted by Mrs. T. C. Gray Jr., Dan Stallings as the musical director and Mrs. Mark Owen as choreographer.

Soldier donates pay

GLENDALE, Calif. (AP) — "Here is my combat pay for a month which was given for helping kill people in Vietnam. Please use it to help people to stop some of the feelings and beliefs of mankind which allow us to kill each other."

The message, and a $6 month's pay to U.S. soldier John F. Watts, came to the First Unite Methodist Church here. It was forwarded to the denomination's Board of Missions, which in turn gave it to the Martin Luther King Hopemobile, an interracial peace project in New York.

Marivs Speaks

By Alice Hook

This week's CIV, sponsored by Alpha Gamma Sigma, recognized student achievement in the area of scholarship. Alpha Gamma Sigma is Maryville's equivalent to Phi Beta Kappa. Each year the society brings a noted scholar to the campus.

Dr. Richard C. Marius, the guest speaker, is assistant professor of history at the University of Tennessee and the author of the best-selling novel, "The Coming of Rain."

A native Tennessean, Dr. Marius received his Bachelor's degree from U.T. and then continued his studies at Yale. He earned his Ph.D. from Yale in 1962.

As a graduate student, Marius won several high honors. He was awarded the Rotary Foundation Fellowship in France in 1956-57 and was later given a Rockefeller Doctoral Fellowship at Yale.

Author of several articles in professional journals, Dr. Marius is a member of Phi Kappa Phi and the American Historical Association.

His novel, "The Coming of Rain," was recognized as an "intricate, finely wrought work of fiction and a first novel by a new southern writer who gives every promise of developing into a major novelist." The book has also been made into a movie. Dr. Marius is now hard at work on his second novel, "Up on the Mountain."

Dan Kinsinger Returns Doctor

Dan Kinsinger, assistant professor of music at Maryville College, has just returned from the University of Illinois in Urbana where he defended his doctoral thesis, "The Seven Song Collections of Gabriel Faure," last Thursday, September 16.

Mr. Kinsinger, who has taught at Maryville College since 1954, thus completed the last of his requirements for the doctor of musical arts degree which the University of Illinois will confer on him October 15.

Mr. and Mrs. Kinsinger and their three children live at 203 Indiana Ave.

Dr. Lucy (Melissa Collins) treats patient, Charlie Brown (Phil Gibson), in recent Playhouse performance of "You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown."

New College Approach

Sarasota, Fla. - (I.P.) - A unique way to meet heavy student demands for popular courses without sacrificing the intellectual stimulation which comes from small seminars has been developed by a New College literature professor.

Called a "Reading Journal," the course format designed by Dr. Robert H. Knox Jr., involves students filing, in a common journal or notebook, papers they have written concerning a list of books each has chosen to read during a term.

This notebook is conveniently kept in the student center where each student in the course may read each paper as it is added to the file, appending his own comments to the work of every other student throughout the term.

Because professors at this college sharply limit the size of their classes and give many individual tutorials, the claims on their time are strenuous even though the student-faculty ratio here is only 11 to one.

Although savings of faculty time and energy together with fulfillment of the students' need to express their interests in and reactions to books they were interested in were the primary reasons Dr. Knox chose the course format, there were unexpected dividends. These included increased interaction, excitement and responsibility reported by the professor and the students involved.

More interaction than they were accustomed to in the ordinary classroom was reported by students enrolled in the course, with more real exposure to different points of view.

Frankness and increased honesty, both with each other and in their approach to their own written work and reading, become the rule. Other students found it easier to express themselves in writing than they might have done face-to-face, in the classroom.

Emanating from the Journal was real excitement, for as one student said: "It was as if you had published a book and were waiting for reviews," referring to expected comments from fellow students on a paper filed in the journal.

Still another result was a strong sense of personal identity, so often lost in large classrooms. "In other classes, you sometimes feel as though you were just another body. But in the Journal, you can comment because you know you are somebody."

Willey Speaks at Child Services

The annual meeting of the Child and Family Services of Blount County was held Monday night at Traveler's Restaurant and the speaker of the evening was Dr. Malcolm M. Willey, academic executive officer of Maryville College. Dr. Willey's topic was "The Role of Child and Family Services in a Changing World."

To introduce his theme, Dr. Willey described the family life of his grandmother, 150 years ago. "Her round of life was family centered," Dr. Willey said, "It focused on her household tasks, the family prayer circle after the evening meal, her children with their books, companionship and comfort for her husband. It was a narrow world in most respects, but within its confines everything held together in a coherent and integrated whole. Life had a meaning in her family, and it sustained her. Within her family she found satisfaction and contentment."

Dr. Willey then sketched some of the social changes that have taken place since his grandmother's day, and indicated how these have affected the structure of the family. "One by one," he said, "the functions that held the family together as a compact group have been shifted to other social agencies or have been greatly modified within the family itself." No longer is the family the center of the economic or educational life of society. Its religious functions have been shifted. Increasingly the child learns his social values outside of the home. What functions, then, do remain family centered?

Dr. Willey named two. "The family is still the place where the early rearing of the child is important, and it will remain so." The family is also the institution within which for the married couple companionship and sexual expression are provided.

"However," he added, "the social values relating to sexual expression are undergoing profound change in our time, and will undergo further change in the years ahead." He pointed to the changing standards that prevail in current motion pictures, which unquestionably influence young people and their ideas concerning sex, marriage and the family. "But marriage as an institution is here to stay," Dr. Willey emphasized. "Even though divorces increase, all studies show that divorced persons tend to remarry. It is not marriage they are rejecting, only a specific marriage partner."

All of this has direct importance for a social agency dealing with the problems of children and the family, Dr. Willey concluded. "Even though further social change will modify still further the functions of the family and probably weaken still more the ties that have held the family together, families will continue to constitute a basic social institution. But the problems of the members will multiply, and the need for such agencies as Child and Family Services will actually increase. "The patterns of their service will change," Dr. willey said, "but the need for their services will multiply. The imperative need is that those responsible for the policies and programs of these agencies recognize the impact that social change is bringing about, and adapt their programs to them, rather than cling to values and expectations that worked in grandmother's time, but are no longer relevant in the light of modern social change."

Carl Koontz, a member of the board of directors for Child and Family Services, presided over the meeting which was attended by approximately 50 people. Child and Family Services is one of the agencies supported by the United Fund.

Keep Those ID's Handy

By Nancy Rankin

Last Tuesday, September 14, Maryville College began checking student identification cards in the college dining hall.

Stated reasons for this switch from the past are budget problems arising from persons eating without paying. This practice dictates some type of system to insure that each plate goes to a student who has paid his fees. According to Dr. Malcolm Willey, identification upon entering the dining hall is a necessity.

Specific procedures, after a file is made at fall registration, involve daily checking of cards. Forgotten ID's result in immediate payment or dept to the Treasurer's Office. No plans are at this time being formulated to alter the present arrangements.

Identification cards are used at athletic events where the number of students and financial standing require a card check. Performing Artists Series are also free while ID swaps in the student center and physical education complex insure the safe return of equipment. The bookstore, unable to maintain contact with all campus faces, must demand identification in cashing checks.

Replacing an ID card requires a visit to the office of Student Personnel. For the fee of one dollar, a temporary card is issued and a new ID manufactured within days.

Southern Odyssey Offered For Interim

A week-long trip to points of literary interest in the Deep South will highlight the Southern Odyssey being offered as an interim by Dr. Elizabeth Fowler and Mrs. Herma Cate of the English Department. Designed primarily to acquaint students with the wealth of literature that has come out of the South, this travel-study interim will concentrate on such writers as Thomas Wolfe in Ashville, North Carolina; Edgar Allan Poe, William Gilmore Simms, Henry Timrod, John Pendleton Kennedy in Charleston, South Carolina; Augustus Baldwin Longstreet in Augusta, Georgia; Joel Chandler Harris and Margaret Mitchell in Atlanta, Georgia; Booker T. Washington in Tuskeegee, Alabama; Helen Keller in Tuscumbia, Alabama; Eudora Welty in Jackson, Mississippi; William Faulkner in Oxford, Mississippi; the Fugitives (Robert Penn Warren, Donald Davidson, Allen Tate, John Crowe Ransom) in Nashville; George Washington Harris (Sut Lovingood), Carmack McCarthy, Wilma Dykeman, and Jane Merchant in Knoxville.

The students will spend the first week of the interim on campus in preparation for the trip—getting acquainted with the work of the different writers, the geographical setting, biographical information, and person's research. In addition, one paper of approximately 1200 words will be required for satisfactory completion of the interim. Library resources and possibly a paperback or two will furnish sufficient reading material.

Expense of the trip will be approximately $106, including transportation, lodging (of Holiday Inn quality), and admission fees.

The novelty of this Southern Odyssey will appeal to students from states north of the Mason-Dixon line, and the indepth study of familiar figures will justify the southerners' pride in their literary heritage.

Editorial

Individuals Versus ID's

After the ideal of individual self-dignity of last Monday's opening Convocation, Maryville students were rudely awakened to reality the following morning when they began having their Identification Cards checked at every meal.

Perhaps trivial to some, to others the checking of these cards reflects the trend of society away from humanistic ideals of Maryville College. This trend is to reduce a person from his status as a unique individual to that of a plastic card.

Granted, the purpose of introducing ID checks is economically sound. Feeding of non-students at the cost of paying members of the community is financially inefficient, to say the least. Any measure of relief to an already overstretched Dining Hall budget should be welcomed.

However, when financial efficiency is discussed, the Echo feels it must question the efficiency of paying the salary of two people merely to check ID cards three times daily. Is it cheaper to prevent an undetermined number of non-students from eating in the Dining Hall by paying guards at the door, or is it cheaper to feed non-students?

Regardless of economic considerations, the ultimate price of these checks is debasement of the individual. Unlike the debasement practiced by the military, this harrassment does not produce immediate anger. Instead a slow, lingering, and steadily increasing resentment toward established authority results.

While the College has a larger enrollment this year than in several past and while the year is just beginning, such measures may be a necessity of the moment. However, to make ID checks permanent is to stray from the stated values of Maryville College, and this wandering cannot be condoned.

Societies Begin Fall Rush

Chi Beta, Kappa Phi, Theta Epsilon, and Alpha Sigma — these are the four societies which exist on the Maryville Campus.

The main purpose of the societies is to provide opportunities for social activities and to provide a means through which the student may give service to the civic and college communities.

Chi Beta and Theta Epsilon are the two girls' societies and they each have their respective brother societies, Kappa Phi and Alpha Sigma.

Many interesting activities are sponsored during the year by these four groups working separately and together. Activities are now being planned for rush week which starts out with Theta Epsilon and Alpha Sigma rush on Monday and Tuesday nights, Sept. 27 and 28. Chi Beta and Kappa Phi rush will take place on Thursday night Sept. 30 and on Saturday night October 2. Specific times and places have not yet been decided on but signs will be posted all over campus so students should be on the look out for them.

Rush activities are supposed to be secret but just to give an idea of what will be going, last year Chi Beta had a Greek night which included a humorous skit and also sponsored a hayride, Theta Epsilon held a tea and a style show, and Kappa Phi and Alpha Sigma both had smokers in their rooms above the student center.

Now Town Starts Tuesday

Rejuvenated downtown Maryville will be officially opened next Tuesday, Sept. 28, 1971. Governor Dunn and other dignatiries are expected to be present. Various groups from the College plan to participate in the celebraton of "Now Town!"

Following the ceremonies, the Maryville Kiwanis Club and Maryville College are combining to host a luncheon for the Governor and other officials. The new Health and Physical Education Building is the site for the luncheon.

Vets Get Checks Sooner

Two million veterans and servicemen expected to enroll under the G.I. Bill this fiscal year will get their first monthly checks sooner under a Veterans Administration "package" plan.

The agency said the plan will reduce delays due to the school or individual failing to send it required information by providing at one time all the information needed to pay education allowances.

Instructions on this plan, which has been tested successfully in the agency's PREP program (for military personnel), are being sent to VA field offices, it was pointed out.

The plan calls for a veteran to submit a copy of his separation document, proof of dependency, and application for education benefits to VA at the same time, prior to enrollment. Forms for this information are available at all VA offices.

If a veteran enrolls at a school before applying for G.I. Bill education benefits, he should present these completed forms to the school and ask it to forward them to VA in one package when the school certifies his enrollment.

VA officials suggest also that the veteran check later with his school to make sure his forms and certification of enrollment have been sent to VA.

Although cooperation of schools is voluntary, school officials are as concerned as VA that veteran-students get their monthly checks as soon as possible VA explained.

Veterans desiring information on education benefits were urged to contact local VA offices or veterans service organization representatives.

My Back Pages

Our Best Years Revisited

By Tom Coe

The day hardly goes by when one doesn't hear some fellow student say that he can't wait until he gets out of college. Ask that same fellow what he's going to do and most likely he'll say, "Oh, I don't know — get a job, I guess." College students are supposed to be discontented but what sort of discontent is it that makes one want to get out of school, "get an apartment" (some sort of quantum leap for young middle-America), start pulling down $103.27 a week (after taxes) and, with a loan, buy a car. And how good (really) is that life "out there." Is this really something I should look forward to?

You see, I'm not really fired to have a go at it in the business community. Summer jobs long ago taught that "me first" was the first ethic of the business world and that 8 to 5 grind of "do your job - check on Friday" strikes me as a perfect example of meaningless, alienated labor. It seems to me that most of us will probably end up just that way unless we really mean to change things, really want to live a life we choose for ourselves. What lies ahead for most of us, even if the economy begins to boom again, are lives of labor that amount to little more than just doing one's time and getting paid for it. Most of us face jobs that will be mainly sources of income, hardly sources of satisfaction.

We have it pretty easy here; we must admit it. It is a place of thought and reflection, an arena of reason and sensibilities that we live in. College communities are some of the few communities that deal with their problems in more lights than the pragmatic and although it may be frustrating sometimes, although the manure may get pretty deep, we have to admit that life here is better than most lives - those lives that Thoreau characterized as of "quiet desperation."

James Kunen has written a beautiful little book that just about everyone should latch onto at least once. "The Strawberry Statement" is really not about the Columbia University disturbances of 1968 (SOS and all that) but it is basically one bright young person's reflections on college, the "MOVEMENT," and anything else that comes up along the way. He writes with humor, perspective and sensitivity. And he writes about college students facing the future — "My friends and I become preoccupied with the common nostalgic assertion that 'these are the best years of your lives.' We could accept the fact that the college years are exhausting, confusing, boring, troubled, frustrating and meaningless - that we could take in stride: we'd seen hard times before. But that everything subsequent would be worse was a concept difficult to grasp and once grasped, impossible to accept."

James has graduated by now and I wonder how he's making out. I wonder how each of us will make out. The question is, will we use the four extraordinary years that college gives us as rest-stop in the same old rat race or will we use it as a springboard and a model for a better, more sane and secure world?

He: "You know, there's very little humor on this campus."
Her: "Yeah, you're right. Even this cartoon isn't funny."

Young People Approve Nixon

Princeton, N.J.: Young people's approval of President Nixon rose sharply after his announcement that he would travel to the People's Republic of China before May of 1972.

57 per cent of the 18-29-year-old group now approve of the way Nixon is handling his job as President; 33 per cent disapprove and 10 per cent have no opinion. This 57 per cent approval is an increase of 11 per cent from the June 5-6 approval rate of 46 per cent.

Clearly, the 18-29-year-old group are the strongest supporters of the President's decision to visit Peking. Seventy-three per cent of those in this age group believe it is a good thing that the President will travel to China.

Both surveys were conducted by telephone among a representative cross-section of telephone households. The sample sizes for the June 5-6 survey and the July 20-21 survey were approximately 1,000 persons.

Sinfonia Lives

The Maryville College chapter of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia has a busy year in store.

Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia is the national music fraternity that has as its major purpose the encouragement of American music in all its facets.

Founded in 1898, the fraternity has over 500 chapters nationwide, and has numbered such men as Louis Armstrong and Aaron Copeland among its members. Each member of the male music faculty here is a member.

The Maryville chapter is this year hoping to sponsor several concerts on campus by off campus performers. Performances by the UT trombone choir and percussion ensemble are now being finalized.

Social activities are also engaged in, and these are planned by chapter members as the year progresses.

A smoker is planned before the end of the month for those interested in joining. Chapter President Lynn Brown stresses that membership in a musical organization is not a prerequisite to joining. The only requirement is an interest in any kind of music.

Rules prohibit the bringing in of freshmen this term, but interested upperclassmen should contact Brown, Pledge Advisor Wayne Davis, or Faculty Advisor Dan Stallings.

Library Plays It Cool

By Phyllis Garner

The availability of records in the Library is a new service to students this year. An unsolicited gift from RCA, the records have been collected over a period of two years. Only this summer has the Library staff had the time and the personnel to process the recordings.

Included in the collection of 180 records are selections for every taste from country and western to opera. Students can check records out at the circulation desk for a period of two weeks.

To allow as many people as possible to take advantage of this new service, the staff asks that students check out only a few records at a time.

Peace Movement at Maryville

Last summer the people of Maryville acquired their first indigenous "peace group" called, The Concerned Citizens. The story of its development is encouraging to rather jaded peace workers and to those who feel that the people have relinquished their power to appointed bureaucrats.

The Maryville group was organized on a grass roots level by native Tennessean Sam Franklin, a retired missionary to Japan. Franklin had arrived at an understanding of the Asiatic mind and culture and wanted to share his knowledge and conclusions about U.S. involvement in Asia.

The first meeting was the result of letters that Franklin sent out to individuals in the community. About six people met in Franklin's home, among them Rev. and Mrs. Harrison. This small group placed an advertisement in the local papers concerning future meetings with various films and anti-war speakers. Twelve people attended the second meeting. The next step was to send representatives of the Maryville group, Rev. and Mrs. Harrison, to a peace seminar in Ann Arbor. Fifty people came to hear the Harrison's report on the Ann Arbor conference and to develop strategies.

The group's plans for Fall include the use of several more films, "You Don't Have to Buy War" and "Neighbors." The films will be shown Friday, Oct. 1 in the Blount Bank Community room, beginning at 3:00 and there after shown every hour until 10:00. Admission is free.

The Concerned Citizens hope to utilize the "Now Town" celebrations by distributing informative literature to the crowds that the Chamber of Commerce predicts will gather in Maryville. The Chamber of Commerce expects the greatest numbers on Tuesday, September 28. The Maryville Concerned Citizens need help in handing out literature and advertising the films. Perhaps this event could bring the townspeople and students together in a meaningful protest against the war.

AAUP Meets

All members of the Maryville College Chapter of AAUP are urged to be present at a special meeting Friday, October 1, at 10:40 a.m. in Anderson 304. The purpose of this very brief meeting is to elect a new President of the Chapter. The report of the Nominating Committee will be received at that time. A quorum is needed. So please be present.

At a meeting last spring Dr. Malcolm M. Willey was elected the new President to succeed Dr. Donald M. Stine. Because Dr. Willey is continuing full time as an administrator, he is unable to serve as President of the Chapter.

Mrs. Herma Cate of the Department of English has succeeded Dr. Ralph Collins of the Department of Foreign Languages as the new Secretary-Treasurer. The Executive Committee of the Chapter consists of the new President, the Secretary-Treasurer, and Mrs. Connie Davis of the Department of Health and Physical Education, Miss Kathryn Martin of the Department of Foreign Languages, and Mr. Robert Ramger of the Department of Biology. New faculty interested in joining AAUP are urged to contact any of these officers.

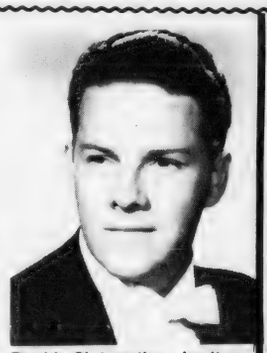
Oratorio Premiers Here

By Sue Bailey



Richard Yardumian's oratorio. "The Story of Abraham," is scheduled for its world premiere performance in the Wilson Chapel at 8:15 p.m. on Friday, November 12. A second performance will be presented in the Knoxville Civic Auditorium the following evening. Mr. Yardumian, who has emerged as a prominent American contemporary composer, was commissioned by Maryville College to write an oratorio commemorating the college's sesquicentennial on the life of Abraham. The result, "The Story of Abraham," is expected to reflect Mr. Yardumian's prevailing style of spirit and of imagination.

The oratorio will be further enhanced by the work of the late Andre Girard, a renowned French artist. Mr. Girard, who invented an intricate system of painting directly on 70 mm film, completed a life of Abraham in this style. This "painting on light" will be fused in sequence to the music of the oratorio.

The performance of Mr. Yardumian's oratorio will be highlighted by the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Anshel Brusilow. Featured soloists will be Lili Chookasian, contralto, and Phyllis Curtin, soprano, both of the Metropolitan Opera, and David Clatworthy, a leading baritone with the New York City Opera. They will be assisted by the Maryville College-Community Chorus under the direction of Dr. Harry Harter.

Although all tickets are complimentary, admission to the premiere is by invitation only. Each student may reserve one seat for the performance (two for married students.) Those wishing to make reservations must do so with Mrs. Ann Gamble in the main suite in Anderson, indicating the number of tickets at that time. At a later date, to be announced, the tickets may be purchased with a student ID card.

First priority for these tickets is given to the students, faculty, and staff of Maryville College. The deadline for reservations for the performance will be Thursday, September 30.

Scots Bow To Hampton-Sydney

By Dan McKinstry

The Maryville Scots opened their 1971 football season in Hampden, Virginia, last Saturday against a powerful Hampden-Sydney outfit. The Tigers, led by running back Tracey Powers, downed the Scots 27-0.

Powers scored two touchdowns and ran for 78 yards to lead the ground attack. Quarterback Bobby Long hit end Charlie Bryant with a 14-yard strike for a third tally. The final points were the result of a blocked punt which Sid Kirstein gathered up at the twelve and ran the remaining distance for the score.

For the Scots, Joe Costner hit on eleven of twenty-five passes. Six passes were caught by Mike Butler and the other five by Randy Minor. The ground attack never really got untracked against the big, aggressive front line of the Tigers. On defense for the Scots, linebacker David Clinton made 16 tackles, and tackle Phil Ziglar had 11.

This Saturday night at 7:30 the Scots will launch their home slate against Georgetown College of Kentucky. The Scots, out to avenge a 3-0 defeat last year, are hopeful that several key players who have been injured will be back at full speed for this encounter.

Majorettes Twirl Again

By Becky Buchanan

It is a pleasure to report that this year's Highland Marching Band will not be without one of its prime attractions, the majorettes. Debbie Branch will twirl with the Highlanders for her third year and Gay Wingfield for her second. Both are experienced hands at twirling expositions, having performed with their high school bands at Lenoir, No. Carolina and Jacksonville, Fla., respectively.

A preview of their talents may be seen at this evening's All Scots Night activities. Gay and Debbie are also looking forward to the opening of Maryville's new downtown renovations when they will parade with the band.

Although they have not yet completed work on all their routines, they are planning some new and startling demonstrations in the art of baton-twirling. And you may see some fancy footwork in accompaniment to the band's lively dance music.

Uniforms will remain essentially the traditional kilt and tam-o'shanter reflecting the Maryville Scots heritage, with the possibility of adding capes later in the season to complete the outfit.

For those interested in representing Maryville in the majorette capacity, tryouts are held each spring with the only prerequisite being band membership. During majorette off season, Gay and Debbie both join the band's wind section. Gay plays the flute and Debbie the clarinet.

At any rate, be sure to look for these multi-talented girls and their dazzling display in the lead of the Maryville Highland Marching Band as they come high-stepping down the field.

Frosh Urged To Elect Officers

At a called meeting of the Freshman Class at 6:30 p.m. on Monday, Sept. 20, Micki Miller and Dana McKinstry of the Elections Committee outlined election procedures for class officers. Nominees will offer campaign speeches in the chapel on Monday, Sept. 27 at 6:30 p.m. They may display signs and placards on Tuesday 28th and Wednesday 29th (There are limitations in this regard which must be observed). Election day is Wednesday, Sept. 29. Ballot boxes will be on hand in Pearsons dining room at 11:45-1:00 and 5:30-6:30 and for town students in the Student Center from 12 to 1 o'clock.

"Charlie Brown" Is Happiest Hit

By Carla Hulce

"You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown" is not a musical extravaganza supported by a cast of thousands. Neither is it a production of great social significance, making its point through the use of heavy dialogue and complicated plot.

The play utilizes only the six most famous "Peanuts" characters and uses the simplest of scenery and costume; the dialogue is uncomplicated enough for even a child to understand, as evidenced by the large number of obviously delighted children in the audience. Yet "Charlie Brown" is more than pure entertainment.

Every viewer is able to identify with the eternal loser syndrome of Charlie Brown. His futile attempts to succeed at something, anything in the play are met with heartfelt sympathy and self-recognition by the audience. In addition, his wistful dialogue stirs up memories of personal failures and near-triumphs in each observer.

The other characters in the play, with perhaps the exception of Snoopy, are as familiar to us as our next-door neighbors. Who is unacquainted with a typical Lucy, the eternal cynicist and dispenser of gloom and crabbiness?

While Patty, Schroeder, and Linus are not precisely average children, they do represent rather naive and simplistic attitudes toward life, and as such they present to the audience a refreshing outlook toward the world.

Philip Gibson, a relative newcomer to the Playhouse, is, with no reflection on his own personality, a perfect Charlie Brown. His portrayal of the wishy-washy child-man combines just the right amounts of desire for success and resignation to the fact that he will always be a certain kind of loser.

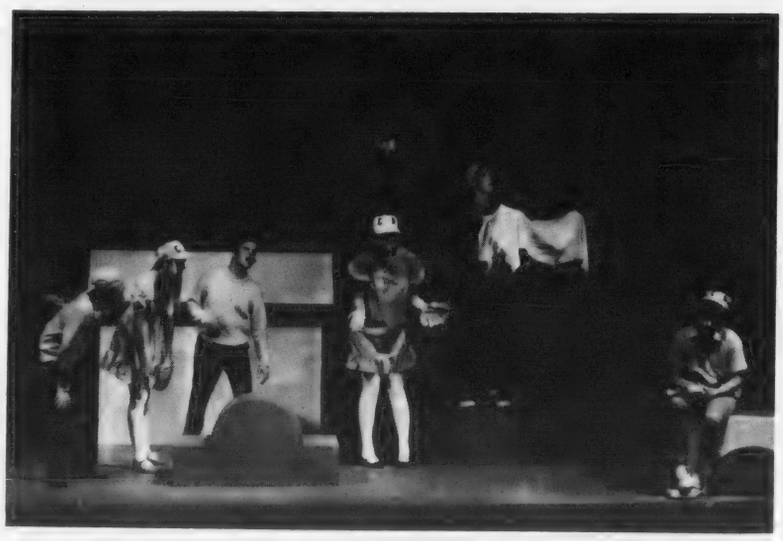
Howard Welsh, as always, is pure delight as Schroeder, the frustrated musician, who usually manages to keep his distance from the world. His character is, perhaps, symbolic of what each of us would like to be.

Snoopy, played by Robert Hutchins, discusses life from a dog's perspective.

On the other hand, Melissa Collins' Lucy is what no one could possibly wish to be like, but her few flashes of self-insight make her more loveable and possibly redeemable. The part is difficult, but is played with confidence and skill.

The ever-suffering little brother, Linus, is well played by Paul Mygatt, newest member of the Theatre. His performance endears him to the entire audience, who both loves and pities him and admires his patience with Lucy. "My Blanket and Me" met with tremendous response from the audience and deservedly so.

Christina Bergner has a relatively minor part, but devotes all her ability to her performance as Patty, perhaps the most average child in the play. She shines particularly in the choir rehearsal and Lucy's survey on crabbiness.



Perhaps the most popular character in the play, however, is Snoopy, the nearly human dog. Robert Hutchison is superb, both in performance and facial expression, which says more than any words could. His solo "Suppertime" brought such spontaneous applause that his success in the part cannot be doubted.

Without question, "You're A Good Man, Charlie Brown" ranks among the happiest events to hit the Maryville campus in many months. If anyone was unfortunate enough to miss all of the five performances, it is definitely his loss. For those lucky enough to have seen the play, they came away definitely more lighthearted than before and very possibly a good deal happier.

The next production of the College Playhouse will be Shakespeare's romantic comedy "Twelfth Night," to be presented October 22-29 in the College Theatre.

Hiccoughing Record Set

The longest recorded attack of hiccoughs was that afflicting Jack O'Leary, of Los Angeles. It was estimated that he "hicked" more than 160,000,000 times in an attack which lasted more than six years (1948-1956). His weight fell from 138 pounds to 74 pounds. 60,000 suggestions for cures were sent, of which only one worked — a prayer to St. Jude, the patron saint of lost causes.

Savage Rules Library

By Phyllis Garner

Maryville College has a new head librarian, Miss Jane Savage. A familiar face in a new role, Miss Savage was named to the post when Miss Virginia Turrentine resigned for health reasons. She comes to Maryville with an extra-ordinary background.

A native of Louisville, Kentucky, Miss Savage received her B.A. degree from Centre College with a major in English. After earning her M.A. in Religious Education from Princeton Theological Seminary, she participated in campus ministry work for several years.

Her work as assistant director of the Christian Student Foundation at Michigan State and as associate director of the United Campus Ministry at Miami University and Western College in Oxford, Ohio, led Miss Savage into many social action projects.

During this time, she exercised her deep interest in the field of communication, participating in discussions of books, drama, and contemporary films, including some of Andy Worhol's, which she found interesting.

While working at Miami University, she worked closely with students, assisting them with the editing of their individual film efforts.

Following twelve years in the campus ministry service, Miss Savage shifted her base of operations to Los Angeles. There she studied under Sister Corita Kent, while holding an assistantship in the school of Library Sciences at Immaculate Heart College.

After receiving her M.A. degree in Library Science, Miss Savage became the reference librarian at the Culver City Branch of the Los Angeles Public Library. In October, 1970, she came to Maryville. After serving as coordinator of reference services for less than a year, Miss Savage was appointed head librarian.

Miss Savage, Head Librarian

Although the new post carries with it great responsibilities, Miss Savage takes this promotion in stride and appears to have little difficulty adjusting to the new situation. Always friendly, always ready to answer any student's questions, she brightens the library with her cheerful smile.

Encouraged by student reaction to the library's recently unveiled record collection, Miss Savage hopes to acquire more records, some cassette tape players, and tapes. Eventually she hopes to transform the old Lantern into an Audio-Visual Center, providing space for films, lectures, seminars, and music carrels.

Dedicated and sincere person that she is, Miss Savage is most interested in any and all suggestions to improve and broaden library services. Wanting to serve as many people as possible, Miss Savage comments that the library's role, much like her former work in campus ministry, "is to bring people and ideas together. And that's what it's all about."

ACC Debates Academic Freedom

Academic freedom was the main topic of discussion when the All-College Council held its first regular meeting on Sept. 22 in Anderson Hall. A petition signed by thirteen students and three members of the Philosophy-Religion faculty requested the discussion because of a statement made by Dr. Copeland in his convocation address on Sept. 13.

The statement, charged the petition, identified one department with "one particular ideological position." Whether the identification was made in praise or in censure was, according to the petition, not the issue. It was a question of the effect that such singling out has upon the freedom to pursue truth.

Freedom Not Impaired

The petition requested that the Council take appropriate action if the discussion should reveal that the department had been "in any way impaired in its free pursuit of truth." After a detailed discussion, with Co-Chairman Ward Brooks presiding, Council members could not agree that any impairment had occurred in this particular instance. They did agree, however, that periodic discussion and reaffirmation of the principle of academic freedom can only serve to strengthen an academic community.

Dr. Copeland made a brief preliminary statement in which he said that he welcomed the discussion—academic freedom being, he declared, at the heart of liberal learning, which was the subject of his convocation address. For the benefit of those who could not recall the statement in question, he played a tape recording of the pertinent segment.

The statement which allegedly identified one department with a particular ideology was a prefatory remark: "I might lose the Philosophy Department right here." There followed a quotation from Abraham Kaplan, charging that "the new treason of the intellectuals is that we have shared and even contributed to the current loss of faith in the power of the human mind to cope with human problems, faith in the worth of reasoned discussions, faith even in the possibility of objective truth."

Reaffirmation of Code

only question before the Council was whether Maryville College is committed to academic freedom. Dr. Willey read the Code adopted in 1961, outlining fundamental rights and responsibilities of students and faculty.

The Council, by consensus, reaffirmed the Code and concluded that any time a member of the community thinks that the principles have been violated, he should feel free to explore with the person involved what was said and what the intention was.

Other Business

In other business the Council heard plans for College participation in the opening of the new downtown Maryville on Sept. 28, adopted a final schedule of meetings for the year, and made plans for student members to visit the residence halls to talk informally with freshmen.

ACC Committees Begin Work

By Sarah Winbigler

Through various articles and booklets, and through last week's C.I.V. program, most of you are becoming familiar with Maryville's government, the All College Council.

Contrary to widely spread rumors, the A.C.C. does work, and it works hard. What, you may well ask, does it work on? It works on the problems that you, as a member of the community, bring to its attention. If the A.C.C. has not taken action on something that has been bothering you, there is a very real possibility that no one has mentioned the problem to the A.C.C. In other words, the government here at Maryville does as much, or as little, as you help it to do.

Many people have brought up the very legitimate argument that they do not know where to take their complaints or ideas, and it is for this reason that the Echo is beginning a series of articles on the A.C.C. committees. These articles, covering one committee at a time, will tell you what the committee does, when it meets, and to whom you may take any business you wish to have presented to the committee. The committee can then research the problem, draw up a proposal, and present it to the 18-member All College Council for final consideration. Through these articles, the Echo is hoping to open the lines of communication between the college community and its government, so that the A.C.C. will be able to serve the community more fully.

This week's article will focus on the Instructional Program Committee. Since all plans for the committee have not yet been finalized, the meeting schedule for the committee has not been selected. It will be announced at a later date.

The Instructional Program Committee is responsible for shaping policies and procedures relating to the curriculum in all of the instructional departments of Maryville College. All new courses proposed by departments must have the committee's approval before they may be introduced, and the committee also sets up all requirements for graduation.

The committee's most important role is that of developing a general philosophy regarding liberal arts education at Maryville. The committee seeks to keep informed on new trends and developments in higher education and to consider their relevance and applicability at Maryville.

The committee welcomes ideas from any source, but it also accepts responsibility itself for the instigation of new proposals.

The Echo Resounds

Q. Where in Maryville can I get a bicycle repaired?

A. There are several places in town that repair bicycles, but the closest one is Drake Auto Parts, located on East Broadway near the Washington Avenue intersection.

Q. Who holds the world's record for the longest beard?

A. The longest recorded beard was that of Hans N. Lanoseth, a Norwegian immigrant to North Dakota, 11 feet, 6 inches long in 1912 after 36 years of growth. Allworthy's case of hypertrichosis terminalis, reported in 1909, gives details of a 64-year-old patient with a beard 10 feet, 10 inches long.

Q. What is the reasoning behind the rule that girls with keys checked out may not be on campus after dorm closing hours?

A. The answer given in the dorm meetings held during the first week to discuss "visitation" is simply "for security reasons."

Q. How does one submit a question to this column of the Echo?

A. Questions should be placed in Box 2820 by Wednesday of the week preceding publication. The question must be signed, but the names will be withheld on request.

Editorial

Reinforcing Academic Freedom

At last Wednesday's All-College Council meeting, the College's Statement on Academic Freedom was reconfirmed. Too often this important concept is taken for granted. It should not be.

Academic freedom is an idea which must be jealously guarded by the entire community if it is to persist.

What would the academic community be like without this freedom? In the 1840's, Alexis de Tocqueville, a French observer of America, wrote his answer: "In the United States politics are the end and aim of education."

His comment reflects the thought that the goal of education is preparation for citizenship. Furthering this goal of citizenship, as interpreted by the powers that be, has made certain forms of education a very authoritarian process. Concluding one lawsuit on the subject, the court decreed: "It will be remembered also that respect for constitutional authority and obedience thereto is an essential lesson to qualify one for the duties of citizenship, and that the schoolroom is an appropriate place to teach that lesson."

It is only through a vigorous and active awareness of academic freedom that the community is protected from such doctrinaire totalitarianism and otherwise straight-jacketed thinking.

It is only through a guarding of academic freedom that a teacher's right to teach and a student's freedom to search for truth are guaranteed.

Only when the expression of dissent and attempts to produce change, including those most unwelcomed, are guaranteed, does the total community results.

It is only through a recognition of academic freedom that all these rights are made possible.

My Roommate and I

The other day my roommate and I were asked to write an article for the Echo consisting of a freshman's opinions of Maryville College. We made a list of positive and negative attributes, and here's what we came up with. (We would like for you to keep in mind that we understand that no school is perfect.)

In our opinions, Maryville College has some very good points. The classes are small and the lectures seem to be geared toward the individual. The willingness of the teachers to help students is really fantastic. They go out of their way to accommodate us, and we feel that they should be recognized for this concern.

Maryville is a pretty campus. The mixture of new and old buildings is proof of the progress that has been made. We believe that the college usually tries to keep the cost down for the students by having mostly paper back books. The student center is great. It's the place to go to get out of the dorm, and prices there are kept to a minimum.

Visitation is another good point, but we think that the hours could be lengthened without any harm. We really like the swing and think that a few more could be added. We really can't say much in the way of a positive nature about the food, but we feel that it's the fault of some of the administration that M.C. doesn't have a catering service.

The following areas we feel need some changes. The vending machines and laundry only work if you have the change to put in them. Did anyone ever try to get change on campus? Making CIV's a requirement for graduation is a dirty trick. If Maryville College wants to invite a guest speaker, then it should have an assembly, but we don't feel that CIV's should be required. Seventy minutes for a class is entirely too long. There's nothing more disgusting than sitting in class for ten to twenty minutes only to watch the instructor stare at his watch. We think that the college could sponsor more things to do. We could have mixers and movies. They could get small area rock groups to perform. Both of us feel that national sororities and fraternities should be brought in.

Maryville College, then, like most schools, has both positive and negative attributes. Mainly we feel it just needs to speed up its process of modernization and up-dating in areas which do not sacrifice its closeness and community, but which make the student's life simple and free from petty and unrealistic regulations.

The Candy Stick of Life

Only for the peppermint– to twist and turn about the stick, Scarlet red in hue–
as anger at its peak;
Sweet as a lover's kiss–
to taste and take.
A moment's pleasure,
soiled– consumed and then mislain.
Small if bound to measurement;
Immeasurable if left unbound.
All this—
All madness laughing,
At the living mockery.

Why CIV Is Necessary

By Wiley Rutledge

There may be some freshmen (and upperclassmen) who sit up nights questioning the necessity of that Wednesday morning get together known as CIV. If you're wondering why CIV is necessary, here are a few answers.

CIV is necessary so that students who have C hour classes on Wednesdays can complete their assignments.

CIV is necessary so that students who stay up late Tuesday nights can get caught up on their sleep.

CIV is necessary so that homesick students can write home to their parents.

CIV is necessary for those who subscribe to magazines to get caught up on what's going on in the world.

CIV is necessary so that the entire community can find out that there is a vespers the following Sunday night.

CIV is necessary so that someone can stand in the chapel and talk his lungs out to Maryville's effete intellectual snobs.

CIV is necessary so that we all can be reminded what Dr. Copeland and Dr. Willey look like.

CIV is necessary so that those students participating can miss part of their A hour class.

But finally and most important, CIV is necessary so that we can all learn something, which is, after all, supposedly the reason we came here.

Alcoa Highway Serenade Blues

By Jacob Koss

At the window he kept a loaded blunderbuss-to silence barking dogs that disturbed his peace this was a big, old blunderbuss with its funnel-like barrel filled with junk:

beercans and bibles pens silverware and letters
A single bobby pin.

One reeking, sleepless night the brown dogs gathered in the garden to bark down the moon
when that blunderbuss barked,
(louder than a thousand mad dogs),
Bits of dog darted the wet air their barking consumed now by the silent earth.

Neighborhoods.
Peace, Lord.

My Back Pages

An American Tragedy

By Tom Coe

Maybe the most horrifying prospect of our American society is its tremendous capacity for de-humanization. We can see it most in the institutions that we erect. The pinnacle of this process is to be seen in our prisons, ironically called as Attica Prison is, a "correctional institution." Hardly correctional institutions, our prisons have become the best schools of crime in the history of the world. The horrible conditions of such places as Attica hardly give a man a chance to change his life. A man in prison becomes a number — the common complaint of modern man.

It all came to a horrible head several weeks ago at Attica, New York. We all know the story; we all know the death tolls. But that is hardly the story. The constant complaint of the rioting men was not really with the conditions of the prisons but with the way in which they were treated by the guards, officials, and society at large. Through the whole affair the recurring plea of the caged men was to be treated like human beings, not as animals. Finally, they decided to die like men rather than to live like dogs. The fact is that the society that cages them sees them as no more than animals to be hidden away. An intelligent observer might think that a modern, affluent society that holds all men to be created equal might learn that merely locking men up, in what amounts to little more than cages, is hardly the way to make men behave.

America will have to face squarely the meaning of this tragedy that it has brought upon itself. This is what happens when we discard other human beings onto the scrap-heap of humanity. This is the toll of seeing men in terms of bodies to be moved, caged, etc. instead of seeing them as unique individual personalities. Edmund Muskie made a statement saying in effect that we must reckon with the day when 1,000 men in America decide that they no longer desire to live in America. What sort of thing does this mean for the American dream?

Even in death those prisoners at Attica did not have their wish. They were still non-persons. Their families were notified mostly after news reports had given their names. The guards of the prison who died were given all the respect due them as men but the families of the prisoners were told, "If you would like to pick up the body ..." And the final, bitter irony was one that Tom Wicker of the New York Times pointed out: that although the bodies of the dead hostages were clearly named, those of the prisoners were tagged "P-1, P-2, P-3 ..." and laid in the courtyard like wood.

Students Exibit

Maryville College art students have a part in Maryville's "Now Town" opening. Their work can be seen on this Friday and Saturday in the lobby of First Federal Savings and Loan Bank.

The downtown exhibit will feature paintings and ceramic work done by many MC students. All are urged to attend the display which was set up by Mrs. Boyd McKenzie.

Don't forget! See the MC art exhibit today or tomorrow at the First Federal Bank in Maryville's "Now Town" section.

Band Marches

By Julie Chapman

The Maryville College Highlander Marching Band marched in the grand opening parade for the new Now Town Maryville last Tuesday.

The Highlander band's musical repertoire included the school's fight song and the song "Super Star" from the famous rock opera "Jesus Christ Superstar."

Other bands marching in the parade included the University of Tennessee Marching Band, and the marching bands from Maryville, Everett and Alcoa high schools.

One of the noted officials that the bands marched for was Governor Winfield Dunn.

Peace Groups Plan for Fall

By Kathy Mier

Rev. and Mrs. Harrison were the representatives of the Maryville Concerned Citizens at a peace conference in Ann Arbor, Michigan, this summer. The conference was initially organized by the Clergy and Laymen Concerned (CAIC), an antiwar group whose members include the Berrigan brothers.

One of the fundamental ideas of the organizers was that more would be accomplished if all the peace groups and civil rights workers could get together. There were representatives from the Roman Catholic peace group, Quakers, the Fellowship of Reconciliation, the People's Coalition and other peace and civil rights organizations.

One of the major attitudes of conference members was that ending the war was just part of the overall problem. Racism, militarism and poverty are tightly interwoven with the Vietnam war.

A large part of the time was spent discussing underlying facts about U.S. policy in Vietnam. The war is not winding down as long as U.S. bombers are dropping antipersonnel, splinter bombs and Vietnamese people are dying. The U.S. citizen accepts the fact that the U.S. is using such anti-personnel bombs, committing war crimes in Vietnam, and genocide in Laos due to a fundamentally racist attitude.

After so many years of U.S. control, there is still a paucity of democratic institutions and procedures. The "one man" election coming up in South Vietnam is distressingly similar to an election in the totalitarian countries-Spain, Greece, and Pakistan.

This totalitarian attitude seems to be growing in the U.S. The power of the president has grown enormously. There are many powerful advisors who are answerable only to the president. The CIA and the Green Berets are under his control. These forces could be called the President's "Private armies." In recent years, the U.S. has formed treaties with several totalitarian countries such as Portugal and Pakistan. The U.S. offers to train the police of these countries.

The Ann Arbor delegates zeroed in on several problems and developed tactics to deal with them. The first was to end the draft through legislation and demonstration. The second was to fight the "war at home"-racism and poverty. The third was "stop the killing." This last priority involves protesting the war in Southeast Asia.

The People's Coalition plan a "Fall Offensive" beginning October 13 with demonstrations with union support. Their goal is to halt business as usual and sponsor teachins. The week of October 25-29 is designated as civil disobedience week in Washington, D.C. On November 6, the group plans to stage rallies in twenty major cities. The closest of these cities to Maryville is Atlanta.

Another organization plans to send a group made up of the number of casualties in Vietnam for that month to Washington. They plan to lie down before the White House. Their goal is arrest.

Much of this information is not new to seasoned peace workers. The encouraging factor, however, is that most of the conference members were middle-aged adults.

Students Get Voice In CIV

Wednesday, October 6, CIV will meet in many places on the campus at 9:20 a.m. The theme will be Latin America and the purpose is to allow students and faculty in smaller groups to wrestle with some of the issues and values related to the theme. The program is based on the assumption that there can be greater involvement and interaction in smaller groupings than in a large assembly.

The program in the Fine Arts Center will be held in the Music Hall and be under the direction of Bill Swenson. It will feature slides of Mexican sculpture, architecture, and painting with appropriate commentary. These are being furnished by the Mexican Embassy in Washington, D.C.

In Sutton Science Center the issue for discussion will be ecology vs. industry in developing Latin American countries. The following rooms and faculty will be available for discussion:

Room 113 - Tom Ferrell, Jerry Waters, Bob Ramger, J. W. Nichols

Room 201 - Norm Love, Randy Shields, Dave Young

Room 231 - Carole Wahler, Bill Dent, Bill Richardson

A resource article for discussion is "Science for Development - A View from Latin America" by J. Leite Lopes from the bulletin of the "Atomic Scientist, September 1966.

Copies of this article will be on reserve in the college library as well as the science library.

In Thaw Hall Wally Lewis, Bob Braid, Harry Price and Russell Parker will meet with students in 201 to discuss the article "Beginning Anew in Latin America," by Senator Edward Kennedy. Copies of this will be on reserve in the library for student reading.

In Anderson Hall the subject will be "Ivan Illich on the De-Schooling of Society." The following faculty and rooms are available for discussion groups: Room 304 - Don Stine; Room 308 - Ester Swenson; Room 302 - Dave Cartlidge. Background articles will include "The False Ideology of Schooling" and "We Can Dis-Establish Schools or We Can De-School Culture" - both by Illich. Extra copies of these articles will be on reserve in the library for student reading.

Drill Team Steps Out

The 1971-1972 Scotch Brigade, Maryville College's own drill team, made its premiere performance of the season at last week's game against Georgetown College and from just one exhibition it looks as if the girls will be a welcome addition to the halftime show.

Performing to "Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head," the team showed originality and style in the routine presented to an enthusiastic and appreciative crowd. Certainly the sight of all those smiling faces attracted more attention to the halftime than does a concert by a talented but highly masculine marching band.

For those looking forward to their next appearance, the 20-girl precision team will perform on October 16, at the Homecoming game against Randolph-Macon. This game marks their second performance under junior Eleanor Murrah and co-captains Kathy Mayurnik and Janet Heron. There will, however, be a special added attraction.

At the Homecoming the drill team will wear its new uniforms for the first time. The outfit will consist of a black corduroy hot pants jumpsuit to be worn with a white turtleneck body suit and black tams with white pom-poms. So everyone come out and catch these lovely and talented girls in action at Homecoming.

Writers Wanted

If you write poetry, short stories, dramas, editorials, letters, or essays, why not share your creations with the Wiring Workshop on Mondays and-or Tuesdays at the C Period in Anderson 204? This non-credit, voluntary workshop is designed to fit the needs of the potential writers on campus. Items for consideration include improvement of style, experiences in practical criticism, and sharing of ideas.

Summer Isn't Dull for Some

Patti Shelton

The summer is usually a time for making money, a means to an end. Unfortunately, most summer employment is dull and meaningless work. But it doesn't have to be that way, as at least four MC students discovered in the summer of '71.

John Powell, our sovereign editor, worked at a resort lodge atop LeConte Mtn. For two months he learned the rudiments of logging, handling horses, washing dishes and other skills. This job came under the Department of the Interior but John learned of it from a former MC student, Dave Wiley.

Charlotte Silvius, a freshman at MC, also worked with John who plans to return there next summer.

Vickie Ann Stewart, a junior from Louisville, Ky., also found her job a little out of the ordinary, and a challenge, too. She worked in Jersey City, N.J., as a volunteer in the Christian Neighborhood Summer Program of Hudson County. This was a day-camp program for ghetto children, five days a week. Transportation, room and board were provided and the goal of the program was to teach the kids self-awareness, trying to break down the failure syndrome so in evidence in inner-city life. The workers also introduced the kids to religion, but did not put the primary emphasis on this.

This program was inter-denominational and exists in many cities of the U.S. and Europe. Vickie found out about it from Bill Laws, former moderator of General Assembly, who spoke at a CIV last year. Vickie also plans to return to this type of work, possibly in another part of the country next year.

Dave Buckwalter, a sophomore from Houston Texas, worked at Tremont, but not at a job you would expect. He worked for the Pioneer Engineering Company of Michigan which was subcontracted by the Department of Transportation to determine why so many campers, trailers, etc. broke down on the road and if the manufacturer's claims were misleading. The workers on this program measured wheels and axles, weighed the vehicles and generally checked the manufacturer's information. The results of this study will be used to bring about fairness in the advertising of vehicles for consumer protection.

Bucky found out about this job when he was at Tremont with a geology class. The firm had originally planned to hire U-T students but got several MC students, past and present, instead. Others who worked there included: Henry Hastings, Ray Nye, Bob Cicotti, Ondis Bible and Mark Humphreys.

Another volunteer laborer was Jeanne Nelson, a freshman from Red Bank, N. J. Jeanne, along with 25 others, worked as a Bible school teacher in Haiti. Unfortunately there isn't enough space to tell about all the exciting things she experienced in Haiti. She found the Haitians very warm and loving people but very tied down by poverty, filth and ignorance. Her group tried to bring them Christianity in the form of the life of Jesus Christ and they were very optimistic about the work they did. They realized, however, the need for much more. The language of Haiti is Creole, a mixture of French, Indian and Spanish. Jeanne's group worked without an interpreter, but they felt there were a great many things that could be understood without words. Jeanne got this job through her church.

Summer doesn't have to be a form of marking time til fall. There are a lot of possibilities that just need to be looked for.

Organ Pipes Missing

Those who were on the campus last spring will remember a couple of appeals which were made for the return of about twenty pipes taken from the organ in the Little Chapel. These are still missing. We now have a quotation of the replacement cost which will amount to $260.00. Before the college spends its (and your) money for this purpose, I'm making a final appeal for anyone who knows anything about this to please contact me. Those few pipes are of absolutely no use to whoever took them, but as you see, they are not cheap to replace. There is no reason to suspect students any more than anyone else; the pipes may have been taken by someone from off campus. But if you know anything about this, please contact me within this next week. There will be no recriminations.

Meet Tri-Beta

By Linda Lou Blomeke

There are various people on campus, including both freshmen and uninformed upperclassmen, who have no idea what Beta Beta Beta stands for or who participates in it.

This year Tri-Beta would like to encourage more community interest. The bi-monthly seminars, on topics of interest to people in the biological field, will continue. In order to let more people know the schedule of upcoming programs, the events will be announced either in the Echo or in the daily bulletin.

Students or any other member of the community who may be interested in these programs should keep an eye on these two publications and feel free to attend any activity that appeals to him.

Any other questions should be referred to any of the following officers of Beta Beta Beta: President Kent Marshall, Secretary Sarah Miller, Faculty Advisors Dr. Shields and Mr. Ramger.

Greeno Boots Opening Kick-off Against Georgetown Tigers

Scots Crush Tigers

The Maryville Scots, showing an explosive offense and a superb defense, smothered the Georgetown Tigers 36-3 here Saturday night.

The offensive team, led by quarterback Joe Costner, moved the ball well all night and were able to sustain several long drives. The Scots, however, were only able to push the ball over once in the first half. Robert Calloway plunged over from the one early in the second quarter to put the Scots on top, 7-0.

Following the kickoff, the Tigers mounted their only scoring drive which terminated in a field goal, making the score 7-3. The Scots again drove into Tiger territory but the clock ran out before the Scots could tally.

In the third quarter, the Scots added to the score with a seven-yard pass from quarterback Joe Costner to wide receiver Dean Harden. As he had done previously, Ernie Greeno added the point, and the Scots led 14-3.

The fourth quarter saw the Scots erupt for twenty-two points. Starting the parade was Mike Butler, who received a punt on his 34-yard line, and with some nifty running and picture-perfect blocking, returned it 65 yards for the score. Greeno converted the point to push the lead to 21-3.

Shortly afterwards, the Scots were marching again. Costner hit Randy Minor with a 6-yard pass for his second touchdown pass of the evening.

Completing the scoring was Ondis Bible, who picked up a blocked punt and ran thirty yards for the score. Mike Threlkeld was given credit for blocking the punt. Leon Hart took the ball and flipped it to Joe Kozel for two extra points.

Next Saturday the freshmen Scots will play TMI here at 2:00 P.M.

M Club Season Opens

By Betsy Joyner

Women's intramurals opened Tuesday Sept. 21 with preliminary soccer practice. This practice gave opportunities for newcomers to learn the basics of soccer and try their hand (or should I say foot) at the sport. Old timers were there to give valuable hints.

On Thursday, September 23, the first game was held. Theta Epsilon scored once, winning over Chi Beta in a fast and close game. Captains were chosen for the respective teams.

M Club, the women's' athletic club of Maryville College, will be sponsoring a variety of athletic opportunities for women. Next on the agenda is field hockey.

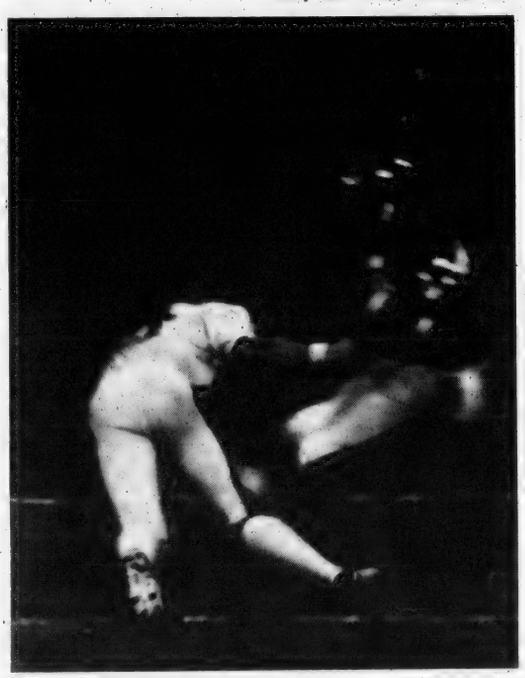
Points are awarded for each sport participated in and an accumulation of 400 points in one year constitutes membership in M Club. Points can be attained by playing team sports sponsored by M Club. Also by individual activities such as handball or swimming and officiating at games.

M Club welcomes all interested women and we hope to see a good number of you make it into the club.

Reminder: Theta meets Chi Beta again Tuesday afternoon at 3:45 on the soccer field.

Cheerleaders Chosen

By Becky Buchanan



By now everyone should be well aware of Maryville's enthusiastic eight-member cheerleading squad which was elected September 22. All eight are serving as Scottie-boosters for the first time and are working hard for an unprecedented display of school spirit. For anyone not yet personally acquainted with the squad members, they are: Trigger Graham and Cynthia Newsom, sophomore roommates from Marshall, North Carolina, and Memphis, Tennessee, respectively. Leanne Moore is a sophomore from Fairfax, Virginia. Nadine Hays, from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is also a sophomore. Carol Ralston is the freshman member, from Columbus, Ohio. Freddie Rhodes is a junior transfer student from Columbia State College in his home town of Columbia, Tennessee. Tony Willis, Nashville, Tenn., is another junior transfer student from Martin Junior College. Richard Gaunt, also a junior, transferred to Maryville from Gulf Coast Junior College. His home is in Panama City, Fla.

At their organizational meeting following their election, Trigger and Freddie were elected co-captains.

The squad was broken in almost immediately at the Pep Rally last Friday evening, then cheered the Scots on to victory over Georgetown on Saturday. Any of the cheerleaders will be quick to say that their office is a demanding one, as shown by exhaustion, aching muscles, and hoarse voices following their initial workout. Their enthusiasm, however, is hardly dampened and plans for future pep rallies and maybe even buses to the away games are underway.

Uniforms have been selected and will arrive soon. The boys will be wearing garnet sweater vests, with white pants and shirts. The girls chose a traditional V-neck sweater which will be worn with either culottes or pleated skirts, the final decision on that is not yet made. Orange and garnet pom-poms will add a proud note of color to their routines, and megaphones for the boys will enable them to really exhort Maryville fans to cheer on the Scots.

Several members of the squad were given some helpful suggestions following their first efforts, and are open to any ideas anyone had for further improvement. The captains have expressed intentions of reviving Maryville College spirit in a big way. The entire squad is in fact determined to obtain strong student support of all athletic events.

Scot Runner Breaks Tackle

Student Seeks Liberalism

By Debbie McClain

After spending one year at the Mormon Church College of Hawaii, transfer student Nuanthip "Nuj" Bunnag finds Maryville a much more liberal college. Nuj, who is originally from Bangkok, Thailand, attended the Mormon college last year where a rigid dress code was strictly enforced.

Long hair on boys was not permitted, and classes were somewhat more difficult. She is much happier at Maryville College because the minimum of restricting rules makes for a more relaxed atmosphere.

Nuj has had no problem adjusting to the college way of life. At the age of four, she began attending an all girls' boarding school in Thailand, which permitted her to come home only twice a week. She continued her education at this school through her high school years, and after graduation, Nuj joined one of her older sisters in Hawaii and attended her first year of college there.

She is the youngest of four children, having an older brother and two older sisters. Both of her parents are pharmacists and teach pharmacy at the Chulalongon University and at the Makidol University in Thailand. When asked to describe the life style of Thailand, Nuj said that it was much the same as that of the United States, however, she noted one interesting factor. Young girls in Thailand are not allowed to date quite as freely as those in our country. They must always go in groups unless marriage is in the near future.

Although Nuj is very interested in art and religion, she has chosen piano as her major. When asked what she liked most about Maryville, Nuj replied, "The friendliness of the people and the many trees."

Financial Aid Discussed

The Financial Aid program is designed to help those students who need financial assistance to attend Maryville College.

Assistance is provided in several ways including scholarships, grants, loans and campus employment. Indirect assistance is provided by handling the details with regard to V.A. benefits, Guaranteed Loans, local scholarships, off-campus employment, short term loans, etc.

After a student's need is established the best methods of fulfilling the need are sought. In many cases this involved more than one type of assistance.

All types of assistance are open to all students who have documented need and provided they meet the qualifications which are published in the catalog and Financial Aid brochures. The fact that a grant designation may have a disproportionate number of students in a particular major or activity does not necessarily mean that others are being excluded. This is the case with the Leadership Grant program. For instance, those students who participate in varsity athletics receive two-thirds of the Leadership Grants while none participate in the Maryville College Academic Scholarship Program. This does not mean that no athletes qualify for the latter program or that the Leadership program is for athletes exclusively. Actually, in the over-all financial aid program, 13 per cent of the grants are awarded to 12 per cent of the student body. Thus, to properly evaluate the total Financial Aid program, all factors must be considered at the same time.

The Maryville College work program has been in existence almost since the school was founded. It is designed primarily to help students help themselves. A large number of students have submitted applications this year compared with the number of jobs available. Many factors are considered in job assignments. These include: financial need, experience, previous work record at Maryville, date of application and, in some cases, personal appearance. These things coupled with the request for student services must be related to the departmental budgets.

Vote for Queen Soon

Ten girls were nominated by the senior class to reign at Homecoming festivities on October 16. From these ten, the student ody will soon select five girls to be on the 1971 court. The girl receiving the most student body votes will reign as the 1971 Maryville College Homecoming Queen. They are the following:

Jane Roseborough	Lindy Harris
Julia Streshley	Nan Lantz
Carol Abel	Emily Dowdy
Linda Clowes	Lynn Gregory
Pam Spoonamore
Mary Gray Proffitt

Governor Winfield Dunn inspects Maryville College facilities during recent Now Town celebration.

Moody Resigns

Mrs. Kathleen Moody, Head Resident of Pearsons Hall, has resigned her position effective October 5, 1971. She gave as the reason for her resignation her conviction that her health was beginning to be jeopardized by increased and continuing pressures.

This fall marked the beginning of Mrs. Moody's third year at Maryville College. Her first assignment was as Head of Margaret Lloyd Residence for Women in 1968-1969. She resigned at the close of that year to accept a position at Whittier College in California. Then late in the summer of 1970, she returned to Maryville to fill the vacancy in Pearsons created by the resignation of Mrs. Charlotte Bellows.

Mrs. Moody seriously considered terminating her long career in women's residence hall work in June, 1971. When asked to reconsider, however, she agreed to one more year. Her decision to resign came last week end.

Mrs. Lela Davis, staff assistant for all the women's residence halls, is filling in temporarily as Head Resident of Pearsons.

Outreach Committee Extends MC

By Sarah Winbigler

As was announced last week, the Echo is presenting a series of articles on the various committees of the All College Council. Last week's Echo summarized the work of the Instructional Program Committee; this week, the emphasis is being shifted to one of the Religious Life Committees, the Community Outreach Committee.

The purpose of this committee is to discover ways in which students can become involved in the life of the community. The committee is making an effort to utilize the physical and human resources on this campus to help the community.

The committee had its rather humble beginnings as a small group of concerned students who wanted to make a contribution to the community. As a starting point, they chose the Parkside project at Maryville. This is a low-income housing project with approximately 150 family units. While their living conditions are vastly superior to what they otherwise might have been able to afford, the residents of Parkside had many needs which were not being met. The students took a survey of the families in Parkside to discover what these needs were.

This year, the Community Outreach Committee is an official branch of the Religious Life Committee. Its efforts are still concentrated on the Parkside area, but it has branched out into many other activities as well.

In Parkside, one of the group's first projects was a Boy Scout Troop. The troop is sponsored by the Maryville Optimist Club, and it is under the leadership of M.C. students Pete Isenburg and Hardy De Young. Plans are also being worked out for a Girl Scout Troop and hopefully both a Cub Scout and a Brownie troop.

M.C. student and committee member Willie Blair spent his summer working with the young people at Parkside. He organized a summer recreation club which had parties, car washes, and other activities for the kids. Other Maryville students have been helping with a community newspaper at Parkside.

If anyone is interested in doing any type of service activitiy in the community, this is the committee to contact. It has ties with many of the community's service organizations, such as the Blount County Welfare Department, the FISH program, the Headstart Program, and the local hospitals, nursing homes, and children's homes. The committee will be happy to take any suggestions concerning other projects, and it is also open to any interested students who might wish to join.

Rev. Carl Liggen, pastor of St. Paul's A.M.E. Church at Alcoa, is chairman of the Community Outreach Committee, and his co-chairman is Dennis Healy. Other members are Willie Blair, Chuck Carey, Richard Feist, Mr. Foster, Carolyn Graham, Merida Kearns-Preston, Mr. Kinsinger, Ralph Miller, Winnie Minear, Todd Trumbore, and Carol Wylie. Students who are interested in the committee's activities may contact any of the above listed members or Chaplain Dick Harrison, who is coordinator of the Religious Life Committees. The committee meets each Wednesday at 4:00 in the Green Room at the theatre.

Happenings

American Divorces

Divorce American Style will be shown Friday night at 8:00 p.m. in Fine Arts Music Hall. Dick Van Dyke and Debbie Reynolds star in this first rate comedy about love, marriage, and divorce. Circle K is sponsoring the movie and it only costs $.50 per person.

Vespers

A JOYOUS PRAISE SERVICE will be featured at vespers at 7:00 p.m. in the outdoor amphitheatre (FAC). Ted Stewart and Judson Stone will coordinate the worship which will include lots of group singing and guitar playing. In case of rain, we will move to the Music Hall.

Admissions Conference

The fourth Guidance Counselor Personnel Conference, sponsored by the Admissions staff of Maryville College, will be held on the College campus, October 21 to 23, 1971. Approximately twenty five guidance personnel from high schools and junior colleges, representing eight different states in the eastern United States, are expected to attend. The purpose of the conference is to provide the counselors with a first-hand look at Maryville College, and to acquaint them with the unique opportunities that are available to students on Maryville campus.

Athletics in Question

In days of a distant past, Maryville College's athletic teams competed on an equal basis with area institutions, as witnessed by the football defeats of the University of Tennessee fifty years ago.

Today, however, with rapidly increasing enrollment at such state institutions, coupled with the thinly disguised professionalism of NCAA grant-in-aids, MC is at a distinct disadvantage in athletic competition. Because of such changes, The College's policy on Intercollegiate Athletics must be examined.

Maryville's disadvantage comes out in two areas. First, the College does not give athletic grants, per se. Instead, the Honaker Club, a quasi-independent organization, and the College's Leadership Grants provide academic-athletic financial aid.

The Honaker Club scholarships are perhaps the closest form of aid to a grant-in-aid the College maintains. On recommendation of the Athletic Department, awards are made to athletes ranging from $100 to half-tuition. Supposedly, they are granted on the basis of need, not speed.

To be eligible for this award, the recipient must score 1050 on the SAT or 24 on the ACT. To continue receiving the award, a 2.5 average and evidence of financial need must be demonstrated.

These scholarships are funded by the Club and not the College. A base income of $25,000 is maintained. Current gifts and dividends from the base constitute the amount of aid given. Currently, about $2,800 is available under this program.

Competing with institutions with fully funded athletic programs, places the College at a disadvantage.

A Need for Conference Athletics

Perhaps one solution to this adverse situation is membership in an athletic conference. The primary incentive for joining a conference is equable competition between colleges with similar athletic aid programs and similar goals in athletics.

Other important advantages to conference athletics include easier scheduling of events, greater incentive with a championship as a goal rather than game to game competition, and a better pooling of information in all areas.

At present, several possibilities present themselves. The College Athletic Conference to which Sewanee and Southwestern belong is one. Another is the Mason-Dixon Conference in Virginia. Still another alternative is an entirely new organization of like-minded institutions.

No Set Policy

The second disadvantage the College faces in intercollegiate competition is lack of a coherent and consistent philosophy on athletics. Such guidelines would define the goals and limitations of Maryville's participation. In forming these guidelines, several questions must be answered:

— Is the College's academic-athletic scholarship program truly valid, or is it merely a camouflage for grant-in-aids?

— Should one aspect of the athletic program, such as football, be more heavily emphasized and more heavily funded to the detriment of other programs?

— Why does the College participate in intercollegiate athletics at all?

Unlike many areas of community life, Maryville College's policy on intercollegiate athletics is one of aimless drifting. Only by anchoring the College to a stated philosophy and then embarking in new directions based on such a policy can this situation be remedied.

Comps Questioned

Hi Folks:

While waiting for the glorious Saturday afternoon when our Fighting Scots will manhandle Randolph-Macon, and the other dreadful day that initiates the beginning of basketball practice, my mind was jolted by the startling fact that in a short time of seven months the great obstacle to graduation will loom up in the presence of Comprehensive Examinations. To those lucky individuals who have been spares this mental initiation of comprehensive examinations, it can only be stated that your time is coming to an end.

Comprehensive Examinations (Comps) are a somewhat questionable academic tool used by the various departments to somehow measure the graduating Senior's retention of four years accumulation of scholarly knowledge. This result is equated to a letter grade, coupled with the resulting letter grade score from the required Undergraduate Record Exam, and tabulated to a final letter grade that carries the academic grade strength of a regular ten-week course. That is to say: an "A" adds 4 quality points onto a student's final grade-point-average; a "B" adds 2 points; a "C" is neutral; and a "D" subtracts 2 points. Beware of an "F".

Many years ago, when I was a Freshman, a great movement was underway to eradicate these requirements for graduation. In those days I was in the vanguard. This is no longer the situation. It now requires the greatest of efforts for me to even stay with the pack. So, with this in mind, it now becomes necessary for some serious edification on one of our most pressing problems. I recognize the fact that a few highly concerned individuals have already extended a great amount of time and effort in seeking a resolution of this problem. This fact is deeply respected. It is also felt, however, that the channels of insight and reflection are closed within the governmental structure above the student level. The problem is one that now involves all facets of our community and not just that of the Senior Class. Let us examine briefly some statements for and against the necessity of Comps and see if we can unite in a rectifying conclusion.

Reasons to maintain Comps:

1. Preparation for Graduate School: this is the strongest position taken for the continuation of Comps. Graduate School aspirants are forced to compile their knowledge instead of using their own initiative.

2. Grade results can be used for departmental evaluation: true and quite necessary, but the same result can be accomplished by the Undergraduate Record Exams.

3. Another factor that adds great intrinsic value and mystique to the name of Maryville College: could be true, but it sounds like archaic thinking to this writer. We have too much going for us already.

Reasons to delete Comps:

1. Inconsistencies between Departments in administration of exams: some are oral, some are written.

in degree of difficulty of exams: some departments are weak, some are strong.

2. Inconsistencies within Departments over a period of years as to material actually taught and material used on exams. Newer faculty organize the exam in areas which they are strongest, but in which some students may not have been taught.

3. The exam period is generally a few hours in length, but the resulting grade exerts influence upon the final grade-point-average and graduation.

4. Concept of double jeopardy arises because the exam often (sometimes not) covers material for which one grade has already been received.

5. No adequate means of consistently compiling taught material over a period of years. This is especially important to our Junior College transfers.

6. There is no Graduate School criterion which requires Comps.

7. A great percentage of Faculty, when queried last Spring, did not see the necessity for continuation of Comps.

8. The over-whelming majority of students do not see a viability between Comps and academic attainment; other than the fact that some students are able to "cram" better.

Alternatives:

1. Delete Comps as a requirement for graduation. Require that URE be taken, but no grade assigned.

2. Maintain Comps and URE, but omit the grade influence upon grade-point-average and graduation. This procedure is followed with the Junior English Proficiency Exam.

Recommendation:

1. Comps should be abolished: URE be required, but not graded.

That is about it from this end. Hope there is more response in a responsible way.

My Back Pages

The Ability to Laugh

By Tom Coe

The "Summer of Love" in San Francisco passed while most of us were in high school. Martin Luther King is dead. So is Bobby. And so are Allison, William, Jeffery, and Sandy. Has anybody seen my old friend Abraham? Ted Gold and some others died in a bomb factory in Greenwich Village and a Bank of America Branch in California has burned. Newark and Detroit have burned. And Watts and Harlem.

John Cassavetes, the brilliant actor and director (Shadows, Faces, Husbands) in a July Playboy interview has put things very tragically and succinctly into place. He says, "... the kid's revolution began with peace and love, full of laughter and a real commitment to nonviolence. That's all over now." We have forgotten how to laugh. We have lost the ability to love. Non-violence is passe and radicalism is chic.

What has happened to our sensibilities? It has many times been noted that the most frightening thing about young radicals is their lack of a sense of humor — a tragic loss because it is humor that helps us to keep our sense of perspective; it helps to keep us from becoming deadly serious and overburdened. It is the sense of humor that protects us in the worst of states and keeps us sane. Young radicals rarely fly kites anymore.

What this generation needs is an ecstatic rebirth. A sense of innocence regained — an innocence that was taken from many by the war, by Kent State, et. al. In some part possibly the Jesus people might be helping us to regain the ability to laugh. I hope they are. This generation has taken the burden of the world very fully upon their shoulders. In part, this has been thrust upon them by the war, among other things. But the advice of novelist Kurt Vonnegut Jr. to a 1970 graduating class might well be taken. He said in that commencement address that maybe we were too young to change the world and that we should all laugh more and go out and make love and have a good time. The other side of life will come all too soon.

Charles Reich, though much ridiculed for his work, The Greening of America, nonetheless makes an important point that rings true: that if we want to change the world, we have to change ourselves. The only real revolution is a revolution in consciousness. We must be the ones to show the world how to laugh again, how to love again. The world will be a better place 20 years from now only if we can live newer, fresher lifestyles now. We started out that way only to fumble the ball somewhere this side of the goaline. Our passionate concerns for justice and peace must be tempered by an ability to laugh and a dedication to something different in lifestyle. Love is the only way.

Editorial Attacked

Dear Editor:

In reference to your editorial of September 24 dealing with the individual and the checking of ID's, it would appear to me that your view of reducing the status of the student to that of a plastic card is pretty ridiculous.

The purpose of the ID is nothing more or less than to check to make sure only those who are supposed to eat in the dining hall are eating in the dining hall.

I think that drawing a parallel between ID checking and debasement of the individual shows a distinct degree of thin-skinness and arrogance on the Editor's part.

It would be better for the paper's image to write more about the pertinent problems than to write about the self-centered troubles of this particular Editor.

Sincerely,
DON GILBERT

Forum Plans For Fall

By Kathy Mier

The Forum group, headed by Lucy H. Proffitt, professor of speech, is engaged in wide range plans for the coming year.

The debate team will be formed of five seasoned members; Bob Cox, Kevin Russell, Janet Vail, and Margaret Jefferson. Carey Peeples is an alternate and several freshmen and sophomores have shown an interest.

The national debate topic for 1971 is; resolved: that greater controls should be imposed on the gathering and utilization of information about U.S. citizens by government agencies. The team has found this subject very exciting as they prepare for coming matches.

Included in the Forum organization are the participants in individual speaking contests. They compete in such areas as oral interpretation and contest drama. Several M.C. students who placed very high in individual speaking contests last year are returning; Mark Staub, Nancy McCleary, Sue Drees, and Mark Mertz.

The M.C. Forum has been working with other schools to develop debate and speech in this area. Last year a pilot workshop for small colleges was held at Maryville. During 1971, the MACCI colleges will participate in a series of workshops here.

The group is planning a large tournament to be held here October 29 and 30 called "The Highland Fling."

Peddlers Invade

Have you answered a knock on your door recently to find a stranger with something to peddle? If you have, you are not alone. In what Dean Massey has ascribed as "one of the worst rashes ever," the residence halls have been deluged with unathorized salesmen.

The standard "line" for the majority of these salesmen ostensibly has been to help win a sizable college scholarship. By selling quantities of books and magazines the salesmen said they hoped to gain points to win the scholarship. Despite the fact that these salesmen offered no samples of their products, a number of Maryville students bought expensive sets of books. Fortunately, most discovered the gimmicks shortly afterward and were able to cancel payment in time to regain their money.

Although the campus generally has been alerted to the presence of these peddlers, students are advised to be cautious in purchasing from salesmen. Only recognized companies, such as Avon, dry cleaning establishments and the ring company, are issued permits authorizing them to sell on campus. The Dean's office further emphasizes that no magazine or book representatives have been issued permits.

Singers Perform

By Wiley Rutledge

Those who were not in the Music Hall last Thursday night missed an extremely rare musical event. Not only was the performance of Schola Cantorum of Caracas excellent from a strictly musical point of view, it was a very unique program by our standards.

The program of the 19-voice group consisted entirely of Venezuelan music, and was greeted enthusiastically by the Maryville audience.

The group was asked to do two encores, and the first of these was Yesterday, done in English. This stirred the audience greatly because few of the singers speak English.

Friends of Distinction

Like so many musical performers these days, the Friends of Distinction are veritable acrobats" onstage at the chapel here, they choreograph their hit sounds "Grazin' in the Grass" and "Love, Or Let Me Be Lonely" with dips and swoops, jumps, whirls and cross-stage boogaloos.

How do they keep in shape for the concert-tour gymnastics? How do they stay so agile?

One important factor is sports. All four of the Friends are avid for natural exercise. Charlene Gibson loves to swim and to dance to James Brown records. Jessica Cleaves keeps her super shape through participating in all kinds of sports — swimming (she has a pool at home), horseback riding, and tennis. She also enjoys an occasional game of Chess.

But it's the men in the group — Harry Elston and Floyd Butler — who are the real athletes. Elston did a stint with the L.A. Angels as shortstop during the 1962 season. "My batting average was in the 300's," he remembers. But, fate being what it is, the singer in Harry soon took precedence over the sportsman in his soul and he found his natural groove in the music industry — keeping spare-time hours free for baseball, football, basketball, swimming.

Floyd found similar athletic ability vying with his musical talent. In high school in San Diego, he was champ diver ("They called me The King of the Jackknife") as well as a basketballer.

In fact, it was through sports that the Friends got their first real break in the music industry. The fellows' penchant for backyard basketball brought them together with a lot of sportsmen friends. Among the athletes they bucket-shotted with on weekends were Bill Russell of the Boston Celtics and Jim Brown, then of the Cleveland Browns. Just at the moment that Harry and Floyd put the Friends together and found a sound they thought was a winner, buddy Jim Brown called them to let them know he was forming his own talent management company. "That's funny," Harry said at the timely coincidence, "we've just put together an outasite singing group. We were going to call you!"

The rest, of course, is musical history: Brown heard the Friends, liked what he heard, signed them up and the athletic Friends have gone 3-for-3 in the singles department (3 million selling 45's in a row), 3-for-3 in the albums department (3 chart-making LPs) ... with out-of-the-park homers scored in their nightclub performances.

They still duel their buddies Brown and Russell on the hard-courts every so often, when they're all in L.A. Who's the best athlete among them? Seems like an unfair question to ask, with Brown and Russell being pro-sportsmen while Harry and Floyd are — after all — singers. But Floyd's emphatic with his answer: "I am!" he says, in mock indignation for having been asked. And then a satirical smile breaks through at the corners of his mouth.

But if the Friends of Distinction aren't all-stars at the hard court or the baseball diamond ... they are champs on stage!

CIV Covers Latin America

On October 13, the CIV speaker will be Mr. Jose Luis Velazco. His topic will deal with the underdevelopment and process of liberation in Latin America.

Mr. Velazco has had many experiences which qualify him to speak on this subject. He graduated in 1951 from Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Mexico City. In 1954, he was a special student at the Ecumenical Institute of W.C.C. at Bossey, Celigny Switzerland.

During 1955-56, Mr. Velazco served as rural pastor of several Mexican churches. He became Director of Christian Education for the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Mexico in 1959.

In 1965, he became director of the Presbyterian Student Center for the National University of Mexico. Mr. Velazco is presently serving as pastor of an ecumenical, Spanish-speaking church in Washington, D.C.

Political Science Is Best By Fahr

The Department of Political Science boasts a new part-time instructor, Marie-Anne Fahr.

A native of France, Dr. Fahr received her diploma in Political Science from the University of Lyon. She later earned a Ph.D. in International Law from the same institution while teaching French at Berkeley. There she met her husband, Dieter, a German by birth, who works in Oak Ridge for the Atomic Energy Commission. They now live in Knoxville and commute to work.

After coming to Knoxville, Dr. Fahr taught French at the University of Tennessee during the summer of 1970. She is now teaching French and Political Science at Knoxville College and substituting at the University, in addition to teaching American democracy at Maryville College.

Besides her teaching, Dr. Fahr has other academic activities to keep her busy. She is currently working on a dissertation in Political Science at UT concerning Baulist France's position in the United Nations. She is also writing an article to be published in a book edited by UT.

Aside from her studies, Dr. Fahr enjoys tennis, swimming, and music — she plays both the piano and the violin. But her favorite past-time is traveling. She lived for some time in Africa, where her father taught nuclear physics. Last summer she and her husband spent their vacation travelling in South America.

Next, she plans to visit China. Familiar with African and western civilization, Dr. Fahr is also enthusiastic about Oriental culture. She became interested in Oriental culture when she lived in San Francisco, and only wishes she could visit mainland China also.

Student Meets Kosygin

By Debbie McClain

While traveling through Russia recently, freshman student Loren Hamersley had one of the most memorable experiences of his life; that of personally meeting with Premier Aleksi Kosygin. Says Hamersley, "I don't think that many students have had the opportunity to meet such a world leader, and therefore, it has meant a lot to me."

Loren, who although is an American citizen, has spent the past twelve years living in Frankfurt, Germany. There, his father who is employed by the United States government, is a Quality Control Inspector, as he inspects military equipment that the US buys from European firms. Loren is the younger of the Hamersleys' two children, having an older sister who is presently working on her Ph.D. in German at Ohio State University.

After leaving the US at the age of seven, Loren attended a German school from second through twelveth grade, and then continued his education by going an extra year to an American military high school in Wiesbaden. Loren commented that German high schools were much more difficult than ours, requiring long terms of math, English, and a foreign language. However, he felt that because of this, upon graduation, the German students were more wellrounded in terms of education than those of the United States.

Loren considers traveling his main hobby. By living in Germany, he had easy access to many of his neighboring countries, and therefore had the opportunity to travel extensively throughout most of the European countries. Besides this hobby, he is interested in reading about and discussing politics, and for this reason, he is contemplating political science as his major.

Being quite happy here on the Maryville campus, Loren enjoys meeting new people and talking to the professors. He feels that he is a part of a fine community.

Faculty Publish; Not Perish

This year, the Echo wishes to devote space each week to the activities of the faculty members, both on and off campus. This week's column features the English Department.

During the summer, the Department held two one-week workshops concerning the English courses 101-102 and 105. Mr. Bushing, in cooperation with other faculty members, revised the Systematic Discourse Outline, creating the Manuel for Outlining and Research.

This fall, Dr. Fowler is continuing her work with the creative writing workshop. Meeting C hour Mondays and Thursdays, the program is completely voluntary and is open to all interested students.

This year, Dr. Jackson hopes to continue her study of the dialect of the natives of Eastern Tennessee. Our professor of linguistics worked last year with several other people, including UT's Mathalia Wright, in the course of her study.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Beck is nearing the completion of her dissertation concerning the dramatic poetry of Randall Jarell. Jarell, who achieved prominence as a "war poet," was an avid defender of the sagging reputations of Frost and Whitman.

Frosh Lose to TMI

The Maryville Freshmen, playing their first game Saturday, were defeated by TMI, 13-0. The Freshmen were victims of two fumbles which were later turned into scores by the Cadets.

In the second quarter the Cadets recovered a fumble on the Scots 20, and several plays later Carl Holthur went over for the score. Troy Johnston added the point to make the score 7-0, and that is how it stood until the fourth quarter.

Following a fumbled punt by the Scots, Cadet quarterback Bobby Lee pitched a seven-yard pass to Gil Campbell. The point was missed and the final score showed TMI 13, Maryville 0.

This Saturday Scot squad travels to Emory, Virginia, where they will play the Emory and Henry Wasps. Game time is at 2:30 p.m.

MC Celebrates Now Town

By Kathy Mier

Last week the members of the town and college community celebrated the opening of "Now Town." The plans for the rebuilding of the downtown area began several years ago when the tax proceeds of the town fell to n critical low. The city council voted to renovate the business district in order to draw store owners back into the area. The Atlanta Constitution cites Maryville as the first completed project of the new urban renewal program under the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

The college played a large part in the activities. On Tuesday, September 28, the Maryville Kiwanis Club sponsored a luncheon at the Maryville College Field House (gym) for Governor Dunn and other dignitaries.

In a speech given here after lunch Dunn stated his often quoted opinion that "busing is totally un-American." He added that he would fight the ruling legally. According to Dunn, President Nixon is committed to peace and will find a way out of the war oriented economy. The governor reported on his trip to Puerto Rico to attend the Governors' Conference. The conference lead him to realize that Tennessee had a better economy and more social progress than many other states. Dunn concluded that "no state had the opportunity to advance into the future as has Tennessee."

Dunn spoke again Wednesday September 29, to the celebrants at "Now Town" and officially dedicated the new business district. President Copeland closed the rally with prayer. After the dedication, the citizens flocked to Washington St. and Broadway to watch The Pride of the Southland Marching Band from U.T., The Highlander Band, and local high school bands.

SNEA Holds Meeting

By Nancy Rankin

The Student National Education Association's opening meeting was Monday, October 4, at 6:15 p.m. in room 201 Thaw. The program was a filmstrip and tape by the NEA-TEPS committee on "Why Self Governance for the Teaching Profession."

Under the leadership of president Art Hafner, other programs this year are aimed at future teachers in both the secondary and elementary school professions. Dues, five dollars per person, provide subscriptions for two periodicals: "Tennessee Teacher" and "Today's Education." This sum also furnishes a student with liability during his period of student teaching.

Any interested students, faculty, and staff are invited to attend the meetings.

Intramurals Begin

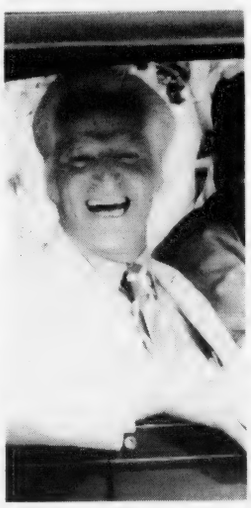
The intramural flagball season got underway last week. Five teams are competing for the title. They are the Independents, Sig, Sophomores, Juniors, and the Conspiracy.

In the first game played, the Independents downed Sig 43-13. Bill Cochran threw for five touchdowns with Brad Towne catching two, and Dan McKinstry, Malcolm Westbrook and Jim Lester each one. Malcolm also ran a kickoff back for a score. The defense intercepted five passes and returned one for a touchdown.

For Sig, Kent Smith threw two touchdowns to Lou Hart.

The Sophomores downed the Conspiracy 43-0 last Friday. Brad Hague sparked the winners, and Walter Gross, along with Wayne Kramer, caught touchdown passes.

Freshmen Elect Officers



The first project of the freshman class was the election of officers. This was done on Wednesday, September 27, in Pearson's main lobby. The following were elected:

President - Buddy Haines

Vice-Pres. - Eileen Morris

Secretary - Judith Fain

The three winners held a class meeting on October 1st. If the officers are as good as the ideas the class had, it should be a good year for the freshmen.

Shapespere Appears on Twelfth Night

"Twelfth Night," regarded by many critics as Shakespeare's most perfect comedy, is being presented by the Maryville College Playhouse October 22 through October 29 at 8:15 p.m. It will be directed by Thomas E. Jones, assisted by Miss Diane Wood.

"Twelfth Night" is a structural joy. The main plot is complicated but compact, and the sub-plots ripple through the play with ease. Although a great deal happens, the structure of the play is very smoothly handled. The main plot centers on the mistaken identity of the brother-sister twins, Sebastian and Viola and their love adventures with Olivia and Orsino.

Robert Cox and Suzanne Drees play the roles of Sebastian and Viola, and Coralie Usrey and Thomas Martin are cast as Olivia and Orsino. Others in the cast include Mark Mertz as Malvolio, Nancy McCleary as Maria, Mark Stoub as Sir Toby Belch, Thomas Williamson as Sir Andrew Aguecheek, Paul Hollingsworth as Feste, John Gossett as Antonio, Stephen Long as a sea captain, Stephen Mason as Curio, James Sainta as Valentine, King Bennett as Fabian. Other members of the cast are Robert Gillespie, Jean Tiffany, Sharon Murphy, Steven Maggie, Merida Kearns-Preston, Angela Glenn, and Terry Noack.

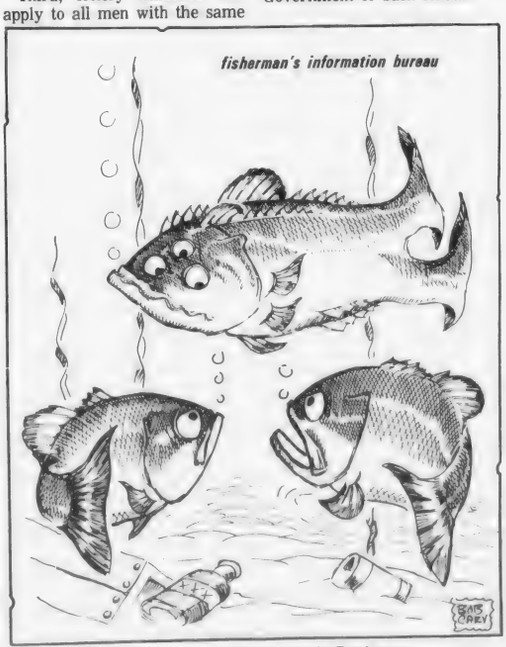
"Twelfth Night" is gay and festive like the holiday it commemorates. It is full of action and sparkles with wit, wisdom and satire. Its language ranges from beautiful blank verse to pertinent prose. It is a variety show in the best sense, because it provides everything for everybody's entertainment - "Or, What You Will."

Tickets for the October 22 through October 29 peformances are available at the Maryville College Theatre office. Or call 982-2911 for reservations.

Draft Chills MC Males

WASHINGTON (WCNS) — With the passage by the Senate last week of the draft extension bill, the Selective Service System is once again authorized to induct men into the armed forces — but with a few strings.

First, the draft will last only until July 1, 1973. President Nixon hopes to have replaced draft calls with sufficient numbers of volunteers by then, and the induction machinery will be put on ice in case of national emergency. After that date, therefore, 18-year olds will still have to register with the Selective Service.



Second, male college students no longer receive automatic deferments while in school. Congress, bowing to pressure from college students and others for a more equitable draft, agreed to authorize the President to end the undergraduate deferments, a step he has already promised to take.

Starting this past summer new students (not enrolled in the 1970-71 academic year) will not be deferred, although if they have started classes they may postpone induction until the present term ends. All other students are eligible for induction after four years in college or when they reach 24 years of age, whichever comes first.

Third, lottery numbers will apply to all men with the same birthdate, regardless of the location of their draft boards. Requested by the President, this new rule will end charges that certain draft boards were "safer" than others. Thus all men with the same lottery number will be inductable at the same time.

Conscientious objectors will be given two-year assignments to civilian service. The Senate-House Conference Committee emphasized that this work will "parallel in his experiences, to a reasonable extent, the experiences of the young man who is inducted in his stead."

The Mansfield amendment to require total U.S. troop withdrawal from Vietnam was approved in modified form as a "sense of Congress" title in the act. Mansfield's nine-month timetable is now stated as "the earliest practicable date" for cessation of "all military operations of the United States in Indochina," and "a date certain...for the prompt and orderly withdrawal of all United States military forces...subject to the release of all American prisoners of war held by the Government of North Vietnam and forces allied with such Government, and an accounting for all Americans missing in action who have been held by or known to such Government or such forces."

Homecoming Shows Spirit

By Nancy Rankin

Maryville College reflects the "Spirit of the Seventies" as Homecoming activities got underway yesterday afternoon with registration of alumni. Last night, a bonfire and pep rally at 7:30 P.M. was highlighted by the announcement of the queen, Miss Lindy Harris.

At 8:30 P.M. the Maryville College Theatre presented "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown." After the play, the chapel was in use from 11:00 P.M. to 2:00 A.M. where "Golden Flicks" were shown with free food and drink for those building floats.

Saturday events include a homecoming parade through Now Town Maryville, featuring the floats, the Highlander Band, the Homecoming court, and a high school marching competition among area bands.

Prior to the parade, two continuing education seminars will be held in Sutton from 9:00 A.M. until 10:30 A.M. A panel discussion, "The Greening of America, Future Shock and Changing Values," and a lecture discussion, "The United States and Two Chinas: Facts, Emotions, Dilemmas," are open to any interested participants.

The football game at 2:00 P.M. pits the Scots against Randolph-Macon. Halftime entertainment will be provided by the band and drill team plus the presentation of the queen and her court.

Homecoming activities will culminate in a soul rock concert featuring "The Friends of Distinction" at Wilson Chapel, Saturday evening at 8:30 P.M.

Saturday events, planned especially for the alumni, include registration and coffee from 8:30 A.M. to 9:00 A.M., the J. D. Davis testimonial luncheon at 11:45 A.M., and an alumni barbecue at 5:30 P.M. followed by the Honaker Club meeting at 6:00 P.M.

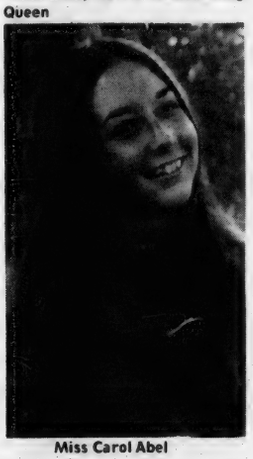
Lindy Harris Reigns as Queen

By Bev Bacon

Lindy Harris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Williams R. Harris of 1649 Valley Road, Gainesville, Ga. has been chosen Homecoming Queen by the student body. In her royal capacity, Lindy will preside, with her court, over the traditional homecoming parade and game festivities in the theme "The Sprit of the 70's." Lindy, a senior art major, is a member of Theta Epsilon, the Echo staff, a past member of the homecoming committee, and is a senior counselor in Davis Hall.

Carol Abel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gene Abel of 3rd Drive, Concord, was one of four senior girls chosen by the student body for Lindy's court. Carol has been a class officer for three years, an officer of Psi Sigma Mu, a senior counselor, a house vice-chairman, and has served on the Chilhowean staff. Carol, a psychology major, has also served on committees for ACC.

Another attendant from Lebanon, Tennessee is Emily Dowdy, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Dowdy. This senior is a member of the Echo staff and Theta Epsilon. Emily, an English major, has served on two ACC committees.



Jane Roseborough, the former Jane Gilbert, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ben P. Gilbert of 746 Hillside Drive in Gainesville. Jane is married to Doug Roseborough, another MC student, and is majoring in art. She has served on ACC committees and is a member of Psi Sigma Mu.

A senior Elementary Education major and member of the queen's court is Nan Lantz. Nan is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Lantz of Route 4, Powell. She was a cheerleader for two years for the Scots and has served on ACC committees.

Lindy's official coronation will be during halftime activities of today's game. The queen and her court will reign over all remaining 1971 MC Homecoming activities.

Dorms Decorate With Spirit

By Debbie McClain

The dorm decorations for the 1971 Maryville College Homecoming are in full swing. The principal theme for the whole campus is the "Spirit of the 70's", however, each participating dorm has chosen its own sub-theme in accordance with the overall idea.

The girls in Dorm 1 are decorating their lounges, halls, and windows to the theme of "People are the Hope of the 70's". Together, the four mountainside floor lounges represent a stadium filled with people who are cheering on the Scots in the Scots vs. Randolph-Macon game. As for the townside lounges, the girls on each floor have chosen a particular season of the year and are painting some familiar scenes on the lounge windows. These scenes portray segments of Maryville College students' lives which show hope for the 70's.

Tentative plans for Davis Hall have been made. The downstairs front lobby will have a rather patriotic theme as decorations will be red, white, and blue in color. Adding to this, a navy blue background will be behind the main desk, and on it, there will be stars, the moon, spaceships, and astronauts, to give it an "outer space" effect. For the townside lounges, the girls decided to work together and make a large peace symbol ranging from the first to the fourth floor with the word "Victory" written over the top and the theme, "Spirit of the 70's" underneath. The individual room windows will be decorated with school spirit slogans, such as "Go Scots!".

The two remaining dorms, Pearsons and Lloyd, have not made any definite plans as of yet, but Pearsons has promised a "big surprise."

This year, the judges will award a plaque to the dorm which most closely portrays the theme "Spirit of the 70's".

Editorial

Changing Times, Changing Rules

Ridiculous to some, important to others, Maryville College's Alcoholic beverage regulation must be questioned in light of recent events.

This regulation states: "Historically, Maryville College has discouraged the use of alcoholic beverages. The possession and-or consumption of alcoholic beverages on campus, in college-owned facilities or at official functions off campus is prohibited."

Either the community must enforce its rules or change them. With the recent violations, this policy has been and will continue to be a complete and utter failure. For the community to continue its present rule reflects either a complacent naivity or a blatant hypocricy. There must be a change.

Why a change? Basically, the current policy ignores two issues: (1) human nature, and (2) the lack of social stability at Maryville College.

Social life is part of any human community. To deny social life is to deny an essential aspect of human experience. Human nature cannot function around a negative denial of social reality as with the College regulation. Instead, a positive and stable social center must be established at MC.

What effect does social instability produce? When a form of social release, such as beer drinking, is denied, excesses are bound to occur as those of Friday, October 1. The lack of social activity, intense pressures, and human nature merely reinforce these excesses. When such excesses occur, the community is not functioning because excesses of any type are detrimental to community growth.

To avoid such excesses, the rule must be changed to promote social stability. One proposal to be considered is the sale of beer on campus to adults of legal age.

Other Reasons For Change

An additional need for change in the regulation is to bring College statutes into line with the laws for the State of Tennessee. By ignoring the eighteen year old majority law, the College violates the Law's intent. The College cannot retain its position of in loco parentis if it seeks a community of mature adults. However, to protect the community against individuals who fail to accept the burden of maturity the law imposes, certain safeguards must be retained.

In the past few years, the College has made changes in its academic structure with the new curriculum and in its governing structure with the All-College Council.

Now is the time for change in social tradition.

Now is the time for an evaluation of the alcoholic beverage regulation that recognizes reality and contributes to community development.

With the implicit understanding that no simple solution exists to this contradictory situation, The ACC through its committees is implored to undertake an immediate investigation.

To ignore this situation and its underlying causes as in past years merely compounds an already complex situation. It is such ignorance that could eventually destroy Maryville College.

Library Asks For Opinions

We need to know what you — students, faculty, and staff — think of the Library. Is the building adequate? attractive? comfortable? Is the collection usable? accessible? ample? How can the Library and its services be improved? These questions are on the questionnaire prepared by the Library Committee for the self-evaluation required by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. In order to present as comprehensive a survey as possible, the cooperation of the entire Maryville College community is needed. As soon as you receive your questionnaire, we urge you to answer it and then put it in the Library box in the post office or in the box designated for this purpose in the Library or Student Center.

Science Foundation Fellowships Told

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The National Research Council has been called upon again to advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of Graduate Fellowships. Panels of outstanding scientists appointed by the Research Council will evaluate applications of candidates. Final selection will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced on March 15, 1972.

The NSF Graduate Fellowship Program is being restructured for the 1972-1973 academic year. Applicants must be beginning graduate students by the Fall of 1972, or must not have completed more than one calendar year of full-time or part-time graduate study by the Fall of 1972. Subject to the availability of funds, new fellowships awarded in the Spring of 1972 will be for periods of three years, the second and third years contingent on certification to the Foundation by the fellowship institution of the student's satisfactory progress toward an advanced degree in the sciences.

These fellowships will be awarded for study or work leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields, in history or social work, or for work leading to medical, dental, law or joint Ph.D. - professional degrees. All applicants must be citizens of the United States and will be judged solely on the basis of ability. The annual stipend for Graduate Fellows will be $3,600 for a twelve-month tenure with no dependency allowances.

The deadline date for the submission of applications for NSF Graduate Fellowships is November 29, 1971. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship Office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20418.

Students Have Sexual Rights

By Tom Coe

The official college attitude towards sexual activity has always been one of disbelief. The college has always acted as if that sort of thing didn't exist. At least not here. We are, of course, a "church-related institution" and what other position would a school that has produced so many missionaries select? Lately though, it seems as if another unwritten law has come into effect. Sexual activity seems to be grounds for instant dismissal.

Can a college, church-oriented or not, take such a stand? The position is obviously a pietistic and moralistic one. But who has the right to say what you, as an adult, do or do not do with your body and soul? It is an inalienable right that human beings may fall in love and may express that in any appropriate manner. It is also a right that a human being may enjoy his body and have pleasurable experiences. I'm not saying that sex is not often abused and misused, because it is. It is probably the most potent force in the realm of emotions. It can often be distorted but for the same reason, it can be the deepest and most whole expression that one human being can make towards another. For a college to say that this is wrong is a crime. The marriage standard just doesn't hold water. People fall in love and hope to express that long before they get married. Sex is not just for procreation; we aren't Roman Catholics. Sex is, most basically, a wonderful way for a couple to express something to one another. I used to have a friend who called sex the highest form of communication.

Maryville College has always expressed in its purpose a desire to implement Christian principles in its function. It has always seemed to me that what Jesus was talking about in general, was being fully human. Isn't that what the Golden Rule says so beautifully? Christianity is not judgmental, either. It is not, in its Biblical form, moralistic. The position of this college denies a basic part of every human being. It denies the right of two people to capture the highest, most beautiful piece of humanity, sexual love. People just can't get closer, people just cannot grow any more than when they express their love towards one another.

The school's "protection" of its students from sex is hideous. Turning a head is almost as bad as the outright prohibition of such things. I'm not saying that the school should produce a policy statement favoring sexual activity. The school should, though, treat its students, who are adults, as adults. Other schools, such as Oberlin, have allowed coed rooming. Let Oberlin be congratulated in their realism. Coed rooming does not destroy Christian ideals or tamper with the educational function of a college.

This whole thing has absolutely nothing to do with visitation. Sex was present at Maryville College long before visitation. There always places off campus, the woods, and local motels. And sex, thank God (really), is here to stay. Students do have rights, as much as a college or university may hedge on that fact, and one of them is the right to their own bodies. Students have the right to sexual encounter and sexual love.

MC Board of Directors meeting set this week

The semi-annual board meeting of the Maryville College Directors convened Thursday morning, October 14 in Sutton Science Center, Room 113. The agenda included reports on academics, admissions and finances.

A Thursday evening dinner held in the college dining hall for Board members and wives, department heads and All-College Council members heard Nyles Ayers, President of the Tennessee Council of Private Colleges. Mr. Ayers, in an initial visit to the Maryville campus, was instrumental in the Tennessee legislature's passage of a bill alloting state aid to private educational institutions.

Board meetings will continue through Friday with an emphasis on pertinent affairs of the college community, especially the All-College Council's revised copy of the campus governance manual.

The five new members include the wife of a prominent Knoxville physicial, two businessmen, an educator, and a writer.

Mrs. Joe D. (Catherine) Beals Jr. of Knoxville is a 1947 graduate of Maryville College and is presently secretary of the Alumni Association. An elder of the Second Presbyterian Church, Mrs. Beals is an honorary and co-authored another.

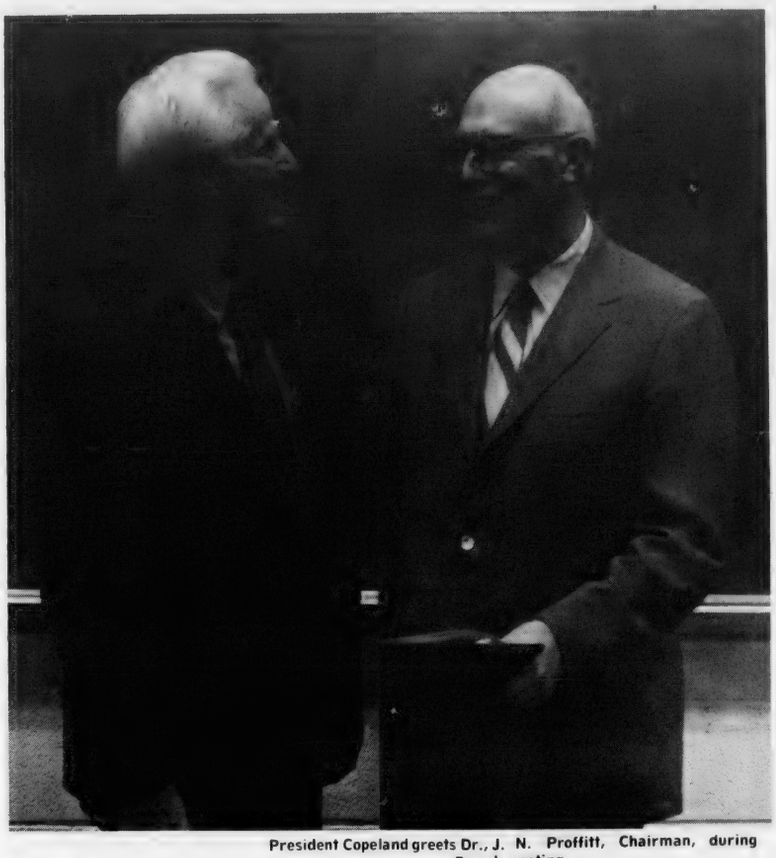
Ed Williams is owner and manager of a fruit grove in Weirsdale, Fla. He is a Presbyterian elder and has been active in support of Maryville College for the past several years.



Dr. James N. Proffitt of Maryville is Chairman of the Board of Directors which will be meeting Thursday and Friday on the campus.

associate of the Board of Christian Education, recording secretary for the Knox County Medical Auxiliary and trail co-chairman for the Dogwood Arts Festival.

Residential Life Examined

By Sarah Winbigler

This week, the Echo's series on All College Council committees is presenting a brief look at one of the Social, Cultural, and Recreational Life committees, the Community Standards and Residential Life Committee. This is one of the most active A.C.C. committees since its duties cover almost every phase of community life.

Because the committee is so large, the members felt they could be more effective if they divided into smaller sub-committees. This arrangement facilitates the discussion of problems, and it enables the group to cover all problems without spreading itself too thin. The entire committee tries to meet together at least once every two weeks. At the present time there are three sub-committees: Dorm Structure, Dining Hall Services, and one which is investigating the effects of the lowering of the legal age to 18.

The Dorm Structure sub-committee is currently investigating such things as coed dorms, open dorms, women's hours, and the key system. It is also analyzing visitation in order to improve it by discovering any faults or problems that need to be worked out. The Sophomore Class has presented a proposal favoring the abolishment of women's curfews, and this is presently being considered by the sub-committee. Lois Cowan is representing the sophomores in this study.

The sub-committee is also revising and working on dorm structure itself. One representative from each dorm is working with the sub-committee. Rather than lumping all dorms together under one "blanket consideration," the sub-committee is looking at each dorm as an individual unit and is attempting to work out the best possible living plan for the students in that dorm.

The Dining Hall Services subcommittee, obviously enough, is surveying the services in the dining hall. It is checking out the possible ways to improve the present service. It is also trying to discover why some of last year's improvements, such as later breakfasts, mid-morning coffee and doughnuts, and use of salad bowls, have been discontinued.

The third sub-committee is investigating the various ways in which Maryville College and its students will be affected by the lowering of the legal age to 18. One effect which is already being felt is the Sophomore Class's proposal to legalize alcohol on campus. Class member Mickey McFadien is working with the sub-committee on this proposal.

The purpose of the Community Standards and Residential Life Committee is to make an objective study of all things under consideration. It makes no judgments; it merely explores all sides of an issue and prepares an evaluation to take before the All College Council.

Bruce and Barbara Return

Bruce and Barbara Semple are the new head residents of Dorm III for 1971-72. While Bruce is busy trying to keep us boys in line, Barbara is very occupied with their son, Jason, whom she considers to be the head resident of Dorm III.

Bruce and Barbara, both of whom graduated from Maryville College, were married Bruce's last year here at Maryville. Since that time Bruce has been teaching in the Maryville City School System and has been employed with Collegiate Marketing & Management Inc. He is now a full-time graduate student at U.T. while Barbara is a full-time mother, wife, and housekeeper.

Both of the Semple's are very enthusiastic about their job here at Maryville. Bruce and Barbara are greatly concerned about the students here at Maryville College and are willing to help all students with any problems they have.

We're glad you're back, Bruce and Barbara.

Meet MC Alumni

By Becky Buchanan

Homecoming weekend is many things to many people. For returning alumni it is an especially poignant occasion. Maryville is lucky to have more than a few former students back at this year's activities. Remember, the "establishment" once cursed the clanging radiators of Carnegie, celebrated football victories in Memorial, and put out mouse traps in Pearsons.

Mr. Shannon Anderson tells of coming to Maryville College from Knoxville in the early days of the automobile. The boys would then meet the girls at the train station with horse-drawn wagons to haul their trunks up the hill, which the cars could not quite climb.

Football and baseball players will want to talk with Mr. J. D. Hughes about how the games were played in 1941. Mr. Hughes was a fullback for the Scots' team of '41 and played third base on the baseball team.

Of interest to Maryville wrestlers will be the return of Mr. Clem Hahn, D.D.S. According to my sources, 1941 was also a year for some excellent wrestling by Mr. Hahn.

Strike up a conversation with some other members of the post-graduate generation and hear firsthand stories of Maryville beating U.T. in football, going to chapel every morning at 8:00 a.m., or that grand bygone pastime of panty-raiding a girls' dorm!

Poetry

House on the Edge

And there was rain on the window,
and the lamp wasn't on,
The streets were all gray
And the sky had melted,
and run down at the edges.

There was a quietness
hard to describe
and harder to bear.
There was a coldness within,
even dampness was warm.
Words were unknown--
Even tears would not come.

The world was destroyed and I didn't care.

Thoughts ran in patterns
of memories and pain--
Things I regretted,
or more things of pain.

Love was a memory
and hate was there too.
Lives had been met--
then dismembered in turn.

The world was destroyed and I didn't care.

I stood on a plain
Where the sane are not blest,
Where the living are deaf
and the dead will not speak.
My body was cold and damp,
My thoughts, like the house,
were dingy and bare.
My feet were still wet
with mud from the grave.
I was here in this house where God is fake
And love -- Love is the fool's mistake.

the laundry room in Pearsons the English department the fire escape at Memorial

Apes Artists

An orangutan in the Topeka, Kansas Zoo paints pictures on canvas. What's more, when one of his oils was entered in a human art show under a phony name recently, it was awarded first prize. While this may say something about the judgment of the critics, the ape's feat has more important aspects. According to October SCIENCE DIGEST, the five-year-old orang, Djakarta Jim, is providing physical anthropologists with valuable information about ape proclivity for tool invention and use — something that has been in serious question until now.

ACC Debates

By Patti Shelton

The first item on the agenda of the All-College Council's Oct. 8 meeting was the welcome of Buddy Haynes, new freshman class president and freshman representative to the Council.

After the welcome, reports were heard from the various committees. First on the list was Dr. Willey for the academic committe. He reported the inclusion of Greek into the language curriculum and stated the committee's desire to suit the requirements to the individual's needs and previous courses.

Doug Chase and Chaplain Harrison were present to give tentative plans for January meetings from the worship and special services committee. This year they hope for a less structured series and more utilization of faculty and students for greater participation. Doug also asked for and received council sanction for promotion of National Bible Week which is Nov. 7-13.

Dr. Copeland asked Doug to prepare a follow-up report on Mr. Olsen's study of religious life on campus which was presented last year. This follow-up is to be presented to the Board.

The next discussion concerned the social, recreational and cultural activities committee with primary attention given to the group studying dining hall conditions. Dean Elia reported that this group felt that they had been overlooked by the Council. It was brought out, however, that no written report had been presented, and Dr. Stine called for the preparation of such a report in the immediate future. The entire council affirmed a need for the student body to voice not only complaints but also viable suggestions for the improvement of service. The Council sanctioned further study in this area.

Plans for meeting with the Board of Directors were discussed. Dr. Copeland announced that the entire Council would meet with the Board for dinner on Thursday. Dr. Copeland also asked that the council members determine what pertinent issues should be presented to the Board.

At this point, Mr. Ramger expressed his concern over the selection of a new academic dean. Dr. Stine stated that two candidates were selected through consensus of the panel last year but both declined the offer.

Dr. Copeland next reported on his visit to Washington, D.C. this week for the Co-operative College Development Program Consortium, a program under Title III classification which is concerned with the development of small colleges, particularly in the area of faculty training. Maryville College was asked to be coordinator for this program which is composed of forty small colleges in this region. Dr. Copeland also met with the Tenn. Council of Private Colleges, the president of which, Mr. Miles Ayers, will be on campus this weekend to address the Board and Council.

Dr. Willey announced that Ralph Dunham, the Washington official who is MC's Title III contact, will be on campus Mon. Nov. 1 to talk with the participators in the Title III-sponsored faculty workshops, National Teaching Fellows and students.

Mr. Laster told the Council that there is available in his office a new brochure concerning transfers with Associate of Arts degrees from junior colleges. Mr. Ramger commended personal attention given prospective students by various offices on campus.

A visitor to the meeting was introduced by Mr. Laster as Mr. Burnis Hall, a doctoral candidate from U-T working toward a degree in Educational Administration. Mr. Hall is a frequent visitor to MC, studying small college admissions. He is also very interested in our unique form of government. After a decision that the council would meet on Nov. 3 without agenda at Dr. Willey's home for discussion of various topics, the meeting was adjourned until the next scheduled meeting on the afternoon of Oct. 20.

REMINDER: Notices of ACC meetings and lists of the members of the committees are posed in each dorm. Consult these if you have suggestions.

Faculty Sojourn Into Soviet Union

By Lynn Schieber

In mid-July of last summer, two members of the Maryville College community made a four-week tour of Russia and the Scandinavian countries. During the trip, Dr. Walker of the history department and Miss Lightfoot of the Registrar's office spent sixteen days in the Soviet Union. Among the areas visited were Moscow, Kiev, Yalta and Leningrad.

One of Dr. Walker's greatest impressions was of the enormous crowds the two encountered everywhere they went. The Russian people would wait in line for two or three hours to purchase the simplest items, or more than three hours to see Lenin's tomb.

The two ladies were especially impressed by the general appearance of poverty, particularly in contrast to the wealthy country of Sweden. Fabrics and workmanship seemed on the whole to be shoddy. Plumbing was poor and not kept up. Even the new, ultra-modern 6,000 room hotel at which Dr. Walker and Miss Lightfoot stayed was being painted with a large tree branch.

There were no private homes, except for very small ones on the communal farms in the Ukrain and the Crimea, and most people lived in high-rise apartments. These were all built alike and very drab, giving the ladies a very depressing feeling. Like most everything else, these apartments were assigned by a central board.

It surprised Miss Lightfoot and Dr. Walker that they saw few young people in the city. During the summer the youth were sent to Commisal camps, where they worked in the fields during the day. Being privileged to visit one of these camps, the ladies were amazed to see 8-10 year olds wearing the Communist armband, standing at attention for hours on both sides of a huge picture of Lenin.

In fact, Lenin haunted the two travelers wherever they went. Pictures of the man were found everywhere, and even flower beds were planted in the likeness of his face.

While they were there, Miss Lightfoot and Dr. Walker also had the privilege to meet and question three party members. They were questioned critically on policy and philosophy.

One thing that Dr. Walker and Miss Lightfoot did not expect was the lack of restrictions upon tourists in the Soviet Union. Neither was the country as rustic as they had imagined. They even found more capitalism than they had expected — ownership of private property, investments, savings accounts with 3 per cent interest and credit buying.

On the whole trip, Dr. Walker and Miss Lightfoot found their Russian guides to be witty and charming. And yet, they found with regret that the Soviets feared the Americans in much the same way most Americans fear "those commies."

Foreign Policy Meetings Held On MC Campus

Maryville College has been selected by the U.S. State Department as one of three sponsoring agents in the U.S. this year to host "Community Meetings on U.S. Foreign Policy."

The State Department's "Community Meetings" program is designed to meet increased public interest in world affairs. By bringing members of the community into contact with knowledgeable Washington officials, ideas and information can be exchanged about foreign problems, policies and programs.

A four-man team of foreign affairs specialists will attend classes and hold open discussions at Maryville College, The University of Tennessee, Knoxville College, Carson-Newman College, Hiwassee College, and Morristown College during the October 25-29 visit.

Individual team members are also scheduled to appear on local television programs and speak at various community functions.

Team members selected for the East Tennessee visit are specialists on U.S. foreign policy in the Middle East, Africa, East Asia, and Latin America. Each man has a background of overseas service in his area of competence.

Students Learn By Practice

By Leigh Thorington

Described as a rewarding, practical, and enjoyable learning experience by the students involved, the Medical Technology program at Maryville College is associated with Blount Memorial Hospital. Ed Bush John Bleazey and Linna Schotter are three Maryville students who work at the hospital getting practical application of the material learned in their classes at the hospital.

Because all three work from 7:00 PM to 3:00 AM, these students are allowed to live off campus. Obvious reasons are meal and sleeping schedules.

Both Ed and John want to continue in medicine where medical technologists are in demand. Linna has no definite plans , but she would like to stay in a field where she can see the results of her work in the people with which she works.

The program was started in 1952 because of a need for medical technologists. The first student received full accreditation although the program wasn't accredited as a whole until later.

The hospital accepts from two to four students a year who have completed the necessary requirements. Twelve months of courses at the hospital prepare the students for state and national accreditation tests.

Application should be made at the end of the sophomore year to Dr. Shields.

History Studies

While the new faces on campus are busy, the more familiar faces continue their studies.

Since June, 1971, Dr. Lewis of the History Department has been abstracting articles from the East German Publication, Deutsche Aussenpolitik. These will appear in the reference series, Historical Abstracts, and in America: History and Life.

Dr. Parker, also of the History Department, has written an article, "Charles G. Finney: Early Exponent of 'Higher Law,'" to be published in spring, 1972.

College Papers Questioned

De Kalb, Ill. - (I.P.) - Four of the people most intimately concerned with the role of the student newspaper at Northern Illinois University have gone on the record with some candid answers to tough questions about "The Northern Star."

The names behind these views are Dr. Donald Grubb, head of the department of journalism since its creation in 1959; Roy Campbell, advisor to the newspaper for more than a decade; Raymond Gibson, 1970-71 first semester editor, and Barbara Moise, last spring's editor.

One of the hottest issues involving campus journalism is the use of obscene language or other forms of four-letter language in the pages of the student press. Single words of this nature in a student newspaper have created legislative thunderbolts aimed at the publication.

Reacting to the statement that obscene words have no place in a student or any other newspaper. Grubb responded. "I agree. If the writer can't express what he wants to express in ordinary lanauage, his vocabulary probably is suffering. I don't think that vulgarity or obscenity, in itself, really makes a point."

Campbell also agreed. "They degrade the tone of a newspaper. They serve no really useful function. Most obscenities have settings that reflect the oral or verbal value of the word, rather than the printed."

Both student editors reflect mixed feelings. Gibson believes he would use an obscene word. if it would help the content of a story. He referred to the Chicago 7 trial where a defendant was given a contempt citation and six-month jail sentence for using an obscene word in court. Gibson asked how you could explain the story without using the word.

Although she used a vulgarity in her opening editorial. Miss Moise maintained, "I personally don't believe in putting in swear words for shock value." She agreed that these words can end communication with readers. "Just from my editorial. when I put in that one little swear word, ninety per cent of the feedback I got revolved around that one word and the rest of the editorial went unnoticed."

Grubb believes that student newspapers should not take stands on political candidates or issues, other than in student elections. The other three disagreed. The journalism department head noted that most campuses have no competing newspapers to present diverse opinions on candidates and issues.

He added, "I would hold a completely opposite view for the professional press. because this is an important mission of theirs." He called for the campus press to give as balanced a news treatment as possible of national and state political developments.

Campnell believed that, with the voting age lowered to 18, students are becoming more involved politically. He noted that the paper has a responsibility to present how candidates feel on issues related to student concerns, such as Viet Nam.

Gibson said, "It's the student newspaper's right and responsibility to try to persuade students as to the kind of candidates who are espousing what line."

Marijuana vs Alcohol As Popular Intoxicant

Los Angeles, Calif.-(I.P.)- Marijuana could become competitive with alcohol as a popular intoxicant, a University of California at Los Angeles pharmacologist forecast here recently.

"It is conceivable that marijuana could become competitive with alcohol, exhibiting many of the same qualities for moderate and excessive use over long periods of time," declared Professor William H. McGlothlin.

"Future patterns of marijuana use will include amounts substantially above those typically observed today, with daily consumption of four to six cigarettes not being uncommon among regular users," he predicted.

"With the availability of the more potent (cannabis) preparations, some individuals will likely consume several times this amount," Professor McGlothlin said. At present the typical, current "marijuana user" in this country probably smokes no more than one cigarette per week, he noted.

"A student who smokes one marijuana cigarette daily would be considered a heavy user by current standards — yet his consumption is only 15 per cent of what is considered moderate in Eastern countries and no more than one or two per cent of what is regarded as very heavy use there," Professor McGlothlin said.

A "significant increase" in the number of persons who daily consume four to six marijuana cigarettes appears likely in the next few years, he added.

"While this level of usage is not generally considered disruptive for the Eastern countries, it remains to be seen whether the same conclusion will hold in a much more complex Western society. It would not be surprising if some individuals daily consume 40 marijuana cigarettes or more, an amount that greatly exceeds that presently observed in this country."

Four factors contribute to this prediction, he explained: 1) the majority of marijuana users are still in the "experimenter" stage; 2) in comparison with other countries, the doses of marijuana now being used in the U.S. are "quite low"; 3) "in spite of earlier conclusions to the contrary, tolerance to cannabis apparently does develop, especially for the more potent preparations"; and 4) hashish or other strong preparations are likely to become more available.

"It should not be concluded that a relatively high percentage of future marijuana users will be considered to consume excessive amounts," he declared. "Rather the standards of what is considered light, moderate, and heavy usage are likely to be shifted upward.

"Also, the more potent cannibis preparations will not necessarily replace preference for marijuana among many users, any more than the availability of distilled liquors eliminates the demand for beer and wine."

At present, he concluded, the prevalence of one or more trials of marijuana among students at urban West Coast colleges appears to be around 60 per cent. The rate for urban East Coast schools is slightly less, while those for Midwest and Southern colleges probably are no more than half to two-thirds the West coast rate.

Community Night Begins

The special Maryville College Community night scheduled to begin Monday. Oct. 18. will be conducted under a new format this year. The Recreation and Parks Commission, which sponsors the program, stated that pre-registration will be required this year for everyone planning to attend and participate in any of the activities.

As last year the Community Night Program will meet each Monday from 6:45 p.m. until 10 p.m. in the new Physical Education Building at Maryville College. All facilities of the new building will be made available to all area residents.

The pre-registration is being required this year in an effort to control the number that can attend each week and participate in the various activities.

In addition to the volleyball league which will again be conducted in conjunction with the activities, several new leagues are being formed.

A special league will be formed for everyone interested in playing handball. The league will be. conducted on a challenge format with the objective of each player to advance to the No. 1 position.

Something new to this area will be a special basketball league planned for men 25 years of age and older. This league will be a special half court league and teams will be composed of only four members each. Teams will play a complete schedule and several leagues will be formed if sufficient interest is shown.

The activities in the swimming pool will also be organized. A special adult swimming instruction class will be conducted each week from 7 p.m. to 7:45 p.m. The 8 p.m. to 8:45 p.m. time slot will be reserved for only those participating in the swim-to-stay fit program. General recreational swimming will be permitted from 8:45 p.m. until 9:30 p.m. only.

The special women's exercise classes will again be offered at 7 p.m. and 8 p.m. as well as instruction in gymnastics also at 7 p.m. and 8 p.m.

The well equipped weight room will also be available for those interested in weight lifting.

Registration is being conducted in the Recreation and Parks Commission Office in the Maryville Municipal Building, and the lobby of the Alcoa Municipal Building. Registration will also be accepted by mail.

The Community Night Program will be divided into two sessions. The first session will run from Oct. 18 through Dec. 13. The second session will get under way after the Christmas vacation on Jan. 3, 1972.

The registration fee for the first nine-week session will be $2 per person. Only those that register will be admitted. A weekly fee of 25 cents will be charged each week of attendance. Those attending each week must show the special registration card in order to pay the 25 cents and be admitted.

Only a limited number of persons will be allowed to register and registration will be on a first come, first served basis. In the event the limit is not reached initially, registration will continue throughout the nine-week period.

Sunday Morning At Gilberts

By John Jacob Koss

Morning fog covered the ground as I walked down Church Avenue. The Courthouse clock tolled six. Entering the all-night grill, I saw the men just off from Alcoa, euphoric with a job done. They nodded as I passed down the counter, then went back to joking with the departing waitresses.

The heavily jowled, circuit-riding Baptist preacher sat in his black suit and tie, hunched over his coffee. He thought of the four sermons he would preach in the country churches today. Their hell-fire would be accentuated by the coffee-produced heartburn blazing in his stomach. His thoughts wandered to the collection plate, hoping that the morning's take would cover his house note. I sat down next to him, but he didn't speak.

The morning counter shift had just come on duty. The boy behind the counter came over to me looking as bleary as the morning ground fog. He was hung-over from his Saturday night drunk.

"Can I take your order, sir?" he mumbled.

"Two fried eggs ... toast ... coffee." I replied in kind. He shuffled down to the grill.

"How'd he say to cook them eggs?" the senior waitress asked. She was his mother.

("It'll sober'm up getting up at five to work," she said to herself. "Serve him right for tying one on last night, too.")

"He didn't say," the boy responded to her question as he cracked the first egg.

"DON'T YOU PUT IT THERE — that spot's for the hotcakes!" she bellowed at him as she worked her way up the counter towards me.

"Could I get some water, ma'am?" I asked.

"Tend to your customer, boy," she shouted over her shoulder at her son. He didn't bring the water.

Instead, he went to get my coffee. Someone spoke to him across the counter. Not thinking, he left the cup off the saucer, but pulled the spout anyway as he looked up to talk.

The coffee ran over the saucer onto the floor. His mother gave him a piercing glance, but said nothing. Some of the plant workers laughed. Oblivious to the incident, the preacher meditated with fixed glaze on his own cup.

On the second time around, he was more successful with the coffee. My breakfast came.

"That all, sir?" he asked.

"Yep," I replied.

"She'll be 78 cents, then," he said, yawning in a manner to show both boredom and his hangover. He knew he had another four hours before he quit, but by then I had already gone.

Students Hold Recitals

By Wiley Rutledge

Last Saturday morning, the Fine Arts department held its first student recital of the year. Music majors are required to attend these periodic events, which feature various students displaying their talents.

The students who perform in these recitals are also music majors, who are taking lessons in particular facets of this art.

Last Saturday's program featured three singers; Jeanne Dawe, Dana Rule, and Delores Zeigler; and a pianist, Robert Wertime.

Miss Dawe's performance was highlighted by her good tone and what seemed to this reporter her ability to make difficult changes in pitch well. She is a soprano and sings in the choir.

Mister Wertime did a very good job in his performance. He demonstrated a good technique and knew his piece and instrument well. He did not use music for his performance, which further showed his mastery of the piano. He is also studying voice.

Miss Rule's and Mrs. Ziegler's performances were nothing less than outstanding. They both demonstrated good breath control, and they both had mature voices. It is difficult to analyze their performances in a musical sense as I know little about music, but I can say that they both knew their pieces very well and performed them excellently.

In summary, the student recital last Saturday was a very good one, and this reporter hopes that there will be more like it in the future. As stated before, attendance is required for music majors, but anyone else is welcome. If more recitals are like this one, it will be well worth your time to come out and hear the talent we have right here on campus.

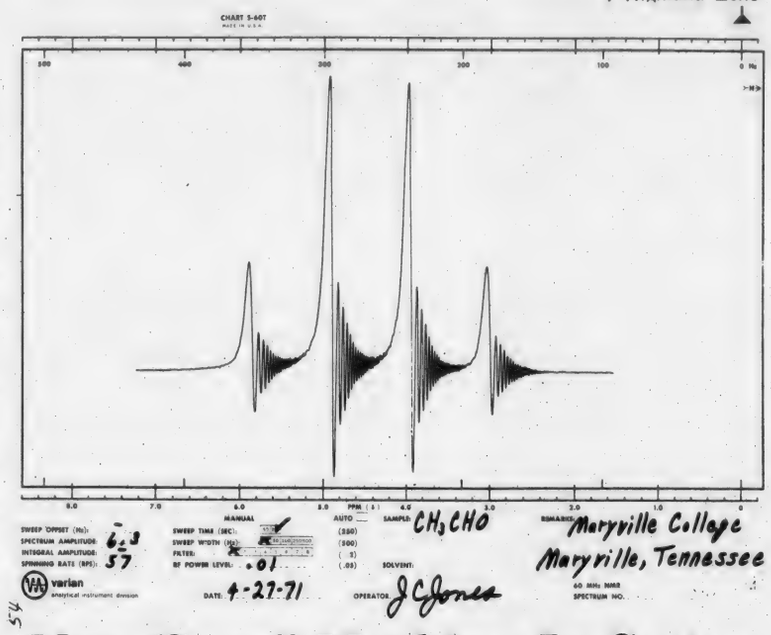
Robert Moorman Returns to MC

By Alice Hook

On October 21-22, Robert and Timmaris Moorman will again visit the Maryville campus to present a unique CIV program on drugs and to give a concert of contemporary rock. The free concert by "The Autobiography" will be Thursday night, and Mr. Moorman will speak at CIV on Friday.

Robert Moorman's past makes him a vivid speaker. He first started using drugs in 1961 while studying in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Soon after, he dropped out of school and became an associate of Timothy Leary's for two years.

During these years Moorman experimented with marijuana (extensive use), morphine and heroin (eight months addiction), LSD and mescaline (four years off and on), solvents and glues (limited use), romalar (limited use), amphetamines five years off and on), barbiturates (limited use), and various other assorted pills on occasion.



In 1966, Moorman was arrested in Tampa, Florida for grand larceny and possession of narcotics. He was confined in the Florida State and County Prison for fourteen months and here began his rehabilitation.

After his release, Moorman turned to karate for the needed discipline. He joined the teaching staff at the Mattson Academy of Karate in Boston in 1967.

Soon after, he formed his own group, "The Elephants Memory." In 1969, he married Timmaris McDowell who sang with the group. The Moormans have now formed their own group, "The Autobiography," which will perform Thursday night.

Moorman is remembered as a dynamic speaker and his wife as a memorable musician. The Moormans are worth your time.

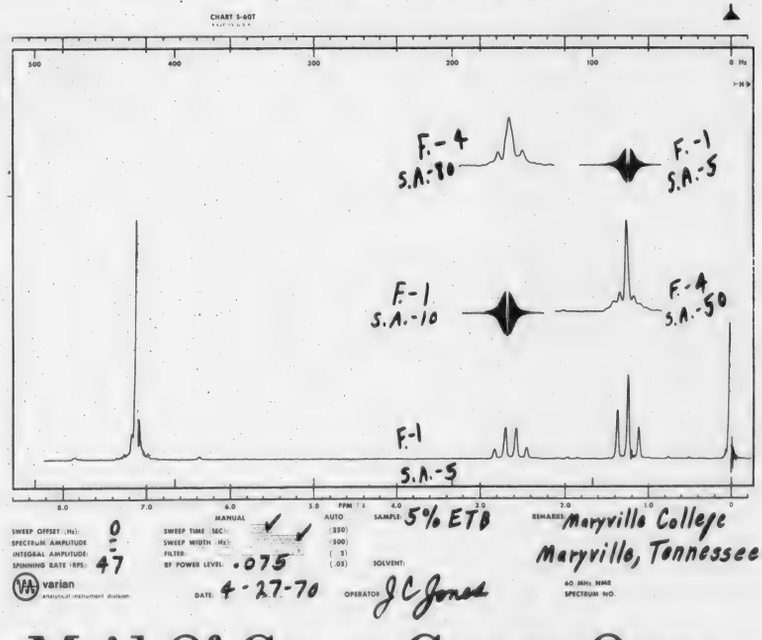
New 'Spec" Machine In Sutton



By Linda Lou Blomeke

Sutton Science Center has been equipped with a new spectrometer. The Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Instrument, or NMR as it is commonly referred, was purchased with the recent COSIP Grant. This grant presented each science department at Maryville with from $25,000 to $30,000. Each department had to submit a proposal for what they wanted to buy, ranging from equipment to faculty salaries. The Chemistry Department spent a little over $25,000 on this instrument. It can be readily seen that it is not a toy but a very sophisticated tool for scientific work.

Since there are only approximately 500 of these spectrometers in existence, it is unusual that Maryville College has one. It is even more unusual when one considers that, out of 2,500 colleges in our country, probably less then 1,000 have an NMR, and only about twenty percent of those institutions which are liberal arts colleges have one.

What is the NMR used for? It saves the scientists long hours of tedious work by aiding him in determining the structure of a molecule. It cannot determine the whole molecular structure by itself, but must be used as part of a complex of machines. The NMR operates on a magnetic principle, and it takes many hours of training to learn how to use it. Dr. Young of the Chemistry Department will teach anyone who wants to spend some time learning how to operate the spectrometer.

The spectrometer is there mainly for student use. Last summer, Dr. Ogren, Bill Hutton, and Ryn Schieber used the NMR in summer research, and will write a paper on work done with the instrument. Kathy Peterson, a senior, will be using the NMR for her independent study this year. Her study will be made concerning the NMR spectrum of tranquilizing drugs. The spectrometer is also used in the Spectroscopy course. The days of test tube chemistry are fast disappearing as machines like the NMR are completing the work in a quick and more efficient manner.

Wasps Down Scots

The Emory and Henry Wasps downed the Scots 28-12 before a Homecoming crowd in the mud and rain.

The Scots scored first on a 45 yard pass from quarterback Joe Costner to flanker Randy Minor in the first quarter. However, that was the only score for the Scots until the Wasps had tallied four times.

The Wasps scored before the end of the quarter when Martin Lee galloped 39 yards. Tommy Wilson added the point and the score was 7-6, Wasps.

The second quarter saw quarterback Greg Harvey hit Bob Ainley with a scoring strike covering 48 yards to up the Wasps' lead to 14-6.

In the fourth quarter, Keith Neely rambled 12 yards for the Wasps to make it 21-6. Shortly after, Lynn Spellmach hauled in an eleven yard aerial from Harvey to complete the Wasp scoring.

The final Scot score came about when Randy Minor caught his second touchdown pass, a 10 yard strike from Costner.

This Saturday, Randolph-Macon is here for Homecoming. The game begins at 2:00 P.M.

Scots Ready for Randolph-Macon

Saturday at 2:00 P.M., Randolph-Macon will be here to tangle with the Scots in the annual Homecoming game. The Yellow Jackets have an 0-3-1 record, losing last Saturday 24-18 to Susquehanna College.

As always, they have a strong offense. Their two top performers are quarterback Doug Toan and running back Larry Duman. They are veteran performers who have to be watched closely on every play.

The Yellow Jacket defense is not as strong as in the past. The defensive line is rebuilt from last year. However, their linebackers and safety men are back. It should be noted that the Jackets have good depth both on offense and defense.

For the Scots, Mike Parks will be the senior captain this week. With nine seniors, the Scots instituted the policy that a different senior would captain the team each week.

Parks is a senior linebacker from Lawrenceville, Georgia. He has been a letterman for three years and has been commended every year for his hustle and aggressive play. Come Saturday, look for number 53 to be in on many tackles for the Scots.

Women Make End of Soccer

By Betsy Joyner

Soccer season is over for the women of Maryville. The last game was rained out to the disappointment of Theta teammates. It was their last chance to prove their soccer prowess to Chi Beta, this season's winners in intramural soccer.

Field Hockey started October 7 with intensive skill drills, instruction in hockey fundamentals, and an exciting and fast scrimmage. Theta scored two goals against the powerful Chi Beta defense.

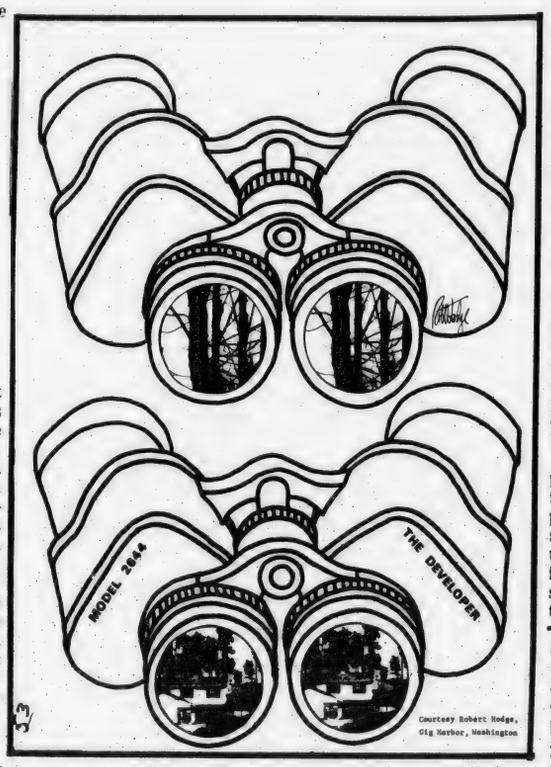
Many women are quickly racking up valuable points toward M-Club membership. Let's see a great deal more of you out there. Good exercise and new friendships are only two of the many assets.

Independents Lead Flagball

The Independents, by virtue of a 14-12 victory over the Juniors, are the only unbeaten team in the flagball lead.

The Independents scored first on a pass from Bill Cochran to Dan McKinstry. Two plays after the kick-off, the Independents collected a safety with Joe Bilella getting the flag.

The Juniors then scored twice when Tom Millikin intercepted a pass and returned it for a score. Then, in the third quarter, Millikin scored again, this time on a pass from Jeff White.



The Independents got rolling in the fourth quarter and regained the lead with less than two minutes on a pass from Bill Cochran to Dan McKinstry.

On Wednesday, Sig with Kent Smith passing for two touchdowns, edged the Sophomores 27-20.

On Friday, the Juniors ran back a kickoff and returned three pass interceptions for scores as they routed the Conspiracy 66-6. Tom Millikin and Mark Brooks were the stars for the winners.

College Band Moves Around

By Julie Chapman

The Maryville College Highlander Band will be marching in the annual Homecoming Parade.

The Band will be keeping right in step with the 1971 Homecoming Theme of "The Sprit of the 70's" with songs like "Superstar" and "Light My Fire."

On Saturday, Oct. 9, the band spent the day at Emory and Henry College helping to cheer on the Scots. Due to extremely rainy weather, and an extremely muddy field — the football players' uniforms reminded one of a detergent commercial — the band didn't march.

However, the brass section played a fantsatic halftime show from the stands. Woodwind players, unable to use their instruments in the rain, held umbrellas to shield everyone from the rain. From the other side it must have been an interesting sight, but we loved it!

Communications Is Revived

Mrs. W. M. Ussery is the newly appointed director of communications at Maryville College, according to an announcement made today by Dr. Joseph J. Copeland, president.

Mrs. Ussery, who has been teaching school in Blount County since 1968, is a graduate of the University of Tennessee with a B.S. in journalism and has completed all course requirements for the M.S. in communications.

From 1966 to 1968 she was a staff writer for the department of television at UT. Several of her documentary scripts have been produced by WSJK-TV. For six years she was a staff writer and traffic manager for two different radio stations in South Carolina.

At Maryville College Mrs. Ussery will direct the work of the news bureau, supervise television production, coordinate all college publications, provide photographic services for the college, and disseminate all public information from the college, including sports information. She will be replacing Mrs. Dorothy Murphree who has resigned as director of communications, effective October 15, in order to join her husband, T. Garvice Murphree, who has accepted a position in Florence, S.C.

In commenting on Mrs. Ussery's appointment, Dr. Copeland said: "Maryville College is indeed fortunate to secure someone with Mrs. Ussery's educational background and experience in the field of communications to assume this responsibility on our administrative staff."

Mahler Is Assistant

H. Richard Mahler, III, has begun work at Maryville College as an assistant in communications, according to an announcement made today by President Joseph J. Copeland.

Mr. Mahler comes to Maryville College from Virginia Polytechnic Institute in Blacksburg, Va. where he was a staff photographer and photolab technician for the past two years. A 1968 graduate of Maryville College with a major in art, Mr. Mahler has had summer work experience as a designer and illustrator for an industrial firm.

As an assistant in communications at Maryville College Mr. Mahler will supervise all photographic and design services and assist Mrs. Clyde Ussery, director of communications, with all college publications, public information and television production.

Women's Rights In Universities

Washington, D.C. (CPS) — The conservative American Association of University Women (AAUW) issued a set of 20 guidelines to accredited four-year colleges and universities in Washington on September 19, spelling out steps administrations should take to achieve full sex equality in all phases of university life.

According to Dr. Mabelle McCullough, chairwoman of the AAUW Committee on Standards in Higher Education and Assistant Dean of Student Affiars at the University of Minnesota, the guidelines form an "affirmative policy and action regarding women" in the student, faculty, administration and staff areas.

The most controversial aspects of the suggested program include recommendations that quota systems in admissions be abolished, Women's Studies Programs be set up and health counseling, including birth control, pregnancy problems, and abortion referrel be implemented.

The report states that women should have total self-determination in social governance, including directing their own social regulations.

McCullough stated that by accepting standards which take into full consideration the rights and needs of women, institutions can avoid confrontation with the Federal Office of Contract Compliance on the matter of sex discrimination. Over 250 colleges and universities, and all medical schools, now have sex discrimination suits pending against them.

The guidelines grew out of an AAUW sponsored survey of 454 campuses last Dec. which showed that while 90 per cent of the responding campuses stated that their promotional policies were identical for men and women, few women are in responsible positions in university communities and the number that are continues to decline.

The women's proposals promise to become heavy ammunition for the many newly formed campus women's rights groups in attempting to reform university structures.

Among the other proposals is a recommendation that campus nepotism rules be abolished, allowing qualified faculty wives (and in some instances husbands) to obtain teaching positions. Also listed are calls for curriculum innovations, permitting men and women to combine education with work and child-rearing responsibilities, for administering financial aid without consideration of the applicant's sex, for restricting campus job recruiting to companies that do not discriminate against women, for maternity leave without penalty and for the establishment of a campus Commission on Women that would advise the university president on women's problems and needs.

Child care facilities would be provided for students and employees if these policies were adopted.

The AAUW issued the guidelines in response to the slowness with which male-dominated university administrations have reacted to the increasing awareness of sex discrimination.

Financially Fearful

(CPS) — The Fall of 1971 has been bad financially for many colleges and universities. Since May at least 12 small, private institutions of higher education have closed their doors due to financial difficulties. Enrollments in all private institutions are down and many state schools are caught between budget slashing legislatures and student and faculty demands for more and better services and salaries.

About 6300 gasoline service stations were rebuilt or remodeled in the U.S. in 1970.

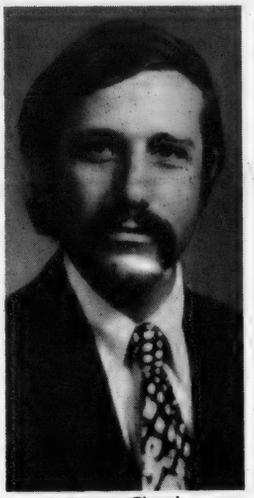
Mrs. Schoen Performs

Sallie Warth Schoen, associate professor of music at Maryville College, will be presented in a faculty recital by the department of Fine Arts Thursday, October 28, 8:15 p.m. in the College Music Hall. The recital will be the first of three Community Issues and Values nighttime programs which will involve musical performances.

Mrs. Schoen has distinguished herself in the music world both as an accompanist and as a pianist in her own right. She holds the bachelor of music degree from Oberlin Conservatory in Ohio, the master of music degree from Indiana University, and a performer's certificate from the Mozarteum in Salzburg, Austria. She has completed additional study with Manahem Pressler at Indiana University towards the degree of doctor of music in piano performance. She is a member of Pi Kappa Lambda and Delta Omicron Honorary Music Fraternities and is listed in "Who's Who of Women in the Southeast."

As a registered accompanist with Columbia Artists, Mrs. Schoen has accompanied Metropolitan Opera soprano Brenda Lewis, tenor Walter Carringer, and Maryville College's Affiliate Artists soprano Karen Roewade and bass Philip Steele.



In 1969 Mrs. Schoen was soloist with the University of Houston Symphony and the University of Albama Symphony in a new work, "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra," by Nancy Van-DeVate of Knoxville. In April of 1970 she returned to the University of Aabama to perform a set of piano variations by Ernesto Pelleghrini. Both performances were sponsored by the Southeastern Composers Leaue.

Mrs. Schoen was presented in concert at Memphis State University December 7, 1970, and in St. Croix, Virgin Islands January 22, 1971, at which time she accompanied Karen Roewade, soprano.

Mrs. Schoen will be featured with the Knoxville Symphony under the direction of David Van Vactor in April.

Critics have remarked on both the "strength and sensitivity of interpretation" in Mrs. Schoen's work and her "perfect technique and beauty of tone."

The October 28 recital will be an evening of Fantasies. It will include: Phantasie No. 2 in C minor, K. 396 by Mozart; Fantaisie in F minor, Op. 49 by Chopin; Fantasia Baetica by Falla; Fantasies, Op. 116, Intermezzo in E minor and Intermezzo in E major by Brahms; and Lucia de Lammermoor — Phantasie by Liszt.

Teague Reviewed

By Carla Hulce

On Tuesday, October 19, the Performing Artists Concerts presented Thomas Teague, baritone and faculty member of Carson-Newman College, in recital in the Music Hall.

Featuring a repertoire of English, Greek, German and Elizabethan songs, Mr. Teague gave an outstanding program for a small but delighted audience. He excelled particularly in Brahms' "Schoene Magelone" and "Five Popular Greek Songs" by Ravel.

Although many an artist might have been discouraged by the lack of a large audience, Mr. Teague obviously was not, and devoted all his training and ability to his performance, demonstrating an excellent tone, voice quality, and unmistakable command of his music.

Mr. Teague is, in addition to his duties at Carson-Newman, a MACCI Artist and will be a solo performer in the Yardumian oratorio on Abraham, to be presented at Maryville College on November 12 and in Knoxville on November 13.

If all those who missed his Tuesday performance wish to hear an excellent and delightful voice, they should make every effort to attend one or the other of the Yardumian presentations.

Safety First

All authorities urge motor vehicle drivers to cooperate with safety procedures at all times, especially around schools and play areas.

First Town Meeting Held

By Julie Chapman

The first Maryville College Town Meeting was held last Wednesday morning in the theater.

Ward Brooks opened the meeting with a report of this year's ACC meetings. His report included a statement saying that a change had been made in the language curriculum to give seminary students credit for Greek.

Dr. Copeland and Louise McNair both gave reports on the ACC's meetings with the Board of Directors last week.

Colonel Taylor also spoke to the board about admissions. He said that we are still aiming for an enrollment of 1,000 or more if we have the facilities.

Ward Brooks said that in his report to the Board he gave what he considered the four major concerns of students on campus this year: 1) The evaluation of senior comprehensives 2) Women's hours 3) Food Service 4)The 18 year old maturity law with its complications concerning liquor on campus.

The All College Council heard reports on these issues at its meeting on Wednesday afternoon. All interested students were invited to attend.

Dr. Copeland also gave a report on this year's budget, which is suposed to be approximately 2½ million dollars. When one student asked a question, Dr. Copeland said that he would be happy to go over a summary of the budget with any interested student.

MC Receives Grant

Maryville College received an annual scholarship grant today of $250.00 from Cumberland Capital Corporation of Nashville.

The check was presented by Wayne Ball, manager of the Cumberland Capital office in Alcoa. Accepting for the institution was Dr. Malcolm M. Willey, Academic Executive Officer.

Fifty-eight such awards are being made this year by Cumberland Capital to schools in Tennessee, Kentucky and Alabama.

Ball said that recipients of the scholarships are chosen by each school and not by the company. "We do prefer that the aid go to a student in the upper level of study who could not otherwise complete his work," he said.

The Cumberland Capital scholarship program provides the firm with a way to say "Thank you" to the communities where the regional lending company operates, Ball said.

"Our program is a small one when compared to the giants of industry," Ball said, "but Cumberland Capital feels that companies of relatively smaller size can make a contribution to higher education."

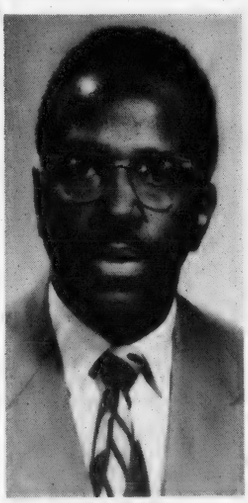
MC Hosts Foreign Policy Meetings

By Nancy Rankin

Maryville College, through cooperation with the U.S. State Department, is host to "Community Meetings on U.S. Foreign Policy" during the week of October 25-29, 1971. The State Department's program is designed to meet increased public interest in world affairs. By bringing members of the community into contact with knowledgeable Washington officials, ideas and information can be exchanged about foreign problems, policies and programs.

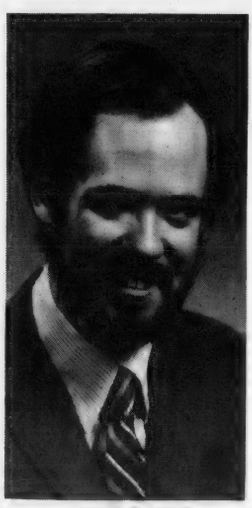
These meetings are in Thaw, Room 211, during regularly scheduled B and C hours.

Participants are Donald F. Herr, Cuban Analyst, Office of Research and Analysis for American Republics, Bureau of Intelligence and Research; Allen R. Overmyer, Political-Economics Officer, Office of Israel and Arab-Israel Affairs, Bureau of Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs; James A. Parker, Debuty Director, Office of Central African Affairs, Bureau of African Affairs; and B. Donovan Picard, Political Analyst for Korea, Office of Research and Analysis for East Asia and Pacific, Bureau of Intelligence and Research.



Mr. Herr's topics: "United States-Latin American Relations: Guerillas and Terrorists, A Latin American New Left." "The Castro Revolution in Cuba"

Mr. Overmyer's topic: "The Arab-Israeli Situation"



Mr. Parker's topics: "United States Relations with Central Africa" "Cameroon Approaches Take-off" "United States Policy in Africa"

Lawsuit Challanges Waterway

An environmental coalition has filed suit in the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C. to stop construction of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway, an immense U.S. Army Corps of Engineers project.

The coalition consists of the Environmental Defense Fund, the Committee for leaving the Environment of America Natural (CLEAN) and Dr. James D. Williams, a biologist in Columbus, Mississippi. The plaintiffs filed the suit on behalf of themselves, their members, and people who enjoy the Tombigbee

The Echo Resounds

By Phyllis Garner

Q: Why was Homecoming scheduled for the week of midterms?

A: The two events were merely coincidental. October 16 was chosen because it was the most convenient date from the standpoint of weather. Frostbitten students and alumni don't have pleasant memories of Homecoming.

Q: Why isn't Sports Illustrated kept in the reading room in the library?

A: Often, over-enthusiastic sports fans neglect to return this very popular magazine to its place on the rack. For this reason, it is kept in the stacks.

Women's Rights Noticed

The time has come to openly question, re-examine, and re-evaluate both the key system and Maryville College's policy on women's hours.

When instigated, the concept of keys for women with appropriate averages, good social standing, and parental permission was relatively new and innovative. It was paticularly appreciated in the light of the binding and restraining policies which stood before its conception. The validity and acceptibility of the key system, along with the curfew ruling, cannot, however, be evaluated in reference to prior privileges.

They must be viewed in light of their acceptibility to our present age and mode of existence. Consequently, the key system as it stands now and the concept of CURFEWS FOR WOMEN need to be updated and extended.

College females from eighteen to twenty-one are, on the whole, more sophisticated and versed in the ways of the world than ever before. Generally speaking, they do not wish to be shielded or protected from the reality of day to day existence.

It is very simply unfair and unreasonable to deny college-age females the freedom to come and go as they please — a privilege that is openly extended to males of the same age and level of maturity.

If Maryville were a large school located in the heart of a teeming metropolitan area, students of both sexes would expect to experience a certain curbing of freedom merely for survival's sake. Maryville College is a small community, though, where almost everyone knows or can recognize a fellow student. Further, the town is not notoriously threatening or ruthless. Why, then, shouldn't a female student be allowed to take a walk on campus, ride a bicycle, or sit under a tree after midnight — or whenever the spirit moves her?

It appears to be a bit ridiculous to force her OFF CAMPUS with her key, if she wishes to take a study break or to get away from her dorm for a time.

Because our present rules and regulations with reference to women's hours are neither realistic nor equitable, certain changes and modifications should be undertaken. Curfews for women should be eliminated altogether. Each woman should be given her own personal dormitory key. (The dorms should remain locked to maintain security within and to secure personal possessions). Particularly, women should be allowded free movement on campus at any hour.

Mostly it is time for the female population at Maryville College to be given the chance to operate as young adults in a setting and atmosphere that is not so far removed from reality as to prevent intelligent associaton and reaction when the time comes.

Letters to the Editor

Dorm Discrimination

Dear Sir:

When, without any choice, one section of a campus is locked into their dorms each night and the other half is not, there is obvious discrimination. This situation exists on the Maryville campus, and immediate action needs to be taken to rectify this. One way in which this sex discrimination could be ended is to place the men on the key system. This would mean that:

1) all dorms would be locked at 11:00 p.m. Sunday — Thursday and 1:00 a.m. on Friday and Saturday.

2) a male would be eligible for a key only if his parents had sent a signed permission card to the Dean of Men.

3) a male on the key system must pay a fee of $1.00 to obtain the privilege of this key.

4) if a male on the key system wishes to enter his dorm after closing hours, he must ask his dorm parent for his key before 11:00 p.m. and return the key before 11:00 a.m. the next morning.

5) if a male attempts to enter his dorm after closing without a key, he will be subject to judicial action.

6) men may use their keys to study in Sutton, the FAC, or if they are off campus. Keys are not for use on cammpus.

7) if a male misplaces his key, he must pay $25.00 to cover replacing the locks.

There is, however, another way and one which I feel would be far more acceptable to all students. That is to allow women students the same privilege as the men — open hours. The sex discrimination at Maryville can no longer be ignored or condoned.

Sincerely,
Alice Hook

Ecology Is Topic Of Biology Seminar

By Sarah Miller

Mr. Ed. Clebsch, professor at U.T., gave a most interesting talk at the biology seminar on the evening of October 7. It concerned the ecology of Amchitka, one of the Aleutian Islands off the coast of Alaska. Mr. Clebsch on a team working with the Atomic Energy Commission, studied the environmental effects of detonation testing being done by the United States on the island. In his talk he described Amchitka as an area of very low energy, since little sunlight can penetrate the usual thick fog. However, it supports several species of birds, the sea otter, the Norway rat, some insects, and flora typical of a boreal forest -- only without the trees. A brief slide show supplemented the presentation.

After extensive studies, Mr. Clebsch believed fewer ill effects were found as a result of the detonation testing than were of the construction of the testing site. This area is of current interest, as it is soon to be the site of the largest nuclear weapon ever to be tested. This is in spite of much opposition by Canadians, Alaskans, and the U.S. researchers who have shown it to be obsolete.

Homecoming Spirit

Dear Editor,

Once again it is necessary that a word of well deserved thanks be given to the Homecoming committee(s) for the great job they did in making last weekend one of the best ever. Many people were involved and spent a lot of man-hours putting together all the activities, and each person should feel proud of a job well done. A special thanks should also be given to Martha McCoy and Richard Seipel who served as this year's co-chairmen.

The flicks and food on Friday were fine and free, and the floats were fun. The football game was fantatsically great, the homecoming court was heavenly and cute and the concert was a classic.

It was indeed unfortunate that there was the one outstanding flaw in an otherwise almost perfect weekend. It appeared to me that the Queen's chauffeur did not realize that Saturday was Lindy's day of honor and I feel that if he hadn't diverted the crowd's attention away from the Queen and to himself, everything would have been perfect.

Homecoming committee, congratulations!

Gratefully,
Bob Eickelberg

My Back Pages

The Death of Politics

By Tom Coe
Boy Reporter

What is politics anyway? And where does it take us? For the first thing politics is numbers. "Mathematics," says Charles Morgan, head of the Atlanta ACLU, "is the first rule of politics." People are turned into numbers and treated as such. John Lindsey, in his successful campaigns for Mayor of New York City, has compiled an incredibly detailed computer print out cross-section of every neighborhood, every block as to ethnic background, prejudices, issues, income, etc.

This sort of approach wins elections and places in office for our public servants who are there to serve the people. And yet, somehow it leaves a bad taste in one's mouth because politics is supposed to involve people, (GHANDI was always one to remind his friends that the root word for "politics" is the Greek word "polis" meaning "people.") and help to meet people's needs; instead it has become another of the dehumanizing forces of our time. It's come to this.

Now the big push is to get all those 18-21 year-olds out to vote. The good old Beach Boys will be out there doing their part to keep this country free by pushing voter-registration at their concerts with mobile registration units and refunds to registered voters. They admit that there may not be anyone to vote for, but they want everyone registered in case there is. Again somehow the whole idea is unappealing. The American form of doing things has lost its sparkle, precisely because it has lost touch with human beings as unique individuals.

To say "power politics" is to be redundant. Politics is a power option that seeks to move masses of people, not change the minds of individuals. Time Magazine (4-13-70) wrote, "Politics does not encourage precise thought." Politics has become the user of humanity, not the servant.

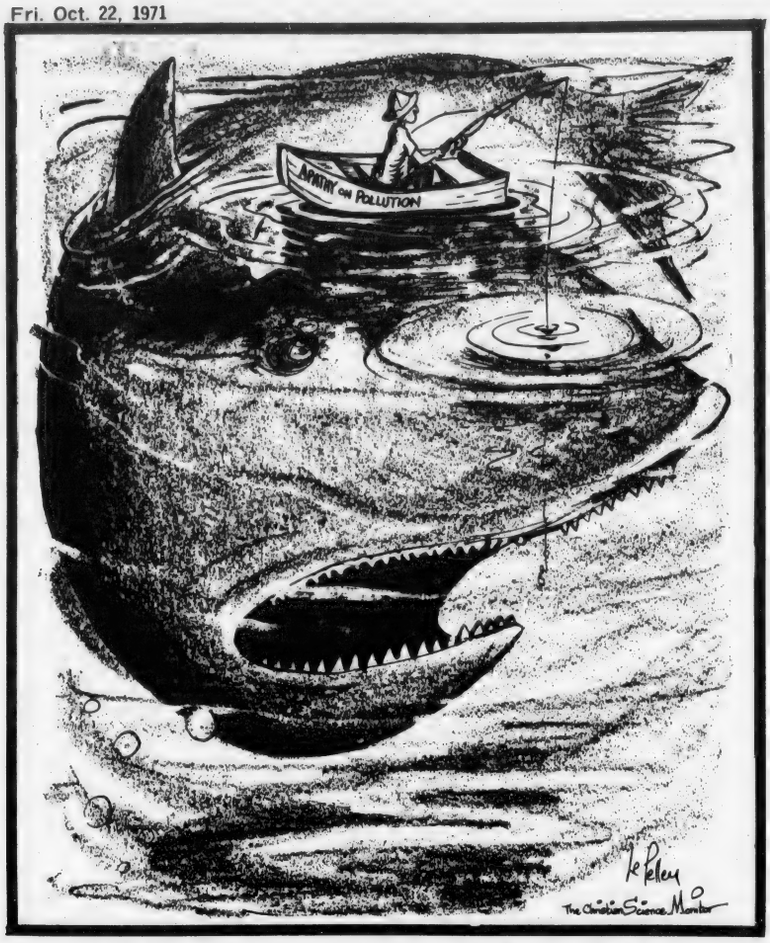
The need for a new set of rules is critical as politics gets more and more out of touch with human beings. Lobbies, for whatever noble cause, like human rights or the environment, fall short of the idealism of the Constitution and Bill of Rights and in the end, they ironically do exactly the same thing as politics in general — they treat human beings as numbers, not individuals.

Radicals and self-styled revolutionaries fall into the same trap. They play the same game, under the same set of rules. Nothing has changed here. The idea is still to force people to believe what you believe.

Revolutionaries who call for violence in this country are only kidding themselves for they are no different than the people they fight against. Tolstoi put it into focus when he said something to the effect that the difference between establishment violence and revolutionary violence is the difference between the excrement of dogs and the excrement of cats. There is nothing "revolutionary" or new about radicalism. It is still the same game, with the same rules. Country Joe McDonald once said it: "The most revolutionary thing you can do in this country is change your mind." What is needed is not a political solution but a human one, a revolution of the soul. The dehumanizing process has gone far enough and our arm chair revolutionaries only further the process. Can we ever hope to build a new and better world when the same jackasses who call for "people's rights" refer to other human beings as "pigs?"

I fear we are not making much progress. Politics, the great protector of people, has turned into another dehumanizing agent. It's come to this.

New Degree Begins



Storrs, Conn. - (I.P.) - The University of Connecticut has embarked on an exploratory study of a new kind of doctoral degree, tailored for teachers, which is fast winning adherents on campuses across the nation.

A special committee has been established to investigate the possibility of introducing the "doctor of arts" degree here. The committee has issued a call to the numerous UofC schools, departments and divisions involved in the production of doctorates, seeking their views on the desirability of such a degree.

According to Dr. Milton R. Stern, an English professor and chairman of the Doctor of Arts Committee in the Graduate School, "The D.A. degree is now granted by seven U.S. institutions, with 35 more scheduled to introduce it and another 25 planning to establish D.A. programs in the fall of 1972."

Dr. Stern quoted figures supplied by the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States which show some 85 per cent of all people who today acquire the Ph.D. plan teaching careers. Moreover, the Council estimates, more than 70 per cent of them never publish.

"The Doctor of Arts degree may well be the most important graduate education development of the past quarter century," concludes Dr. Stern.

Echo Examines Committee On Worship

By Sarah Winbigler

This week, the Echo is presenting a look at one of the Religious Life Committees of the All College Council, the Worship and Special Meetings Committee.

The Committee is in charge of coordinating the weekly Sunday evening vespers services, the January Meetings programs, and the other religious services on campus.

The purpose of the committee is to help to interpret the religious life on the campus and to provide channels through which to express this life. The programs of the committee are directed toward praising God in different ways and involving as many peoples and experiences as possible.

One of the Committee's most important and difficult tasks is organizing January Meetings. January Meetings, for those who are unaquainted with them, are a series of 3 or 4-day meetings during which the college community comes together to do some serious thinking about where our lives are going and what we are doing with them. There are no classes during this time and, in the past, several speakers have been brought in to share their experiences.

This year, the Committee is considering a different format in which there would be an increased emphasis on community participation. The feeling of the Committee is that our campus has the resources within itself to provide inspiration for such a program. They are hoping to involve students, faculty, and the various departments in reading, discussion, and creative activity in drama, art, and music.

The Committee, under the co-chairmanship of Dr. Cartlidge and Doug Chase, meets every Wednesday morning at 10:30 in the Green Room at the theatre. Other members are Charles Ball, Melissa Collins, Larry Dimmick, Dr. Fowler, Dr. Harter, Alan Hoke, Miss Huddleston, Margaret Jefferson, Louise McNair, Mr. Ramger, James Saint, Richard Snyder, and Coralie Usrey.

New Tests For Prison Reform

WASHINGTON (WSNS) — While the recent riot at Attica State Prison and subsequent deaths of 42 inmates and guards has focused public attention on "correctional instutions," the federal government increased its attack on the "prison reform problem" back in 1969.

"The American system for correcting and rehabilitating criminals presents a convincing case of failure," President Nixon said on Nov. 13, 1969, when he ordered Attorney General John Mitchell to implement a new 13-point program to improve the corrections system. "A nation as resourceful as ours should not tolerate a record of such futility."

The most dramatic result of the Nixon order was last year's addition to the 1968 Safe Streets Act to provide more funds to state and local corrections systems. The Administration-porposed amendment was sponsored by Sen. Roman Hruska (R-Nebr.), ranking minority member on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The increase in money available for improving the physical facilities and modernizing rehabilitation programs illustrates how fast the government has moved:

Fiscal Year	Corrections Budget
1969	$3 million
1970	$60 million
1971	$175 million
1972	$250 million (est)
1973	$300 million (est)

These funds now represent more than 35 per cent of the total spent by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA), the principal federal agency for funding state and local corrections; in 1969 the figure was 4.8 per cent. The rest of LEAA's 1972 $698 million budget goes to such areas as police education, juvenile delinquency programs, and streamlining court systems.

Under the 1968 law that established LEAA, states received funds through block grants on a 50-50 basis. The Nixon Administration' addition to this law, known as "Part E," set up discretionary grants specifically for corrections, to which states must contribute only 25 per cent of the cost.

Part E funds in 1971 paid more attention to community programs than any other priority; youth services, halfway houses and group or foster homes led the $34 million budget in this category.

In terms of improving the physical conditions of prisons, LEAA Administrator Jerris Leonard reiterated after Attica the federal government's refusal to find "more fortress prisons where prisoners are locked away and forgotten."

"In fact, LEAA has turned down several requests for money to build such outmoded institutions," Leonard said.

To help solve the problem LEAA in the last two years granted the University of Illinois and the University of Pennsylvania a total of $250,000 to design new models for prisons of the future. States received more than $20 million in fiscal 1971 to remodel and build their jails — $5 million more than in fiscal 1970.

Finally, the Administration has encouraged citizen support for new efforts to upgrade corrections programs.

"None of our vocational education programs, our work-release efforts, our halfway houses, or our probation systems will succeed if the community is unwilling to extend a new opportunity," President Nixon said in his 1969 order to Mitchell. "If we turn our back on the ex-convict, then we should not be surprised if he again turns his back on us."

River like it is.

The $386.6 million project would connect the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers by means of a 253-mile waterway across northern Alabama and Mississippi. It would link the Gulf of Mexico at Mobile, Alabama, with the Tennessee and Ohio Rivers to the north.

The plaintiffs allege that the Corps of Engineers is proceeding illegally and without authority; that the project is in clear violation of the National Environmental Policy Act. EDF contends the Corps has not adequately considered the environmental consequences of connecting two rivers with separate life systems. A case in point, says EDF, is the destruction of the whitefish and trout fisheries in the Great Lakes by the introduction of the lamprey via the Saint Lawrence Seaway.

EDF stated that it has recalculated the project's cost-benefit ratio and discovered the Corps' figures deviated from the economic procedures recommended by the Office of Management and Budget, the most prestigious authority on such matters in the Federal Government. The Corps claims the ratio of benefits to costs for the Tennessee-Tombigbee Water way project is 1.6 to 1. But EDF's recalculation of the benefit to ost ratio is 0.099 to 1. This means that the project would yield only 10 cents of benefits for every dollar it costs to build and maintain. EDF claims the water way would not have been approved if these figures had been available before it was authorized.

Shakespere's "Twelfth Night" Opens

By Kathy Meier

Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" will be performed by the M.C. Playhouse tonight. This particular comedy was written as special entertainment for Queen Elizabeth and her court and produced during the "twelve days of Christmas."

Director Tom Jones is assisted by Diane Wood, who directed "Interview" in last year's production of "America Hurrah." She is also remembered by M.C. audiences for her performance in "Desire Under the Elms" and "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail."

The set for "Twelfth Night," designed by Sydney Weedon, is a replica of the Blackfriar's Theater of London used by Shakespeare's company. Built on a moderate scale, the set includes an upper stage and two balconies.

Several experienced students will appear in the Shakespearean play such as Suzanne Drees as Viola usually disguised as Cesario, Nancy McCleary as Maria, Mark Stoub as Sir Toby Belch, Thomas Williamson as Sir Andrew Aguecheek, and Mark Mertz as Malvolio.

New comers to the M.C. stage are Robert Cox as Sebastian, Coralie Usrey as Olivia, Thomas Martin as Orsino, and Paul Hollingsworth as Feste the jester. The cast is rounded out with the help of John Gossett, Stephen Leng, Stephen Mason, James Saint, and King Bennett.

Shakespeare has set his story in the mythical land of Illyria where men are at leisure for love, drinking bouts and baudy jokes. The country and its fun-loving citizens are suspiciously like Shakespeare's fellow Elizabethans during the twelve days of Christmas revelry.

Suzanne Drees and Coralie Usrey prepare for Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" performance.

Elizabethan humor was based on ribauld, off-color jokes and situations that made other people look like fools. The audience and the other actors laugh uproariously as Sir Andrew continually falls on his face, as Sir Toby belches to punctuate his speeches, and as Malvolio is taken in by the tricks of Maria and her fellow conspirators.

"Twelfth Night" is the first Shakespearen play produced at Maryville in recent years. Director Tom Jones and the experienced members of the cast show an understanding and feeling for Shakespeare's language. The play will be performed again on October 29 as part of the "Highland Fling" debate tournament.

SPORTS

Scots Sting Yellow Jackets

The Scots, propelled by three touchdown passes by Joe Costner, downed the Randolph-Macon Yellow Jackets in the annual homecoming game 29-22.

The first quarter of the game was scoreless and seemed to show a low scoring game. However, in the second period, the tempo picked up.

The Scots opened the scoring when quarterback Costner hit flanker Randy Minor with a four-yard pass. The try for the point was no good and the Scots led 6-0. Immediately after the kickoff Randolph-Macon drove the length of the field to score. The scoring play was a three-yard run by Bucky Lowe. Wallace added the point and the Jackets led 7-6.

Before the half the Scots had regained the lead. Costner threw his second touchdown pass to Randy Minor, this one being a thirteen-yard strike. So at halftime the Scots led 12-7.

About midway through the third period the Yellow Jackets capped a drive when quarterback Doug Toan hit end Robin Schmidt on a ten-yard pass for the score. Lowe ran for the two-point conversion and so the Scots trailed 15-12.

Steve Gordon of Maryville followed with a 37-yard field goal. This tied the score at 15-15. This scoring opportunity was set up when Steve Loveday returned the kickoff 50 yards into R-M territory.

The opening of the fourth period saw the Scots once again take the lead. Defensive end Ondis Bible intercepted a Toan pass and scampered 18 yards for the score. Gordon added the point to make it 22-15.

Randolph-Macon was not finished. They again drove the length of the field to knot the score. The scoring play was a pass from Toan to Schmidt covering nine yards.

Following the kickoff the Scots, with Costner beautifully mixing his plays, moved methodically down the field. Costner hit split end Mike Butler with a two-yard pass as the clock showed only 3:10 to play. Gordon added the point and the score was 29-22.

Linebacker Mike Threlkeld ended all hopes of Randolph-Macon when he intercepted a Toan pass with about one minute to play.

The team played exceptionally well against this small college power. The line play by the offense was great as Costner expressed. Costner had his best day as a college quarterback, hitting 24 of 35 passes for 215. Minor caught 7 for 78 yards and Butler hauled in 6 for 82 yards.

The defense played well against the diversified attack of the Yellow Jackets. Ondis Bible, Dave Clinton and Mike Threlkeld all intercepted passes.

The team would like to express its thanks to the student body for its great support. Also they want to thank the cheerleaders for the cake, and also the spirit which they generated at the tremendous pep rally Friday night.

This week the Scots travel to Jackson, Mississippi to play the Millsaps Majors.

Choir Anticipates Brand New Year

The Maryville College Choir is now reorganized and ready for another year, according to Dr. Harry Harter, the director.

At the beginning of the year, approximately 20 freshmen and transfer students joined the choir to brings its membership up to the usual total of about 60. Since then, Dr. Harter and the older members have been incorporating the newcomers into the organization. Now that process is complete, they face a busy year.

In addition to the usual load of Messiah, Advent Vespers, and tour, the choir is forming the nucleus of the chorus which will premiere Richard Yardumian's oratorio, The Story of Abraham next month.

Other events for the choir include appearances at certain vesper services and CIV programs, and such other things as they may be asked to do. This month they will be hosting the Doyle High School choir of Knoxville in their appearance on campus.

Choir tour will go in the general direction of Florida. The highlight of this tour will be the performance of choruses from Jesus Christ, Superstar. With this to top it off, the year looks very promising for the Maryville College Choir.

Enthusiatic Reaction To Friends

The Friends of Distinction

By Chris D'Aquila

Featured last Saturday night was the soul beat of "The Friends of Distinction." The group's warmth and vitality circulated through the crowd as they mingled among members of the audience, shaking hands, singing, and inducing a spirit of enthusiasm.

As the concert progressed, the audience remained captured by the group's spirit and vigor demonstrated through their singing and dancing. At one point in the concert, the audience was so moved that individuals got up and "let loose" their emotions by dancing right along with "The Friends of Distinction."

Without a doubt, the concert was a great success and will long be a lasting memory of those who attended.

Women's intramural hockey is always interesting to watch and even more interesting to play. Despite the lack of any real practice Chi Beta and Theta both performed quite well in their first game which ended in a tie 1-1.

Hockey is a fast and tiring game as the beginners soon found out, but, it was good to see that many of the girls wanted to continue after the game was officially ended.

Both teams scored their goals in the second half. During the first half Chi Beta shot for a goal and the ball deflected off the arm of Theta's goalie Nancy Moschini. The ball went through the goal posts, but a foul was called because of dangerous hitting.

Mr. Price Joins Faculty

Mr. Harry Price

By Phyllis Garner

This year, Maryville College boasts a scholar of international repute as chairman of its Department of Economics. Mr. Harry B. Price joins the full-time faculty after an outstanding career in foreign service with the United Nations, United States government, and private agencies.

Born in China of missionary parents, Mr. Price lived for fourteen years on "the margin of two cultures." He found that "things seemed to come in pairs. I learned two languages, developed two sets of friends, and discovered that there are at least two ways to look at every situation."

After returning to the United States, Mr. Price took his undergraduate degree from Davidson College and his M.A. in Economics from Yale University. However, his deep interest in China took him back to Peking, where he taught at Yenching University for five years.

Harry Price began his work in foreign service with the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA), serving as Assistant Director of its operation with China. Since UNRRA distributed supplies indiscriminately, threeway negotiations between Nationalist China, Communist-controlled areas, and UNRRA were necessary. Mr. Price participated in these talks with Chinese officials, including Chiang Kai-shek and Chou-En-lai.

Price remembers Chou En-lai as being "extremely alert and observant, friendly in manner, a good listener, cool under pressure, and extremely shrewd and tough as a negotiator." During a field trip to the Yellow River Valley, Mr. Price noticed Chou quickly gained the confidence of the peasants.

Later, working as an economic advisor to the government of Negal, he again met Chou, the new Prime Minister of Communist China. "We met at several functions, talked of old acquaintances, and at Chou's suggestion, drank a toast to future friendship between the Chinese and American people."

After extensive work with the Marshall Plan, Mr. Price was asked to undertake a history and evaluation of the program. Published in 1955, The Marshall Plan and its Meaning has been widely accepted as the best single book concerning the Marshall Plan.

During the 1960's, Mr. Price worked in establishing in the Philippines an International Institute of Rural Reconstruction. He collaborated with the members of the Institute staff in editing a volume, Rural Reconstruction and Development: a Manual for Field Work.

Although he is not presently working in international affairs, Mr. Price continues his interest in China. On October 16, as part of the Homecoming Activities, he spoke to a seminar group on "The Two Chinas: Facts, Emotions, Dilemmas."

As a guest of WBIR-TV's "Wallene's World," on October 18, Mr. Price engaged in a question and answer session with the show's hostess and Pam Avery, a political science major from U-T.

In cooperation with the Knoxville and U-T chapters of the United Nations Associations, Mr. Price participated on October 19 in a panel discussion with Dr. Johnathan Utley, a scholar of Far Eastern diplomatic history and the younger brother of NBC newscaster, Gerrick Utley.

Mr. Price personally believes that we have been "too long cut off from one-fourth of the world's population," and that the artificial situation that has existed for twenty years should change in order to establish widening contacts with the 800 million people of Mainland China.

However, he does feel that the United States "should make every effort also to sustain friendly relations with Nationalist China. They have been good UN members and our allies. We should not desert them now."

A thoughtful optimist, Mr. Price believes it is possible for the United States and Red China to agree not to interfere in each others' internal affairs, "to build bridges of communication, and even to begin woking together in common problems such as pollution and the development of the ocean beds.

As an international civil servant, Mr. Price has long been interested in "what it takes to become a world citizen." Although he and Mrs. Price have no immediate plans for travel, they do not eliminate the possibility of future exploration, study, and writing. "But, as of now," he says, "we are enjoying thoroughly being members of the stimulating Maryville College Community."

Dr. George D. Kelsey,

Kelsey to Speak

By Alice Hook

On November 3, the CIV speaker will be Dr. George D. Kelsey, Professor of Christian Ethics in the Theological and Graduate Schools of Drew University, Madison, New Jersey. Dr. Kelsey will be on the Campus as a Danforth visiting Lecturer. He will speak on "A Christian Interpretation of Human Rights."

The visiting lecturers program under which Dr. Kelsey comes here was initiated in 1957 by the Arts Program of the Association of American Colleges, and is supported by a grant from the Danforth Foundation. Its purpose is to assist colleges in their efforts to strengthen liberal education. Each year several people of outstanding intellectual stature from this country and abroad are made available to colleges and universities.

A native of Columbus, Georgia, Dr. Kelsey received his B.A. degree from Morehouse College, a B.D. degree from Andover Newton Theological School, and his Ph.D. degree from Yale University. He has also studied at Harvard and the London School of Economics and Political Science. Morehouse College awarded him a Doctor of Divinity degree in 1970.

Dr. Kelsey began his teaching career as a member of the faculty of Morehouse College in Atlanta, Georgia, serving as Professor of Religion and Philosophy from 1938 to 1945 and as Director of the School of Religion from 1945 to 1948. At the same time he served as visiting professor in the Gammon Theological Seminary.

In 1948 he joined the staff of the Federal Council of Churches as Associate Secretary in the field department, continuing in the same post in the National Council of Churches from 1950 to 1952. He was guest lecturer at Drew University in 1950-51, and the following year became a member of its faculty.

Dr. Kelsey is a member of the senior panel of the Board of the Morris County Urban League, (New Jersey) the Committee of Southern Churchmen, The Society of Religion in Higher Education, the Association of Professors of Christian Ethics, the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences, and the American Academy of Religion.

The author of "Racism and the Christian Understanding of Man" (Charles Scribner's Sons, 1965), he has contributed chapters to symposia and articles to various religious and academic journals for the past twenty-five years.

Oratorio Postponed

Maryville College has been forced to postpone the Nov. 12 and 13 performances of the Richard Yardumian oratorio, "The Story of Abraham," due to a strike situation involving the Dallas Symphony Orchestra. The announcement was made today by Dr. Harry H. Harter, chairman of the college fine arts department.

Dr. Harter expressed regret that the premier performance at Maryville College and theone the following evening at Knoxville Civic Auditorium must be postponed, but said the college has been able to reschedule the performances for May 18 and 19, 1972 with the same performing artists. After considerable expense and time, and a previous postponement due to Andre Girard, whose film is synchronized with the music, it is felt the performance of the oratorio merits continuance of the presently signed artists at a new date, he said.

Residential Life Examined By ACC

By Patti Shelton

The Residence Hall Life and Community Standards committee held the floor at the October 22 meeting of the All-College Council.

The first spokesman was George Boronow for the Dining Hall Services subcommittee. He presented to the council a proposal suggesting that the school hire an unbiased consultant to study our dining hall service and present viable alternative plans with a view toward a student referendum on these alternatives. Mr. Ramger mentioned that consideration should be made of off-campus interims in particular. The Council agreed with the proposal and Dr. Copeland was directed to have the administration look into the costs and availability of such a consultant by the next meeting.

The next speaker was Amy Savery who reported on several phases of community life. After a breif statement of visitation orientation on campus this year, Amy brought up some questions which kept the council quite busy. After extensive compilation of thoughts and facts, the Residence Hall Life and Community Standards committee presented two questions to the Council((1) Is Maryville College ready and willing to accept the 18-year-old as an adult? and (2) Are 18-year-old students willing and ready to accept the responsibility of adulthood?

Amy said that if the answer to the first question were in the affirmative it would call for a clear statement of behavioral policy from the ACC. After extensive debate which touched on such issues as the alcohol question, legal implications for the school and, most importantly, the quality of life promoted at MC, the Council stated that every student at MC was considered an adult, capable of and expected to take responsibility for their own actions, regardless of their age. The second question was deemed unanswerable due to its individual nature.

Amy also reported on research into the matter of hours for women and the possibility of various dorm plans in order to give the student alternative life style choices. This committee was commended for its work.

After a brief report from Dr. Copeland on the Board meetings, the Council discussed Homecoming. The comments were generally favorable with the exception of a concern over the financial loss entailed by bringing "name" groups in for one big, expensive night of entertainment. It was decided that selection of the next Homecoming committee should be considered immediately.

Changing Times, Changing Leaves

This week saw Maryville College undergo a fairly complete, but not entirely unprecedented change. MC was taken unaware by autumn's red and gold colors.

Now is the time to re-examine, to re-evaluate, and to reiterate this change.

For too long MC has been in the grasp of a relentless Indian Summer. Now is the time to break free of its enervating heat and enjoy the fall crispness. East Tennessee is blazing with autumn color. We cannot remain ignorant of such a change. To do so merely demonstrates aesthetic blindness.

Why recognize this change? Autumn's color comes briefly but once a year. This briefness of season coupled with the onslaught of winter reinforces the need for awareness of change.

Mrs. James (Helen) Lane, a long range weather forecaster from Crab Orchard, Tennessee, illustrates this point. She has predicted the hardest winter in many years. By judging natural signs, she is able to accurately forecast winter. For example, based on the number of heavy fogs in August, she has forecast twelve heavy snows. In fact, since one fog obscured her barn until afternoon on Aug. 24, we are due for a particularly heavy snow.

With such a gloomy appraisal of the future, it would appear that MC should appreciate its recent change to autumn while it lasts. With this point in mind, the Echo feels justified in introducing the following recommendation: take a trip to the woods or mountains soon, you'll enjoy the colors.

CIV Speaker Has Honest Approach

By Leigh Thornington

Robert Moorman has a unique approach to a "drug seminar." He emphasizes the most important cause of our drug saturated society. However, instead of merely naming the cause — a search for happiness via fulfillment — he gives an alternative to drug abuse.

Although Mr. Moorman talked in depth about the reasons people use drugs and the differences between drugs, he was convinced that addiction to a personal goal was the answer to the abolishment of drug abuse, as drugs do not work toward achieving this goal. He said that different people find their happiness in different things, but the important thing is to find something and devote time and effort to it.

After being in the drug scene for about six years, taking everything from pot to mescaline, Mr. Moorman was busted and jailed. Since his release from prison he has been touring colleges offering his opinions on drug abuse.

Two other points which seemed important to Robert Moorman were the treatment of drug abuse as a medical prblem, and the unprofessional speeches and films being shown on drugs. a distinction between the drug user, a medical problem, and the drug pusher, a legal problem, was in logical reasoning. Another issue Robert was concerned about is the films and speeches made on drug use by people who do not know the subject. He felt these presentations are doing more harm than good.

By saying what he wanted with sincerity and logic, in a confident manner, Robert Moorman assured himself of an attentive audience.

Frosh Are Forgotten

Dear Editor:

I admit, the game was fantastically great, and the Friends of Distinction really let their audience know that "soul music" is in each of us, somewhere. But what about the greatness of the Freshman Class?

We the people of the Freshman Class had our day too. (1) Our class received a check for $25.00 for placing first on the float payment. (2) Davis Dorm received a beautiful plaque stating "Best Decorated Dorm Maryville College Homecoming 1971, Davis Dorm."

So don't forget about us just because we are entitled "Freshman," because we had our day! And it Was GREAT!!

Love,

Audience Likes "Autobiography"

By Leigh Thorington

Robert and Timaris Moorman thoroughly delighted their audience Thursday night, October 21, with their songs and a few other well-known tunes.

Timaris wrote many of the songs, which were pretty and rather quaint. Half of their effect was due to the quality of her voice, indescribably clear. The songs, "It's Too Late" and "Until It's Time for You to go," took rather nicely to Timaris' voice.

The songs Robert composed were entirely different in mood, as they were not the controlled type. Two Viet Nam songs and one about a score on mescaline, "I Sit Alone in my Bedroom," left the listener tense. A tune written for his grandmother was, in typical country style, toe-tapping good like the Moorman's collaboration on "New Generation."

After repeating "one mores" a few times with some oldies — "Hound Dog," "Blue Suede shoes," "Long Tall Sally" — the "Autobiography" left the chapel stage having exhausted all their tunes and stories, to the delight of number 87 who liked this show better than last year's.

High School Madness

By Tom Coe
Boy Reporter

The Firesign Theatre has a weekly one hour radio show on the FM in San Francisco. One week a close friend of theirs had died, and instead of doing the show, a member of the group came on the air and simply said, "We just don't feel like being funny these days." So it goes.

Maybe there is little to be funny about in this culture. Maybe only in some new structure, in some new context can we laugh. There is still the earth and there are still other people to make us laugh. As cultural critics, the Firesign Theatre has little to laugh at anymore.

As cultural critics, the Firesign Theatre, in their first three records ("How can you be in two places at once when you're really nowhere at all?," "Waiting for the electrician or someone like him," and "Don't crush that dwarf, hand me the pliers") has been as witty as they have been outlandish and pointed. Their mimicry is cutting and precise.

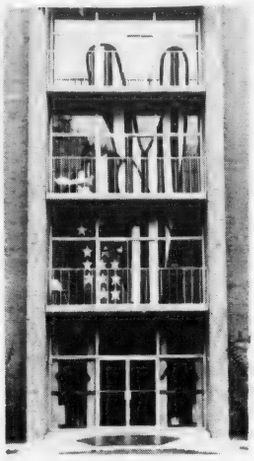
They present to you the Madison Avenue world. The logical outcome of that is on the last side, last minute of their third album — the used car salesmen hawking marijuana in a world turned topsy-turvy by the TV culture.

These guys are Marshall McCluhon in drag. Their initial effort was a look at radio drama and a trip through time and space via the super gadgetted Detroit dream. All, of course, is carried to its logical absurd ending.

Their next work was social criticism aimed at hippie culture, communes, and the treatment of the American Indians.

Their third album ("Dwarf") is the final step in the arena of this sort of satirical comment. The scenario is the man up all night somewhere in the hills above Los Angeles (what better place for the death of culture). He watches the TV with his remote control box in hand and slowly sees the shows become one, as culture homogenizes into a flickering, televised, blob. America is in the forefront as it creates, through mass media, a mass culture at the lowest common denominator. The mass culture has bombarded us like unopened cases of the hardback edition of William Burroughs' Naked Lunch from 10,000 feet and left us brains of TV jelly.

So now the Firesign Theatre welcomes you to the future; step aboard the bus to the future fair. "I think we're all bozos on this bus," is their latest effort and is not nearly so humorous as the early ones. We follow the American Dream into the year 2100 and find a computer for a president (whose rhetoric sounds suspiciously like crafty Richard's — maybe they know something that we don't), and a large number of clones named Clem.



The Americanization of the universe is the spread of homogenized advertising culture. Advertising works so well not because it reflects what people are, but what they are working to be. Advertising leads the way in culture more and more of the time. The entire leveling process to the plateau of TV is the final step. And the future holds only false dreams of plastic and chrome.

Laugh yourself to death with the Firesign Theater.

No. 1 Choir Visits MC

Vespers this Sunday, October 31, at 7:00 p.m. in the chapel will be a sacred concert given by the Doyle High School Mixed Chorus from Knoxville. It is being sponsored by the Maryville College Concert Choir. Since 1967, when Doyle first opened, this choir has consistently obtained "Class A-Superior" ratings in competition with other high school choirs in Tennessee.

Director John Ribble is a graduate of Maryville College with a B.A. in music. His assistant is Allan Hoke, a student at Maryville College who is student teaching at Doyle. He will assist in directing parts of the concert.

While at Maryville, Mr. Ribble worked under Dr. Harter as a student director of the College Choir, and sang as a soloist in the Messiah. Since graduating, he has been the lead of The Dignitaries, a barber shop quartet described as having "a continent-wide reputation as one of the very top show quartets." It has placed as high as twelfth in nationwide competition. He has also directed the Smokyland Chorus, an area men's chorus which has earned the name of being "Knoxville's Ambassadors of Close Harmony."

In addition to his work at Doyle, Mr. Hoke is both Director of Music and organist at New Providence Presbyterian Church. While serving in the Air Force in Massachusetts, he organized and directed a base community chorus. He presently is the student director of the Maryville College Choir.

From the records of both the choir and the directors, it is easy to see that the Doyle High Mixed Chorus is perhaps the number one high school choir in Tennessee. It all adds up to one thing: no one should be disappointed in the concert.

Societies Rush For Members

By Julie Chapman

Next Tuesday, if you see some oddly dressed students running around, they're not Halloween latecomers. No, it's time again for the four societies to hold initiation.

The whole day starts with an invasion of Pearsons for breakfast, lots of antics and good morning cheer songs. Action continues through E hour; remember to look out for weird creatures.

The wild times come especially at night. Although most of this is secret, the pledge is warned to wear very old and very grubby clothes. Another of the basic parts of the evening dress are blindfolds. No pledge should be caught without, or beware of the calamities that follow!

However, initiation does have its bright side, for it doesn't end on a gruesome note. Formal initiation services are held soon after the first part, always seeming to make it all worth it.

Variety Show Hits the Trail

Thirty or more Maryville College students have been travelling each week to various community homes to perform for those who do not ordinarily receive much in the way of entertainment.

This variety show has performed for Montvale Nursing Home, Asbury Acres, and most recently, for the Blount County Children's Home.

Each performance is geared to the particular audience involved. Last Sunday in addition to the regular twenty-member chorus, jazz band, sitar player and painist, there was a puppet show and clown act to the delight of the children.

Co-sponsores for the group are Mr. Murphy of the Maryville Kiwanis, who provides transportation, and the MC Circle K Club.

The group was originated and is coordinated under the direction of Bob Cox.

Homecoming Highlights

By Wiley Rutledge

The parades and football games are over. The Queen has been crowned. The alumni have gone home and the students have gone back to their studies.

Yes, homecoming is over. The frenzy of trying to have a good float ready by Saturday has been relieved. Many sore throats have begun to heal. The pace is back to normal.

But that doesn't mean homecoming has to be forgotten. No, sir, not by a long shot. We won the football game (that alone is worth remembering). We saw several nice floats. We had a Queen.

Don't you wish you had a scrapbook full of pictures of homecoming to take home to your parents? Sure you do! Well the pictures that go with this article are the next best thing. They're something for you to remember Homecoming by (or wrap fish, if you're that kind of person).

Highland Fling Held Today

By Kathy Meier

Ninety people from some eighteen colleges and universities are expected to converge on Maryville this weekend to participate in the Highland Fling. Some of the best interpreters in the southeast are competing in this individual events speech tournament sponsored by the Maryville College Forum.

Activities will begin at noon Friday with preliminary rounds and will continue through Saturday afternoon. Competition will be judged by a panel of debate coaches and speech professors from the participation schools. Finals will be announced by Lucy H. Proffitt, professor of speech here at M.C.

There will be six events in oral interpretation including: American ballads of the Southern Highlands, Cornfield Poets, Modern Poetry, Mark Twain's writings, Shakespeare, and Ghost Stories. Speech events will center around persuasive, extemporaneous, and after dinner speaking.

An added attraction will be the Pentathalon competition in which participants compete for the best overall performance in five oral interpretation categories. The high point of the weekend will be Friday night. The M.C. Playhouse is presenting a special performance of "Twelfth Night" for the visting speakers. After the play the tournament will continue with competition in a very apropos category — Ghost Stories.

Scots Bow To Millsaps

The Scots traveled to Jackson, Mississippi where they were handed a tough 17-14 defeat by Millsaps.

The Majors scored ten quick points in the first quarter. Quarterback Dale Keyes passed to Joe Gheesling for 35 yards and a score. Keyes added the point to make it 7-0. Later in the quarter, he kicked a 35-yard field goal to increase the margin 10-0.

In the second quarter the Scots tallied when quarterback Joe Costner hit Bill Corbett on a 37-yard pass and run play for the first score. Steve Gordon added the point and it was 10-7 at the half.

Following the second half kickoff, the Scots started a drive. The drive culminated with a 120-yard pass from Costner to flanker Mike Butler. Gordon again added the point and the Scots led for the first time 14-10.

However, the lead was short-lived as Keyes hit halfback Rowan Torrey on a 64-yard pass for the score. Keyes converted the kick and it was 17-14 Majors.

The Scots in the fourth quarter nearly scored twice but one was stopped when a field goal was missed and the other when the Scots ran out of downs.

Costner hit 16 of 35 passes for 161 yards. Randy Minor caught six passes to push his season's total to 31 receptions. Bill Baggett led the ground game with 74 yards. Larry Stephens and Tom Ickes intercepted passes for the Scots.

Saturday at 7:30, Capital University of Columbus, Ohio, will be here to play the Scots.

College Notes Are Back

(reprinted from the Maryville Times, October 11, 1912)

A vigorous and clean game of football was played on the College gridiron on Monday afternoon between the Baker-Himel boys of Knoxville and the College Scrubs. The College boys won by a score of 12 to 7. The feature of the game was Hodges' phenomenal catching of forward passes. Hodges made two touch downs, and many excellent plays. The entire team worked well together.

The Nashville game resulted in an overwhelming defeat of our first team by the Commodores. The score was 100 to 3. The new rules practically eliminate any chance for the weaker team when playing a strong team. Capt. Badgett made the score for Maryville by a field goal. It is something to have scored against Vanderbilt. The game with Lebanon resulted also in a defeat for our team, the score being 13 to 0. Next Saturday our boys are up against the U. of T. on Wait Field, Knoxville. The team is having its hardest work at the beginning of the season. Most of the team are new men, but they are learning the game and will give a good account of themselves before the season is over.

Prof. Hall conducted the Tuesday evening meeting this week. The song service, as usual, brought out a great audience.

Prof. Gillingham is confined at home with a severe cold.

Students are still arriving. The enrollment is 537. During the past week, besides students from Tennessee, students have entered from Michigan, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Alabama.

The great veranda at Pearsons is proving a great satisfaction to the third story girls. The view from the porch is one of the best in the county.

The literary societies had lively sessions on Friday and Saturday nights.

Rev. H.S. Lyle conducted chapel on Monday morning and spoke on a practical subject.

The chimneys on Anderson are being capped with concrete. This will make them safer.

The grounds about Pearsons have been neatly graded, and sown with grass seed.

Independents Are Still Ahead

The Independents continued their hold on first place in the flagball league with a 41-0 win over the Conspiracy. Bill Cochran and Brad Towne were the stars. Cochran threw two touchdown passes to Towne and in turn Towne hit Cochran with one and Malcolm Westrbook with two

The Juniors and Sig stayed just one game back. The Juniors deeated Kappa Phi 36-13. Jeff White threw touchdown passes to Freddie Gillespie, Tom Millikin and Mark Brookes.

The Sigs defeated the Sophomores 28-7 in rain on Friday. Kent Smith threw two touchdown passes to pace the offense.

"Twelfth Night" cast

'Twelfth Night" Is Looked Over

By Carla Hulce

William Shakespeare's romantic comedy "Twelfth Night" is the current production of the College Playhouse, and the play is easily up to the usual high standards of that group.

Whether intentionally or not, the play's more humorous subplot is the highlight of the show. Mark Stoub, as Sir Toby Belch, turns in his always excellent performance as he portrays the most outrageous, lecherous old drunk this campus has ever seen.

Aiding Stoub in his performance are Thomas Williamson, playing the part of the timid and dissipated Sir Andrew Aguecheek to perfection; Nancy McCleary, finally seen in a part other than that of a humble servant and doing a delightful job with the role of Maria; and King Bennett, always scheming, but managing to inject a great deal of humor into his somewhat villianous role.

Special notice must be given to Mark Mertz, one of the Playhouse's most accomplished actors, who is perfectly cast as Malvolio, the despicable but pitiful steward to Olivia. He is rather unjustly tricked and made to appear insane, but the audience delights in this punishment, because somehow it seems suitable to the actions of the character.

The participants of the more serious side of the play are not without merit, however. In their first major roles in this theatre, Coralie Usrey and Thomas Martin as Olivia and Orsino show much promise. Although their diction leaves something to be desired, on the whole their performances are much more than those of most beginning actors.

Considering the great number of new or relatively inexperienced actors in this production, the quality of the play is somewhat remarkable. Stephen Leng, Paul Hollingsworth, and particularly John Gossett contribute a good deal to the play and any future performances by these three would be very much welcome.

Suzanne Drees and Robert Cox, as Viola and Sebastian, are both to be commended, especially the former for her ability to play a dual role, which is not generally required for an ordinary role.

The dancers in the Elizabethan masque add the finishing touch to this production. Obviously a great deal of work went into that particular scene, along with the research necessary to recreate an authentic atmosphere in the dance.

The final performance of "Twelfth Night" will be presented on October 29, at 8:15 p.m. in the Theatre. An enjoyable evening is in store for anyone who attends, and may even lead to a demand for more Shakespearean productions by the Playhouse. If not, at least some will have had their first taste of Shakespeare; hopefully it won't be the last.

Library Given McGill Book

Walter McGill was one of the first graduates of M.C., then the Southern and Western Theological Seminary. Besides the distinction of studying under Dr. Issac Anderson, he is also one of the first authors from East Tennessee according to his biographer, Mrs. Lucille M. Bates of Midway, Texas who recently donated his biography to the MC Library.

Her book, Walter McGill, Preacher and Penman, begins the story of his life with his birth in Rhea County in 1807. McGill trained for the ministry at the Theological Seminary and graduated in 1835.

He and his family settled in Missionary Ridge where he completed his epic poem The Western World, begun at the Seminary, which is now a very rare collector's item. McGill's second work was a treatise on the church's organization, A Commentary on Ecclesiastical Government, published in 1850.

The McGills were part of a small group of confederate sympathizers in Chattanooga. When war was finally declared in 1861, McGill's oldest son served in the Confederate ranks. Milton McGill died in the Battle of Murfreesboro and McGill himself was arrested and held as a prisoner of war. The McGill home at Missionary Ridge was near the site of the battle of Chattanooga.

In order to escape the harshness of Reconstruction, the McGills with their remaining child traveled by wagon to Walker County, Texas.

McGill spent the next ten years preaching and teaching school. His literary career seems to have died in Tennessee. He worked on a final book which was never published. McGill died in his Texas home in 1878 at the age of 71.

His biographer, Mrs. Bates, the great-granddaughter of Walter McGill, has donated a copy of her book to the library. She also provided a copy of the frontespiece which was taken while McGill was a prisoner.

Mrs. Bates' book reflects a considerable amount of research and is written in a simple, straight-forward and compassionate style.

Do's And Don't's Of Halloween

Halloween for this year is past, but as a public service, the Echo is offering this list of hints for Halloween to guide you next year, so here goes.

Don't wear a mask if you're over 16. They contain a chemical which little kids are immune to that turns anyone wearing one into a raving criminal.

Avoid dark houses. They are populated by people who will beat you to death with your own bag if you disturb them.

Voting Rights Imperiled

The passage of the twenty-sixth amendment and the State of Tennessee's eighteen year old majority law has created a great deal of indecision over student voting rights.

Eventually, court cases will define this question. Until a final decision is made, it is interesting to examine the progressive steps leading to such a definition. One such progression recently occurred in Knox County, Tennessee.

In brief, the Knox County Election Commission has denied the right to vote to some 1512 University of Tennessee and Knoxville College students in the upcoming municipal election on November 4, 1971.

Decisions such as this one give Knoxville its only claim to fame. Besides acting as host to the Big Orange, Knoxville is noted for its petty partisan politics.

In their decision denying voting rights, the Election Commission split along party lines. Democrats favored registering any student requesting it. Republicans preferred to judge each case on its individual merits. The merits involved are residence requirements.

The Commission's criteria for residency is student's support and his continuing residence in Knox County. If a student receives more than fifty per cent of his income from his parents, he cannot be a resident. Judging from the Commission's stance, the Republicans have an apparent majority.

Several court cases have appeared as a result of this decision. To enable the Election Commission to defend itself from such predatory attacks, the Knox County Quarterly Court voted to authorize up to $12,000 for defense.

For a short while, it looked as if student voters would be able to exercise their constitutional rights with a favorable court decision. However, their efforts were soon stymied. First, Nashville Chancellor Alfred T. Adams dismissed a suit filed by nine University of Tennessee students on October 12, 1971. Their appeal is still pending.

Then, on October 26, 1971, a similar case before the Circuit Court in Knoxville was withdrawn. Attorneys for Richard McFall, a University of Tennessee student, asked for nonsuit when Election Commission officials produced evidence proving that Mr. McFall was permanently registered. Mr. McFall was originally denied registration because he received more than fifty per cent of his income from parents living in Alabama. However, on October 1, 1971, he was permanently registered under Commission policies because he was married. Apparently, the right to vote in Knox County rests partially upon marital status.

The criteria of the Knox County Election Commission used to deny students the right to vote can scarcely be described by anything short of ludicrous. Such voting qualifications are hardly new. Americans have been denied their constitutional rights before through devices such as property qualifications, black codes, poll taxes, and literacy tests. Many of these abuses of power have been remedied by constitutional amendments. Unfortunately, they have not been remedied in Knox County.

If the right to vote depends upon source of income, shouldn't all federal and state employees as well as employees of operations whose home office is elsewhere be denied their voting rights? More than fifty per cent of their income comes from outside Knox County.

The whole situation that exists in Knox County appears to be an attempt by the incumbent powers to subvert the constitutional rights of others for their own ends. If this situation were not so serious, it would be ridiculous.

In contrast to Knox County's petty partisanism, the Blount County Election Commission's attitude has been one of unbiased reason and tact in dealing with this complex situation. MC students who are residents of Tennessee are eligible to register in Blount County. The reason for this residence limitation is to prevent possible plural voting. The Blount County Commission is to be commended for their tact in this matter.

Eventually, student voting rights will be defined. Until then, it is interesting to observe the various reactions, both ridiculous and rational, to such a change.

Time For Men's Liberation

By Tom Coe
Boy Reporter

In Mike Nichols' Carnal Knowledge, we see two men going through life never really enjoying sexual love. We see two men, Jonathon and Sandy, who are unable to deal with real women as real human beings. This inability is the Playboy philosophy in cinematic form. Women are objects and attachments, accessories like clothes. Sex is not Jonathon and Sandy's problem as much as it is themselves in relation to women. Even though they end up sexual cripples, their real disease is the inability to deal with women as real persons. It is as Jules Feiffer, script writer for the film, says, "Like most American males, they fall in love with sex and think they've fallen in love with women."

Rollo May in his monumental work Love and Will speaks of this inability of males to deal with females in any way other than as subject-object. The women of Playboy are plastic and unreal, beyond touch. May comments that Playboy has only moved the fig leaf from the genitals to the face. The foldout is no human being — she is unreal and, most of all, unthreatening. Men often don't go beyond this point of view. A detached, schizoid existence means no touching, no threat. If a male cannot face the threat of dealing with real persons then he makes women into something less than human.

Sexual freedom and frankness has not, unfortunately, led to any great change in sexual attitudes. Males still regard women as something to conquer and control. And he doesn't see her as a human being. Sexual freedom doesn't come from promiscuity but rather from the shedddding of roles and the awareness of humanness between the sexes. In fact the deluge of sexism in the culture has made it harder to love, and harder to see women as people. Cars, radios, soap and after shave are all sold by beautlful, plastic, fertile men and women, and the invitation to sexual success is often implied in the product. No wonder our images of each other are detached and schizoid.

It has always seemed that maybe the great hope for change lies with women who refuse to be plastic and stand up as real human beings. Women's Liberation has a great propaganda job to do; first in making other women aware of themselves as people and, second, in confronting the sexist male culture. The basic propositions of Women's Lib are fine, but somehow they seem misdirected: the vision is blurred. It is blurred because instead of liberating culture, and specifically males, Women's Lib has often fallen back on male tactics and life-style. Women, I am convinced, can change the world (read Aristophanes). They can reorder the culture. I am also convinced that women can teach much more to men than men to women.

The roles of the two sexes in our present culture are set. One is agressive and violent, the other is accepting and pacifist.

Too often the mistake is made by Women's Lib zealots that they, (1) have to make it in a male culture and,, (2) that the only way to do that is the same way males do. In other words, they become just another clawing, scheming animal like most males in the business world. Something is out of step there.

What I want to plead for is sanity. Does the world really need women who can go toe to toe with men? Do we really need women with black belts in karate? Instead, maybe women could teach something to men. As sick as women may be with their roles, what is really wrong with patience and kindness as virtues? Are they much better than violence, etc.? Isn't there enough of that in our world already?

Chemical Society Makes Plans

By Linda Lou Blomeke

The Maryville College Chapter of the American Chemical Society is starting another year, and the members are planning activities for chemistry students.

Our campus chapter, a student affiliate of the American Chemical Society, was organized to further interest in chemistry. One of the ways in which the society encourages this interest is by keeping students informed as to the current areas of chemical research. This is done by means of films and publications which are obtained from the American Chemical Society.

Guest speakers visit Maryville, enabling students to keep up with the latest findings in various fields of chemical research. These speakers are often college professors who conduct seminars and encourage chemistry majors to continue on to graduate school. Some of our own students also conduct seminars. Ryn Schieber recently spoke about her summer research with Dr. Ogren and Bill Hutton.

The campus chapter of the A.C.S. also sponsors field trips. Last year, a group went to New Orleans to attend a regional A.C.S. meeting, and there will probably be some trips this year also.

The American Chemical Society chapter at Maryville is hoping to reach more people by way of speakers, seminars, and growing publicity and to expand student interest in our Chemistry department. This years officers are: Edward Hill and Kathy Peterson, co-chairmen and Ryn Schieber, treasurer.

Guidance Conference Held At MC

Maryville College was host to some twenty high school and junior college guidance personnel from eight states this past weekend. The occasion was the fourth Guidance Counselor Personnel Conference, sponsored by the college admissions staff.

The purpose of the conference sas to provide the counselors with a first-hand look at Maryville College, and to acquaint them with the unique opportunities available to students on the Maryville campus.

On Thursday evening conferees were entertained with a dinner at the home of the Director of Admissions, Colonel and Mrs. William F. Taylor, Jr. Friday's agenda included: a discussion of Maryville's academic program by a faculty panel composed of Dr. Arda Walker, moderator, Dr. Russell Parker, Dr. David Young, Mrs. Charlotte Beck and Mrs. Sallie Schoen; a tour of the campus facilities conducted by students; a bus tour of the Maryville College Environmental Educational Center and Cades Cove; and dinner in the college dining room at which time Dr. Malcolm Willey, Academic Executive Officer, addressed the group. Following dinner the group attended the performance of "Twelfth Night" at the college theatre.

Saturday's agenda included the President's Breakfast in the college dining room with an address by President Joseph J. Copeland. The breakfast was followed by visits to other points of interest in the area.

Vespers will be held in the area of the Little Chapel at 7:00 p.m. Sunday. Louise McNair will coordinate the service which will feature dialogue.

Ogden Recital Praised

By Charles Craven

John Ogden, the internationally known pianist from London, was given one of the most enthusiastic reactions possible for his recital on Friday afternoon, October 29. Mr. Ogden has given recitals all over the world and has performed in most of the nations in Europe.

Mr. Ogden's performance was unexpected, as he was traveling with visiting Mr. and Mrs. Richard Yardumian. Because the event came so suddenly, there was little time for advance publicity. Thus, the performance was not as well attended as it otherwise would have been. However, most of those who heard Mr. Ogden thought of his recital as an unforgettable experience.

The program consisted of "4 Impromptu's, Op. 90," by Schubert; "Ballade No. 4 in F minor, Op. 47," by Chopin; "Dance," a 1939 composition by Richard Yardumian; and "Six Transcendental Etudes" by Liszt.

Listeners interviewed after the performance used "inspiring" most often to describe the recital. Another comment was that he "made every note count," and that he made the piano sound "like a full orchestra." One listener commented on the "power he unleashed," which was so penetrating that it was impossible to ignore.

Members of the music faculty, in addition to echoing the above comments, remarked on his sensitivity, his warmth, his technique in playing, and his ability to impress the listener without falling on "showmanship" techniques commonly used by pianists.

He gave the impression that his hands "rippled" over the keys, much as water ripples over rocks in a stream. Yet at the same time, he seemed to give each note individual attention.

At the end of each piece, sighs of relief were heard throughout the auditorium, testifying to the emotion caused by the music. Certainly this man will be heard of more and more in years to come.

Puppet Theatre Created

By Sue Bailey

A number of Maryville students are enrolled in what promises to be a distinctively creative interim. Under the supervision of Mrs. Lucy Proffitt, twenty-one students will be involved in constructing and producing a puppet theatre. They will be working with several forms of puppetry: stringed marionettes, large puppets, and hand puppets, as typified by the famous Punch and Judy puppets.

There are no prerequisites for participation in the interim except for what Mrs. Proffitt expresses as the desire to display creativity. In addition to acquiring a basic knowledge of the medium, the students are encouraged to seize the opportunity to concentrate in one particular area. They may want to specialize in carpentry work, scenery, costumes, script or some other area of production, or may wish to focus on presentation.

Although the interim must be basically a "learn by doing" approach, various other sources will be used. The library contains several excellent references on puppetry and its possibilities. Additional assistance is planned, as arrangements are being made for a puppetmaker from Gatlinburg to aid in an on-campus workshop.

One culminating activity for the interim is the presentation of a CIV program. Hwoever, the interim will also lead to concrete ideas and insights for using puppetry, particularly to drama and elementary education majors. Students in other interims, having experience in puppetry or simply interested in the opportunities available, are invited to participate in the interim's work. A preliminary meeting for the enrolled students will be held on November 10 during E hour.

A million years ago, dinosaurs had a mercury pollution problem, reports the November Science Digest. Tests conducted by the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation on the neck bone of a mastodon showed it contained one part per million of mercury — twice as much as federal standards allow in food for human consumption. The tests are part of a probe for mercury problems in wildlife.

Echo Examines World Concern Committee

By Sarah Winbigler

One problem many people find when they come to college, particularly if the college is a small one, is that it is so easy to let oneself become isolated from the outside world. Most students do not subscribe to newspapers; television's news programs only give a concise picture of major events, and radio stations squeeze only a few lines of news between the Top-40s. With academic pressures and other activities to occupy their minds, there is a tendency among many students to become so wrapped up in their own concerns that they ignore world problems. Maryville's attempt to alleviate this situation takes the form of an All College Council Committee, the World Concern Committee.

The purpose of this committee is to help the people in the college community to become more aware of what is going on in the world and to tell them what they can do to help.

The committee's major project is the Walk for Development. Many Maryville students participated in this last year, and the committee is hoping for a great deal of support for this year's walk, which is already being planned. Last year's walk was in Knoxville; the committee hopes to have one in Maryville this year. Participants in the Walk for Development are sponsored by people who agree to pay a certain amount of money for each mile walked by the participant. Mr. Stuart, Bill Martin, and Janice Foxworthy form the sub-committee in charge of the Walk for Development. Interested students may contact Janice at Box 2143.

Sue Sterling and Dr. Braid are heading a sub-committee on the Fred Hope Fund. Last year, this fund was created to bring a foreign student to Maryville College. For some as yet unknown reason, the student never came, and the fund now consists of about $300. The committee hopes to add to this amount by having a carnival or some other fund-raising activity, and the proceeds will be used mostly for scholarships for foreign students.

The World Concern Committee is planning to have a Red Cross Blood Bank Day on campus. On this day, students will be able to donate blood to the Red Cross as a means of expressing concern for Vietnam casualties, Pakistan refugees, or for whatever purpose intends to donate the blood. Andrew Yankama, Eiko Kikawada, and Dr. Collins are in charge of this project.

Patti Shelton and Mr. Price are raising funds to aid Bengali refugees from Pakistan. This money will be given to the East Pakistan Emergency Refugee Fund.

Another activity of the World Concern Committee deals with peace marches. The committee obtains information about the marches and organizes groups to attend.

Obviously, the committee cannot carry out such a large number of major projects without a tremendous amount of support from students. People who are concerned and would like to help should contact the following committee members: Janice Foxworthy, chairman, Dr. Braid, co-chairman, Robert Barker, Dr. Collins, Deborah Dukes, Eiko Kikawada, Bill Martin, Mr. Price, Patti Shelton, Sue Sterling, Mr. Stuart, and Andrew Yankama.

Dr. Harry Harter confers with Mr. Angel Brussloff, and Mr. Richard Yardumian over future of Oratorio.

Oratorio Re-examined

By this time, it is fairly well known that the world premiere of Richard Yardumian's oratorio, "The Story of Abraham," scheduled for November 12, has been postponed until May. Dates are not definitely set yet, but Dr. Harter has announced that the performance will be held, and that the Dallas Symphony will be here. It was the strike of this orchestra that forced the postponement.

This event has led to a number of results involving both those directly concerned with the performance and those not.

The first major change was the planned cancellation of this year's performance of the "Messiah," which had been scheduled for May. But Dr. Harter has announced that the "Messiah" will be performed on Sunday afternoon, January 30, 1972 at 3:00 p.m. This means that a string of "Messiah" performances over 20 years long will not be broken.

Rehearsals actually began last Monday night, and are held every Monday night at 7:15.

The second major result of the cancellation concerns the oratorio choirs and the College Choir, who have been preparing Yardumian's work since September. Mr. Yardumian and Mr. Angel Brussloff, conductor of the Dallas Symphony, met with the combined choruses last Thursday night. Mr. Bussloff announced that he would like to perform the work in Dallas as part of his orchestra's subscription season next year, and invited the choruses to Dallas to perform the oratorio with him. Further details of the trip are not immediately available.

Scots Topple Capital

Two touchdown passes from Scot quarterback Joe Costner to split end Mike Butler in the second half pulled the Scots from a 7-6 halftime deficit to a 21-14 victory over a tough Capital University ball club.

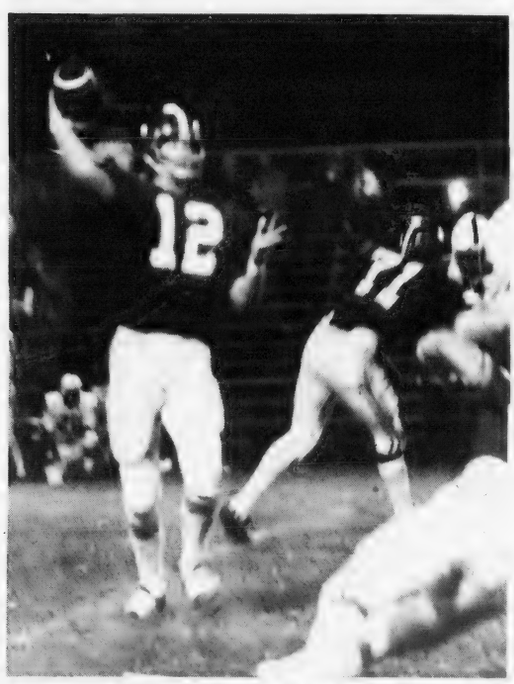
The first quarter saw Capital break on top when halfback Colby Byron sprinted thirteen yards to score. Joe Duffy added the point and at the end of the first quarter it was 7-0 Capital.

In the second quarter, following an attempted run of a fourth down punt, the Scots moved in to score. Quarterback Costner got the six points with a one yard plunge. The point failed and at the half the Scots trailed 7-6.

The Scots took the lead for the first time midway through the third period when Joe Costner connected with Mike Butler on a 23 yard pass play. Costner then passed to tight end Joe Kozel for the two point conversion.

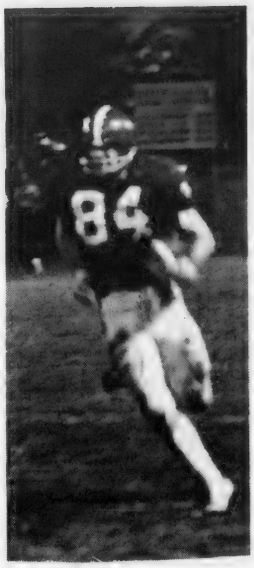
However, Capital came right back and tied it up when halfback Geoff Schmidt scampered six yards and Duffy booted the point.

The fourth quarter saw the Scots begin a sustained march. With Costner passing to Minor and the running of Baggett and Corbett, the Scots steadily moved downfield. Finally, Joe Costner unloaded a 37 yard home run ball to Mike Butler for the score. Steve Gordon added the point and the final score was 21-14 for the Scots.



Costner had another fine night, hitting on 11 of 17 passes for 147 yards. Randy Minor hauled in five more to push his total receptions to 36 for the year.

On defense, everyone played well and Dave Clinton, the sophomore linebacker, spearheaded them with 22 tackles.



This Saturday night at 7:30 the Scots will host arch-rival Carson-Newman. The Eagles are boasting a good team, but if an effort by the Scots as was displayed Saturday is put forth this week, the Scots can send the Eagles home to Jefferson City a loser. Everyone come Saturday as the Scots try to push for victory number four.

Girls Like Volleyball

By Betsy Joyner

Women's intramural hockey season ended last week. Theta trounced Chi Beta 3-0 in the last game. This gave Theta the overall victory for the hockey intramurals. Julie Mobley scored two of the winning goals along with Laurie Byrne for the third.

With hockey season over volleyball practices began. There are Chi Beta, Theta, and Independent teams. They will play each other each Tuesday and Thursday. The outcome of these games will be an All-Star game on Nov. 17.

There seems to be a genuine interest in the game of volleyball among the women of Maryville College. The number of teams is overwhelming and there is a general atmosphere of excitement and real competitive spirit.

Policy Meetings Reviewed

By Nancy Rankin

The week of October 25-29, 1971 saw Maryville College host to "Community Meetings on U.S. Foreign Policy." In connection with the U.S. State Department, the program is designed to meet increased public interest in world affairs.

A team of four foreign affairs specialists attended classes and held open discussions on campus while appearing before various civic groups in the Maryville City area.

Participants were Donald F. Herr, specialist on Latin America; Allen R. Overmeyer, Arab-Israel specialist; James A. Parker, authority on Central Africa; and B. Donovan Picard, analyst in U.S. Asian affairs. Each visitor presented his field in a similar manner with presentation of historical background, and recent policy followed by open question and answer sessions.

Future policy and the changing tenets of present day foreign policy was emphasized as these meetings were set up to redirect some of the thinking of the American public. The State Department representatives accented the powerful position of the United States today while advocating that the wars and military coercion of past years is no longer feasible in today's complex international involvements. As an alternative to the seriousness of war, the specialists stressed the role of their department and its efforts at stabilization through diplomatic channels and negogiations.

Art Gallery Expanded

Maryville College recently received two more paintings - gifts from alumni and friends - to add to its growing collection of art works by famous and well known artists.

"A Scene in Burgundy" by the contemporary French artist Georges Laporte, is a gift of Dr. F. M. Hinkhouse of San Francisco, California. Dr. Hinkhouse has become interested in Maryville College and its collection of paintings through friendship with F. Herbert Hoover of the class of 1952, a collector who has his own gallery in San Francisco. Dr. Hinkhouse is generous in his support of ecucational institutions, and especially through gifts of art.

Georges Laporte, born in Montmartre in 1926, is the youngest of eleven painters whose works are printed by Nomis Editions, official editors of the French Museums, and sold at the Louvre in Paris and in other major museums throughout France. "A Scene in Burgundy" is painted in heavy impasto oil characterized by quick brush strokes in predominantly light tones of gray, white and wine.

"La Table," a semi-abstract painting by Spanish born Antoni Clave, is a gift from Mr. L. H. Langston of the class of 1913, who with his wife and son have made a number of significant additiong to the college collection. Mr. and Mrs. Langston live in Rumson, New Jersey, and Mrs. Langston is a member of the board of directors.

"La Table" is an oil rendering of a chair and table scene, in which recognizable objects have been reduced to abstracted patterns in sombre but pure tones of blue, red, green, and yellow. Mr. Swenson, assistant professor in art, reports that Maryville students who visited the Langstons and saw their collection were excited and much taken by the examples of Antoni Clave's works. Clave, who was born in 1913, represents contemporary art in the present college collection which includes such older masters as Goya, Gainsborough, Ruebens, Turner and Zuccharelli.

Is Reading Out Of Date?

Dr. Margaret Sherer, associate professor of education at Maryville College, served as one of the conference chairman at the meeting of the Tennessee Council International Reading Association in Murfreesboro Friday, November 5.

The theme of the conference, which met at Middle Tennessee State University, was "Reading - Obsolete or Opportunity?" The session chaired by Dr. Sherer was "Audio Visual Aids Machines for Teaching Reading."

Test Dates Set For Civil Service Opportunities

The U.S. Civil Service Commission today announced three test dates for 1972 jobs in Federal agencies.

Candidates whose applications are received by December 3, 1971, will be tested on January 8, 1972; those whose applications are received by January 7 will be tested February 12; and those whose applications are received by February 2 will be tested March 11. Applications postmarked after February 2 will not be accepted.

Complet insturctions for filing, and information on opportunities available, are contained in CSC Announcement No. 414, Summer Jobs in Federal Agencies, which may be obtained from any area office of the Commission, many major post offices, most college placement offices, or from the U. S. Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C. 20415.

Applicants rated eligible in 1971 need not take the written test again unless they wish to improve their scores. They will be sent a special form by December 1 to up date their qualifications and indicate their availability for employment in 1972.

The Commission urged candidates to apply early for maximum consideration, and emphasized that the number of jobs available through the nationwide test will be extremely small in proportion to the number of competitors. Last year, 157,485 persons were tested and only 12,600 were appointed through the nationwide CSC exam.

In addition to providing details about the types of jobs that will be filled through the nationwide test, Announcement 414 contains information on other summer jobs that will be filled through merit procedures administered by individual Federal agencies. Last year, more than 22,000 jobs were filled through such procedures.

Stea Worshop Is Set Saturday

Three officers of Maryville College's Student Tennessee Education Association will attend a statewide meeting of officers and advisors in Nashville Saturday, November 13.

Those attending will be Dr. Margaret Sherer, STEA advisor, Debbie Graham, Jean Fiedler, and Caroline Munn.

The program will be primarily a workshop for new STEA officers and a general "get-to-know-you" session. Subjects to be discussed include student registration for the 18 year old vote, increased community involvement and membership drives for STEA.

VA Has Tutors

Veterans Administration reminded veterans studying under the G.I. Bill that they can hire a tutor at VA expense, if needed, and still get the full educational allowance.

About 4,000 veterans received more than 60,000 hours of tutorial help in connection with their G.I. Bill educational studies, VA reported today.

VA officials noted that to be eligible for this benefit (established by the Veterans Education and Training Act of 1970), the veteran must be enrolled under the G.I. Bill above the high school level on a half time or more basis.

If the veteran needs tutoring to pass a required course, VA allows up to $50 monthly for a maximum of nine months to pay for it.

These tutorial fees are in addition to the regular monthly education check the veteran receives, and are not chargeable to his basic entitlement, officials pointed out.

VA uged veterans interested in tutorial assistance or education benefits to contact their nearest VA office, or local veterans service organization representatives.

Anti-War Project

By Alice Hook

CIV for November 17 promises to be one of the year's most interesting. The speaker is Fred Branfman who is currently director of Project Air War, a non-profit educational organization aiming to raise public consciousness about the ongoing air war in Indochina.

Project Air War's main concern is the hundreds of thousands of Indo-Chinese peasants right now huddled together in caves and holes as 2,000 tons of bombs rain down upon them daily.

Project Air War materials are of two main kinds: (1) moving and chilling drawings, essays and photographs gathered directly from bombing victims; (2) the most extensive files on the air war outside the Pentagon, consisting of interviews with American air personnel, Pentagon statistics, newspaper files, Congressional Hearings, the Pentagon Papers, etc.

Project materials have appeared in the New York Times magazine, the Washington Post, Boston Globe, Chicago Sun-Times, Congressional Record, the April 1971 transcript of the Kennedy hearings, and numerous other publications, and has been displayed on the Walter Cronkite CBS news program.

Project Air War's ten-man staff ranges from veteran peace activitists to former airmen. It is about equally divided between research and dissemination personnel.

Fred Branfman's experiences make him a leading speaker on Indo-China. He spent 4 years in Laos, from March 1967 to February 1971. He spent his first 2 years as a volunteer with International Voluntary Services, Inc., a non-profit organization contracted to the Agency for International Development. As a volunteer, he learned to speak Laotian and French.

Mr. Fred Branfman, CIV speaker

His final 2 years in Laos were spent doing research, writing, interpreting, and working as a free-lance contributor to Dispatch News Service International.

During this period he interviewed several thousand refugees from American bombing; dozens of American pilots and air war officials; and local government and Embassy officials in Laos, South Vietnam, Thailand, and Cambodia.

A part of this experience is summed up in "The Presidential War in Laos: 1964-1970," published in Laos: War and Revolution, by Harper and Row; and "Laos: Story of an Air War," published in the Boston Globe, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and Chicago Today, a three-part series on the bombing in Laos.

Five faculty members from Maryville College attended the forty-first meeting of the South Atlantic Modern Language Association in Atlanta November 4-6. Dr. Evelyn Irving of the foreign language department was chairman of the meeting.

Other members of the faculty attending the meeting were: Dr. Ralph S. Collins, professor and chairman of the department of foreign languages; Mrs. Grace O. Rodriquez, assistant professor of Spanish; Dr. Elizabeth H. Jackson, professor and chairman of the department of English; and Mrs. Charlotte Beck, instructor in English.

City children age 10 to 13 have less physical endurance than suburban kids due to lack of exercises such as long-distance running, swimming and bicycling, reports the November Science Digest. Physiologist Michael Maksud used a bicycle-like testing apparatus to test central city youngsters in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

The Echo Resounds

Q: Where did Thaw Hall get its name?

A. Mr. and Mrs. William Thaw of Pittsburgh were instrumental in the re-establishment of the College after the Civil War. Mr. Thaw's work was deemed so important that the Directors of the College proposed renaming the institution "Thaw College," but he objected to the idea. Mr. Thaw, who worked fervently to allow Blacks to attend Maryville, donated over $6,000 to the College before he died. After his death, Mrs. Thaw continued the contributions. At the time of her death in the 1920's, the Thaw contributions amounted to $250,000.

Q. Why is the library closed during CIV?

A: This is done to remind enthusiastic young scholars in the library that there is a CIV and to encourage them to attend it.

Q: Who announces the College football games?

A: None other than our sports editor, Dapper Dan McKinstry, does the honors.

VOLLEYBALL AND PING PONG

Sign up now for the Coed Volleyball Tournament during Interim. Get your own team — five gals and five fellows. Sign up sheets are on the bulletin board by the equipment room in the Physical Education Building. Get your partner and enter coed Ping Pong Tournament. The deadline is November 17.

RECYCLING

There is a new happening that will be trying to catch on at Maryville College. The Discussion Section No. 10 of Science Thought felt it might be a pretty good idea if they got a "recycling program" together. So far, they plan to put boxes by office and classroom doors only in the Sutton Science Building. The scrap paper that will be dropped in these boxes will be picked up weekly to be recycled. The program is not a large scale operation. Any "volunteers" who would like to be a part of the program are welcome to sign up. There will be sheets posted around campus if you want to render your services. Any and all help will be appreciated! Even though it is not a disease, the Project could catch on fast with the proper treatment. You can never tell, it may even spread to "Now Town!"

Interim Costs Deplored

On November 22, 1971, Maryville College will enter its fourth year of interim projects under the new curriculum. Since their conception, interims have developed certain problems. Foremost among these is an undemocratic, economic discrimination between projects.

At present, there is no provision to provide those students in financial need with funds to participate in expensive interims. Such a limitation discriminates among students and severely limits the educational process.

Does Maryville College seek to educate those with the ability to pay, or does the College seek equable learning opportunity for all? This dilemma now confronts MC, and it must be remedied.

Several solutions present themselves. If the present financial aid program is used to end this discrimination, then perhaps a scholarship program can be established to this end.

A second solution outside the current system of financial aid is also a possibility. If tuition rates were raised a minimum amount, then everyone could be guaranteed an off-campus interim.

Such a program would include several important results: (1) Students with different backgrounds and receiving government grants might find MC more attractive. The College would experience a broader constituent base. (2) There would be increased incentive to remain at MC. The attrition rate might decline. (3) Interims would be more democratic than at present.

Such a program is now in effect at Otterbein College in Ohio and under consideration elsewhere. With the computer facilities available, MC could certainly afford to initiate a study of such a program.

Regardless of the solution, one must be found. To deny equable opportunities for learning is to deny any hope of fulfilling the purpose of Maryville College.

New Mental Technique Presented At MC

To be able to think more clearly, to speak more effectively, to act with more energy and creativity, and to enjoy life more: such improvements in daily living are said to be the results of a natural, effortless mental technique called transcendental meditation (or TM). There will be an introductory lecture on TM Tuesday, November 16th, at 7:30 p.m.. in the Music Hall of The Fine Arts Center. All are cordially invited to attend. The lecture will be free.

Mr. Eric Dahl, of the International Meditation Socity (IMS) will be giving the lecture. Mr. Dahl says that TM is not a philosophy or a religion. It is a systematic, scientifically verifiable technique which unfolds each individual's full potential. It is as ancient as mankind and is universal in its application. He says it is simple and easy to learn, and that it will help every man fulfill his aspirations in life. Better personal relationships, increased ability to deal with problems and meet responsibilities, increased effectiveness in work, more inner peace, and better mental and physical health are all said to be the results of this simple and easy technique.

Scientific investigation at UCLA, Stanford Research Institute, and Harvard Medical School has shown, among other things, that during TM the body receives profound relaxation and rest and his remarkably free from tension. The metabolic rate, the workload of the heart, and biochemical indications of anxiety all decrease considerably. The body gains a state of rest deeper than the rest of deep sleep, yet the mind, as recorded by the electroencephalograph (EEG), is fully awake.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

While everyone is rushing around next week making last ditch attempts at pulling through this term alive, there will be a tendency toward a certain selfishness; a feeling that our problems are the most important and the biggest in the world.- They're not. On Wednesday, Nov. 17, there will be an appeal for fund for the Bengali refugees of East Pakistan. The problems they have will not be over by next week-end.

There are millions of people who have fled from the war's devastation in Pakistan and they have no food, little shelter and less medical aid. The government of India spends millions of dollars on relief, but there are so many people that this only amounts to something like 45 cent per person per day for food, clothing and medicine, all badly needed.

Granted, Maryville College probably can't save the world - or even Pakistan, but we can do something. On Wednesday there will be boxes in the lobby of Pearsons and the student center. For each time you would buy coffee or a coke, remember that the Bengali refugees don't know where their next meal is coming from. Many schools are having fasts; due to some difficulty we are unable to have one here, but we can do our share.

The money collected in this way will be administered through the International Relief Agency, CARE and a church-sponsored relief agency. Please share a tiney bit of what you have with others.

For more information, contact, Mr. Price, Patti Shelton or Doug Rugh.

Sincerely,
Patti Shelton

A Poem Addressed to Life
By Bill Martin

I walked one day, refreshed at dawn and saw spread out before me in the east, a grand array of colors.
The purples and yellows, flashing in golden splendor,
inspired my life.
I saw above me a dark blue dome, touched with fluffy clouds and twinkling stars.
From the brisk air
arose a smell of fall.
The seasons leaves around me lay, lazy, colorful and crisp
after a pretty summer of life.
The focus of my thoughts,
made me realize that life,
I happen to love you.

My Back Pages

Livin' With The Animals

By Tom Coe
Boy Reporter

Lawrence Sterns once wrote on Tristram Shandy: "In headache and in worry, life oft times drifts away." Worrying, indeed, seems to be one of the great constants of human existence. The point is that most of the time we waste our lives stewing over things which we are powerless to change or even affect. So much of our worry is simply uncreative and time consuming.

Anyway, we've compiled a list of problems, local and cosmic, that might open new worlds to our manic, compulsive selves. Since we can't solve anything, let's worry about these:

1. The plight of the railroads
2. Hijackings (Bus)
3. Dutch-elm disease
4. Are you running with me, Jesus? Billy Graham for V.P. in 72?
5. What are the dolphins really trying to say to us?
6. The East Tennessee coal supply for this winter
7. The metric system vs. the English system
8. Aero-biophysics
9. What is Faith Baird's middle name?
10. The cornblight
11. Will we have an annual this year?
12. What is Now Hall?
13. The last five letters of Communism are UNism.
14. Is statement 21 true?
15. Dorm ecology
16. Are handball courts really giant Skinner boxes?
17. Who is Fred Jensen?
18. Is there sex after death?
19. Why isn't Paul McCartney dead?
20. Why is this columnist smiling?
21. Is statement 14 false?
22. Putting X back in Xmas.
23. What's URE?
24. Who is Hector Bloom?
25. There's hamburger all over the highway in Mystic, Connecticut.

The lovely harvest of mass media is laid at our doorstep and now we have the world's headaches as our own. Through the Knoxville Journal, Knoxville News-Sentinel, the Maryville Enterprise, and the CBS Evening News, we are assaulted with the "news" of the latest catastrophe, political blunder, and-or ecological crisis.

The fact is that in this age of communications not only have we made the world smaller but consequently enlarged everyone's problems. Events on the other side of the global village are suddenly your worries. As Buck Barrow once said to brother Clyde, "Ain't life grand?"

I long ago quit reading the newspapers and watching the news. We'd all be better off if we made up our own news. It is, of course, one thing to face problems squarely; it is another to fret worthlessly.

Will Rogers used to remark that all he knew was in the papers. All I read is the sports and the funnies. They are the only thing that make sense anymore.

The thing that cured me and made me quit listening to Walter Cronkite was ping-pong diplomacy. For a few days I had this gnawing vision that the world had turned into a science fiction story. Of course, I was right and as soon as I realized that, I went outside and had a good time.

Presser Scholarships For Five MC Students

Five Maryville College music students have been selected by the music faculty to be recipients of Presser Foundation scholarships, Dr. Harry H. Harter, chairman of the Department of Fine Arts, announced recently.

Presser Foundation scholarships are made possible by a grant to Maryville College by this foundation annually for music students of good character with satisfactory academic ratings. Preference is given to those who expect to become teachers of music and, all other qualifications being equal, students needing financial assistance have priority.

At Maryville College the requirement for academic standing is general grade point average equivalent to a "B" for the previous academic year prior to the awarding of the scholarship in November. The recipient must be an upper class music major.

Lee Kull In Concert

Lee Kull, assistant professor of music at Maryville College, was a soloist when the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra presented the second subscription concert of the season Tuesday evening, November 9 at the Civic Auditorium.

The program opened with the St. Paul's Suite for Strings by Gustav Holst. Mr. Kull will be soloist in the Mozart Symphonie Concertante, K. 364, following the Holst work.

Mr. Kull has been a member of the orchestra several seasons and is principal violist. He performed as soloist last January in the Van Vactor Viola Concerto.

A graduate of the University of Texas with a B. M. in theory-composition, Mr. Kull also has the M.M. degree in viola from the University of Houston where he studied with Wayne Crouse, principal of the Houston Symphony Orchestra. He was a member of the faculty at Peabody College in Nashville before coming to Maryville College.

Sears-Roebuck Grants $1500

Maryville College has received a grant of $1500 from The Sears-Roebuck Foundation, according to a college spokesman. The presentation was made by Sears' representative, J. L. McCullough. Grants totaling more than $39,750 were distributed to 35 privately supported colleges and universities in Tennessee this week by the foundation.

The Tennessee colleges and universities are among more than 1,000 private, accredited institutions across the country which are sharing in $1,500,000 in Sears Foundation funds. Nationally, private colleges and universities will receive one million dollars in unrestricted grants and an additional half million through a Sears Foundaton program to assist college and university libraries.

The unrestricted funds may be used as the colleges and universities deem necessary. The library grant program is designed to supplement the normal book acquisition budgets of the participating institutions.

In addition to its unrestricted and college library grant programs, the Sears Foundation will invest slightly more than $500,000 during the current year in various student financial aid and other education programs. According to a Sears spokesman this will bring the higher education expenditures of The The Sears-Roebuck Foundation to more than $2,000,000 in 1971.

Maryville College students might be interested in knowing that our arch-rival, Carson-Newman, was founded as Mossy Creek Baptist Academy.

Orchestra Concert Is Reviewed

By Debbie McClain

The Maryville College-Community Orchestra presented its first concert of the new season last Friday evening, November 5th. The program, being one that represented various eras of music, was light and entertaining. The compositions ranged from the early musical expression of Bach in the 1700's, to the modern, contemporary style of Diemer, in the 1960's.

The "Symphonie Antique" seemed to be the favorite of the audience as they received it most enthusiastically. Its mood that was lively, then changing to flowing, and finally, to spirit, climaxed the concert. If this is any indication of the Orchestra's potential, then, it is assured that the next concert will be even better.

Echo Examines Committee On Social Recreation

By Sarah Winbigler

One of the most frequent complaints heard on the Maryville campus is "There's nothing to do around here!" This is a situation that need not exist; like many other things at Maryville, the social situation can be as good as the students want it to be. We, as students, must stop expecting the college to maintain the "let us entertain you" attitude of a high school assembly program. The fact that so few people are working to improve the social situation on this campus is an indication of one of three things: (1) Either the situation is not as intolerable as is rumored, or (2) the complainers are not as concerned as they claim to be, or (3) the complainers would rather complain than work to change things.

Another possibility is that people honestly do not know how to go about changing the present social situation. If this is the case, then this article may be of some service. There is an A.C.C. committee, the Social-Recreational Committee, whose job is to handle the social events on campus. It has the power and the funds needed to create an active social life at Maryville; what it needs desperately is interested students to back it up.

The committee is headed up by Chris and Dave Gritzmacher and Barbara and Bruce Semple. The student chairman is Lynne Gregory. The committee is completely unstructured in its membership. Anyone and everyone who wishes to work on it may; the only requirement is a desire to work.

The committee's major project at the present time is opening a coffee house in the Hole in the Wall. The opening is being planned for November 19. It is hoped that it can eventually be opened on a nightly basis to provide an atmospheric place where people can gather to talk, exchange ideas, listen to music, and just be together. It will also be a place where students can display their talents. Entertainment will be provided by any student who wants to perform, and students who wish to exhibit their art work may do so here.

The committee is also in charge of engaging movies to be shown during the year. Several horror shows have already been planned, and this Saturday night A Walk in the Spring Rain will be shown. It is hoped that as many students as possible will attend these movies, since the amount of money taken in on the first few movies will determine the number and quality of movies the committee will be able to afford.

The committee would like to provide other activities too, such as dances and hayrides. In fact, it would like to plan some activity for each weekend of the school year, but this will be impossible to carry out unless students show their interest by attending and thus contributing a little money to the fund.

There are two ways in which a student who would like to have more activities on campus can help. He can help by attending the activities that are provided, and they can help by bringing his ideas and his time and his energies to meetings of the committee. The committee meets every Friday afternoon at 3:00 in the Gritzmacher's apartment in Carnegie Hall.

Senior History Interim Is New

The 1971 senior history interim anticipates an in depth study of historiography. The twelve history majors, under Dr. Lewis' supervision, will conduct seminars, readings, and research while participating in off-campus investigations of practical methods.

A short trip is planned to Knoxville and the McClung Room at the University of Tennessee Library. A longer journey will be taken to Washington, D. C. for five days. There, the students will visit the Smithsonian and other archives buildings while listening to explanations on methods and materials used.

Requirements for the course remain tentative, subject to both faculty and student consultation.

Is Walden Interim Too Thoreau?

When Interim Term begins this year, it will find several students heading for Tremont for a week of thinking, reading, sharing, and enjoying nature. These students are going "back to nature" with Dr. Fowler in an Interim project called "Walden, 1971 — A Time to Think."

The goal of the Interim is to enable the students to recognize the benefits to be gained from a time of withdrawing from society and evaluating their own attitudes and thoughts.

After returning to campus, the students will continue reading the works of Thoreau. They will share their reactions at seminars, and each student will present a project inspired by experiences at Tremont or by reading Thoreau's works. In addition, each student will have a choice of keeping a journal similar to that of Thoreau's, in which thoughts and reactions will be recorded, or writing a paper on some aspect of Thoreau's life and-or work.

This Interim promises to be interesting and stimulating, providing weary students with a pleasant change of pace and a chance to think.

Eagles Swoop Scots

Carson-Newman rallied twice to defeat the Scots 17-6. The Eagles, now 8-1, had all they could handle with the Scots before finally subduing them.

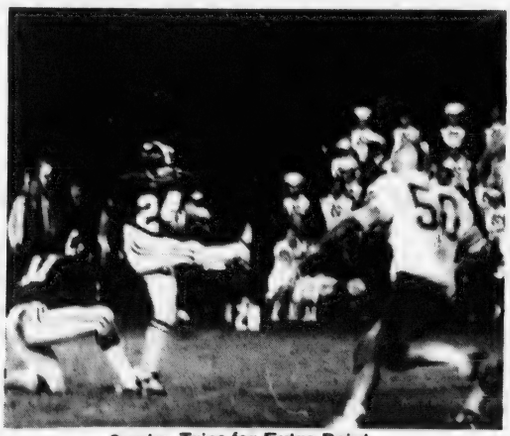
The Scots scored first, following a fumble recovery by Larry Stephens. They moved the ball to the eight before place-kicker Steve Gordon connected on a 25-yard field goal to give the Scots a 3-0 lead.

With just one second showing on the clock Eagle kicker Jim Deaton knotted the score with a 29-yard field goal.

In the third quarter the Scots took the ball and marched to the Eagles' five. The Scots, however, were not able to push the ball in the end zone. So Steve Gordon gave the Scots a slim 6-3 margin with his second field goal of the night, this one being 22 yards.

Following the kickoff, the Eagles marched to the Scots' 45, where Clarence Sharp broke loose and sprinted 45 yards for the score, and Carson-Newman led 10-6 after Deaton's extra point.

In the final quarter, Buzz Stokes picked off a pass and rambled 50 yards for the Eagles to the Scots' 40. Following a two-yard gain on a running play, quarterback Hartsell hit end Tim George with a 38-yard strike to push the lead to 16-6. Deaton added the point and the score ended up 17-6, Eagles.



Quarterback Joe Costner hit 17-32 passes against the Eagles for 223 yards. Randy Minor caught six passes for 95 yards and now has 44 receptions in seven games.

Robert Calloway picked up 66 yards on 19 carries to lead the Scots on the ground.

This Saturday, the Scots travel to Memphis to play Southwestern College.

MC, Carson-Newman Are Old Rivals

By Wiley Rutledge

As the leaves on the trees begin to turn red, and the weather begins to chill, it's clear that we are heading into that part of the fall in which the college football rivalry appears once again.

In keeping with this tradition, the Maryville College Scots and the Carson-Newman Eagles did battle Saturday night. Unless you were in Outer Mongolia somewhere, you know how the game came out, so I won't dwell on that. But it might be interesting to turn back the pages of time to see if anything interesting has happened in this feud.

And indeed it has. Take, for instance, 1915, when our gallant boys scored 99 points against the Eagles. I don't know how much Carson-Newman scored but I think it's safe to say we won the game.

Then there was 1926. That year we only kicked a 50-yard field goal (drop-kicked) to win 10-6. Not bad, huh?

All that is very interesting, but it has nothing on 1958. That was the year we lost 75-0. That was also the year one of our players by the name of Rufus Bowers happened to hand off to a Carson-Newman player by mistake, and guess what happened? Carson-Newman got a touchdown.

So, you can see a lot has happened. Too bad all we had this year was rain.

Basketball Begins With A Bounce

While the footballers are still playing, the basketball players have been practicing for three weeks.

The Scots will play a twenty-four game schedule this season opening with Milligan College of Johnson City on December 2 in Johnson City.

While hurt by graduations and a car accident, the Scots are anticipating a winning season like last year's 14-6. The Scots lost Warren Morgan and Mike Barrows through graduation and Co-Captain John Weston via a car accident.

Thus the Scots will have to find people to replace the 63 points lost from last year's team.

Co-Captain Dan McKinstry, with a 20.1 average, leads the returners. Also returning from last year's squad are Bill Postler who will start at forward and Bary Childress who will play wing or the point position. Mike Butler will join the squad following the end of football season. Dale Mores, a sophomore post man, also returned from last year.

Heading the new men is Larry Brown, a 6'7" transfer from the Citadel in South Carolina. Larry will man the post position for the Scots. Other new players who will see plenty of action include Scott Ross, a freshman forward, Lou Hart, a freshman forward, and Randy Schaurer, freshman point man. (All three of these boys are from Ohio). Phil Graham, a transfer from Lee-McRae Junior College, Rod Jackson, a freshman, freshman Don Young, and Dusty Miller, a senior from Baltimore, round out the squad.

Independents Are King Of Flagball

The Independents remained unbeaten in flagball as they salvaged a 19-19 tie with Sig. Down 19-7 with four minutes remaining, Bill Cochran threw a strike to Brad Towne to close the margin to 19-13. Then with less than a minute to play, Bill Cochran hit Malcolm Westbrook to tie the score. The extra point attempt failed and the score ended 19-19.

Sig also beat the Juniors 12-6 last week. Kent Smith threw a touchdown pass to Jonny Wright and ran for a score himself.

The Juniors then bounced back as thy beat the Conspiracy twice. The first score was 26-1, and then in the rematch on Friday, Kappa Phi again edged the Conspiracy 14-0.

Highlanders Get Drum Major

David Barker was formally initiated as the new drum major of the Highlander Band on Friday, September 22, by a dunking into the campus fish pond.

Chosen by a vote of the band staff, Barker was selected over two other candidates following extensive try-outs. A freshman music major from Irving, Texas, David's duties involve conducting the band during field and stand performances and assisting the director, Mr. Stallings, during rehearsals.

David will be performing, along with the rest of the band and drill team, for the remaining home games of the football season.

Volleyball Games Are All-Star

By Betsey Joyner

With the volleyball games in full swing the teams are starting to do some serious playing in hopes of participating in the annual volleyball All-Star game. An All-Star team from the three independent teams will play a match against an All-Star team from Chi Beta. The winner of that match will play an All-Star team from Theta. So far Chi Beta has won the most number of games.

Last year Theta won the All-Star game. There should be some vigorous competition this year.

The All-Star game will be held Wednesday, November 17, in the gym.

Philip Steele Returns to MC as Artist

BY CHARLES CRAVEN

Philip Steele will be at Maryville College for a second year as an Affiliate Artist. He was given a reception at the Fine Arts Center lounge on Wednesday evening, November 17.

The first half of the reception was an informal get-together, and the second half consited of a short recital given by Mr. Steele. The recital included an aria from "The Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart, a serenade from "Faust" by Gounod, "The Roving Gambler" by Niles, and "Old Man River."

Mr. Steele's appointment is being made possible this year by grants from the Sears-Roebuck Foundation in co-operation with The National Endowment for the Arts. In addition to being greeted by Maryville College students and faculty members, Mr. Steele was also welcomed by Mr. James McCullough, Director of Public Relations for the Sears-Roebuck store in Knoxville, and by Mr. Jack McCusker, amanger of the Knoxville store.

This is the fifth year Maryville College has participated in the Affiliate Artists Program, a program which is designed to bring performing artists and other people together in an informal atmosphere in which a recital or performance becomes an experience of sharing rather than a passive acceptance of something presented.

Those who were on campus last year will remeber Mr. Steele's performance in "The Messiah," and in two other programs presented for the college and the community. This year Mr. Steele is planning three visits to Maryville College: from January 22 to February 6, from February 19 to March 5, and from May 6 to May 21. The third visit will include a CIV program on May 10 and a part in the Yardumian Oratorio to be performed May 18 and 19.

Mr. Steele's background is a varied one. A graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, he is a performer of conert music, oratorio, and opera. His work in opera includes roles in the Brooklyn College Opera Theater, The Manhattan School Opera Theater, and the New York Community Opera.

Dr. Richardson Joins Administration

Dr. William S. Richardson, assistant professor of chemistry at Maryville College, has accepted the position of Director of Development and Alumni Relations at the college, according to an announcement by President Joseph J. Copeland.

In the new position, formerly held by William Fleming, Dr. Richardson will maintain his close association with the faculty and the academic community with continued assistant professorial status. As Director of Development Richardson will direct the staff and participate in all programs designed to interpret Maryville to its different publics and to seek the funds necessary to continue its academic purpose. He will assume his new administrative duties at the close of the present term.

Anative of Alabama, Dr. Richardson received his undergraduate degree in chemistry and mathematics at Huntingdon College in Montgomery, where he was active in student government and other student activities. He did his graduate work in organic chemistry with a minor in physical and inorganic chemistry at the University of Alabama, where he received his Ph.D in 1970. From 1965 to 1968 he was a NDEA graduate fellow and served as advisor to first year graduate students. He was also an elected student representative to the graduate curriculum committee.

Advent Vespers Presented Sunday

The Maryville College Concert Choir will present the annual Advent Vespers service this Sunday, December 12, at 7:00 p.m., in the Chapel.

For the past two years, Advent Vespers has been done in an Old English setting. The service this year was organized as an interim project under Dr. Harter's direction, and it will be done in an early American style. Some of the selections were actually written and sung during the early years of America. Other selections, though not authentically early American, reflect the Early American style of preparing the home for Christmas. Part of the music will be brought alive by pantomime, which will accompany the singing.

The carol singing involving the congregation, which has traditionally been a part of the service, will be included again this year.

The choir will be accompanied by Mr. Robert Bonham at the harpsichord. In addition, one of the special selections to be done by the choir will feature Miss Lydia Schoen as oboist. Chaplain Richard Harrison will narrate the program.

Those attending the production will find it appealing to all five of the senses. Not only will they hear music of the season, but they will see the participants in the service dressed in either pioneer outfits or other styles typical of the early American era. Also, refreshments, based on early American recipes, will be served.

Ceramics Course Starts at MC

Beginning winter term (1971-72) a non-credit ceramic course, Ceramics 301(b) will be offered at F hour for those students who wish to work in the ceramic studio. Because of the increased interest in ceramics, both 301 Ceramic courses, 301(a) for credit and 301(b) non-credit, will be offered spring term. Registration should be through the Registrar's office.

Informal class sessions in 301(b) begin at 7 p.m., January 4, for an orientation to the studio and materials along with demonstrations of techniques. The studio hours are from 6 p.m. until 11 p.m. week days. A student major will be available to assist anyone needing information or demonstrations. The cost of this course is the usual ceramic lab fee of $15 plus a small charge for glaze-firing. At the end of the term interested students will have an informal exhibition and evaluation of their work.

Dr. Young Speaks at Symposium

Dr. David Young, chairman of the department of chemistry at Maryville College, will be one of the featured speakers at the Theonetics '71 Symposium in Los Angeles December 10.

Dr. Young's talk will be one of four major events of the two-day event. The title of his address will be: "Exploring the Corridors of Consciousness or Screwing Your Head on with Electricity."

Dr. Harter Attends NASM Meeting

Maryville College was represented at the annual meeting of the National Association of Schools of Music by Dr. Harry H. Harter, chairman of the department of fine arts.

More than 400 member schools were represented at the Boston meeting. The NASM is the responsible agency for the accreditation of all music degree curricula. Maryville College has been a member since 1942.

King Arthur Interim Planned

Plans are already under way for repeating the "Search for King Arthur" interim in 1973, according to Mrs. Herma Cate and Dr. Elizabeth Fowler, who took 20 students to England last year. A proposal is being submitted this week to the Interim Committee, and students are being contacted. Those who anticipate one off-campus interim during their college years may want to consider this one and begin planning, working, reading, and saving now. The second "Search for King Arthur" should prove even more rewarding than the first since the directors can profit from the experience and knowledge gained, the contacts made, and the ideas suggested by last year's students.

Let's look ahead, save our money, and follow the steps of Britain's legendary-historical king throughout England — and possibly across the Channel into northern France.

In 1854, MC tuition was $25 a year, board was $32, and rooms were free.

ECHO Ends

This is the last issue of the Highland Echo for 1971. 1972 begins with an issue on January 14.

The Spirit of Christmas

Perhaps the poignant aspect of Christmas today is a tendency to switch from real values to artificial ones. Plastic Christmas trees are symbolic of such a switch.

This change reflects a loss of meaning of Christmas. Originally a religious festival, Christmas today has become not only an economic ritual, but a virtual economic necessity. The December 6, 1971, issue of Time illustrates this point when it reports: "The pace of production and employment for months to come could well be determined by how many shoppers pick up that extra gift or two."

Continuing, Time speculates on the possibility that this year's Christmas could become a boom year. Already sales on durable goods such as clothing are up 31 per cent over last November. In addition, there is a 16 per cent increase in automobile buying. A survey by Albert Sindlinger produced a forecast index of buying that jumped from 117.4 in July to 128.5 in mid-November. Apparently, the spirit of Christmas is inherent in department stores.

Besides a fiscal orgy, Chrismas, 1971, is noted for its crass commercial techniques. Recently, the Federal Trade Commission warned consumers that some manufacturers are putting fictitiously high prices on Christmas cards so that retailers can replace these prices with lower ones to create an illusion of bargain. Such is Christmas, 1971.

Christmas today is categorized chiefly by the amount of spending involved. Perhaps it's time to question these ecomomic values. Perhaps it's time to put Christ back in Christmas.

Christmas Message, 1971

At the end of November, the political trials of the Kent State 25 began in Portage County, Ohio. The group charged with conspiracy to riot includes even a professor of the University. What the local authorities have done is to turn the blame around and charge the victims of the crime. It's the usual American way of doing things — arrogant and absurd. Much like when President Polk provoked the Mexican War in 1848, the blame is somehow transferred from the guilty to the victim. Back then, the U.S. wanted some disputed territory in what is now Texas, but Mexico had the rightful claim. Finally Polk sent the calvary in, killing some Mexican soldiers. When the news spread of the "incident," Polk said, in effect, that's it, that's the last straw (switching the blame to the Mexican government), and the war for territory was on.

The same process took place when Russia invaded Czechoslovakia. They said it was no invasion at all and blamed the Czechs for the "necessity" of the situation. This sort of logic is characteristic of all authoritarian structures. "The logic of the illogical" that Marcuse speaks of and Orwell's Newspeak are the same as the indictments against the Kent State 25. Somebody is dead, others are wounded: but the blame doesn't even rest partially with the people who brought along the rifles. No, we indict the targets on the hill that afternoon.

The Justice Department under John Mitchell's direction ordered a full investigation by the FBI of the Kent State shootings. A federal grand jury returned no indictment and was dismissed, but the evidence included in the FBI report places much blame with the Ohio National Guard. In fact, the FBI even felt that there might be evidence to suspect that some of the Guardsmen came together after the shootings in an attempt to hide the truth. Four people are dead, and no one calls it murder; the guardsmen lie under oath, and no one calls it perjury.

The state of Ohio, with a new governor since the time of the shootings, moves instead to switch the blame to the students and everyone believes them. Many people had hoped that present Governor John Gilligan (Democrat) would move to do justice in Kent, especially since his successor James Rhodes was a Republican. It had been Rhodes who had so clumsily handled the situation, sending in the Guard, refusing to go to Kent, etc., and there was much political hay to be made by Gilligan. But why should a change of administration change the logic of administration? Gilligan has yet to raise a voice against the absurd indictments.

If there are two scars that the aware youth carry collectively, they are Chicago and Kent-Jackson State. I say scars because scars are not things that go away; they last a long time. I. F. Stone said at the time of the Chicago Eight trials that the way a system of government gains respect from its malcontents is to show them that it works. Instead, in both cases, the victims are on trial and the criminals are on the stand in behalf of the prosecution. Both times, young people attempted to test a democratic system by showing their feeling and asking for response; both times the system responded with only force, in the end so twisting the logic of the situation that the tables are reversed and the rapee is charged with rape. Remember watching the people clubbed in the streets of Chicago right there on your TV set? The Great Chicago Police Riot in living color, with newsmen bashed up and students beaten just because they exercised their right to assemble. And the long incredible Cambodia weekend of invasion abroad and massacre at home. The Mississippi State police lied to the grand jury — a fact; they are free today — a fact, too. And so are some guilty Ohio National Guardsmen. Unknowingly, the system is clumsily producing its own enemies by not showing anyone that it's workable. As Jerry Rubin said to Judge Hoffman after the Chicago Eight trial, "You have radicalized more young people than we did."

These scars get deeper and more numerous. The absurd logic of authority goes on in what Norman Mailer calls "intellectual pollution." Richard Nixon invades Cambodia states, with a completely straight face, "This is not an invasion. I want to make that perfectly clear." And John Gilligan, the liberal who nominated Eugene McCarthy at that ill-fated Chicago Convention, lets the Kent State 25 stand trial. We all know what's going to happen to a good number of those people under indictment. And let's not kid ourselves; we know too that there is little chance anything will ever be done about the murderers. We have had that one thing made perfectly clear by the whole situation.

The sickest joke of all is the one of people being upset with young people for being politically apathetic. They say come join us in a system that operates in such ways as to shoot folks for walking across a parking lot to lunch like Sandy Scheuer. Liberals like Gilligan want your vote out there man. Muskie, Humphrey, et. al., are all the same. Nixon's signing of the 18 year old voting rights bill is somewhat like a free pass to a leper colony or a ride on the ship of fools. Sure if somebody really great comes along, I'd vote for him, but he's dead in Los Angeles. Or I might vote against Nixon, but the point is that the system has done it again. Twenty-five people are on trial in Kent State, Ohio, for being in the way of a National Guard volley, and you and I, as the young, are just as guilty as they are. We are guilty because we are young, because we think or live differently, because we look different. The stink in the local newspapers about an article from the Echo is proof of our guilt. Join the conspiracy; we are all conspirators.

And this Christmas, remember that Bill Schroeder, Sandy Scheur, Allison Krause, and Jeff Miller died for our sins as a nation.

Focus

I salute you! There is nothing I can give you which you have not; but there is much, that, while I cannot give, you can take. No heaven can come to us unless our hearts find rest in it today. TAKE HEAVEN. No peace lies in the future which is not hidden in this present instant. TAKE PEACE. The gloom of the world is but a shadow; behind yet within our reach, is joy. TAKE JOY.

And so, at this Christmas time, I greet you, with a prayer that for you now and forever, the day breaks and the shadows flee away.

Christmas Parade Held

The christmas parade was held November 29, and was probably the biggest parade of the year. Virtually all of the area high schools and junior high schools were represented, along with several elementary schools and pre-school organizations. Also represented were the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and the Air Force.

The parade also included several floats symbolizing many aspects of the Christmas season. The emphasis here was on the spiritual parts of Christmas, but the largest of the floats belonged to Santa Claus, whose name has become synonymous with Christmas.

The best show, as always, was put on by the bands. They showed excellent form both marching and playing. The small children tried to keep up, but they just couldn't do it.

All in all, the parade was a good way to spend part of the afternoon. The only complaint might have been with the weather, which was rather cold.

Bloy Organ Recital Reviewed

BY CARLA HULCE

On Tuesday, December 7, at 8:15 p.m., Dr. James Bloy presented a faculty organ recital entitled "A Program of Popular Organ Classics," which proved to be a very appropriate title.

The audience was both enthusiastic and appreciative, often a rare combination at Maryville College, and obviously enjoyed Dr. Bloy's excellent performance of every peice. The three peices which seemed to be most popular, were Henry Purcell's "Trumpet Voluntary in D Major," which is often played at college ceremonies; Bach's "Toccata and Fugue in D Minor which some may have recognized as the theme of the film classic, "The Phantom of the Opera;" and, in the second half of the program, "Noel VI" by Louis Daquin, which was a joyful but quiet piece and a surprising shift from the earlier pieces.

Any performance by Dr. Bloy, no matter the length, is always a delight and this recital was no exception. Anyone who had the foresight to attend will surely look forward eagerly to any further performance.

Environmental Workshop Held At Tremont

The National Education Association held an environmental workshop at Maryville College's Environmental Education Center at Tremont in the Great Smoky Mountain National Park November 21-24.

Ten teachers and administrators from Maryville City Schools and Sevier County Schools formed the core of the workshop.

Independent Majors Exist

The Instructional Program Committee of the All-College Council has set up a new format for Comprehensive Examinations to be taken in the spring by students who have an Individualized Major. Instead of taking a departmental examination one day and the Undergraduate Record Examination another day, these students will have two days of examinations prepared by a committee composed of the major advisor and selected representatives of the departments in which major courses have been taken.

The 1972 graduating class at Maryville College will have the first students to graduate under the new academic plan; that is, the students have designed their own course of study in the light of their vocational needs or professional requirements and the guidelines set up by the Individualized Major Committee.

Information is available in the Registrar's Office for any student who may feel that a straight departmental major does not fit his needs.

Trombones Make a Choir

By WILEY RUTLEDGE

The UT trombone choir played for Vespers last Sunday night, and anyone who was not there missed a real event.

The group is composed of about twelve trombonists led by Don Huff, a trombone instructor at UT. Playing a three part program that encompassed several facets of music, they were assisted by a drummer and a bass guitarist.

The first part of the program featured classical performances, and showed the group's technical abilities as musicians. They played the pieces very well and made no noticeable errors.

The second third of the performance featured a combination of jazz and popular music, and here the choir drew on the drums and guitar, using them in virtually every tune. This part of the performance featured solos by various members of the group, and in several cases ability to improvise was demonstrated.

The third and concluding part of the program was made up by four Christmas carols, done in a simple and yet very distinctive style.

Their musical ability was not all that the UT trombone choir brought to their performance, however. They brought a spirit and an air of informality which was very refreshing. A short talk was given by their leader, Don Huff, between each tune, and many times the group decided what they would play just before they played it.

Because there is very little published music available for trombone choir, they transcribe and arrange a great deal of their own music. Many of the arrangements played were by members of the group.

D. O. Prepares for 1972

The girls of Delta Omicron have been working hard all year on their various projects, and things are working out very well.

Delta Omicron is the international women's music fraternity on campus, devoted to the promotion of American music. This is done by both participation in musical events on campus and by fund raising activities.

The group sponsors receptions after most on-campus concerts and recitals for both the performers and the audience. They also put out publicity for these events, and assist with the mechanics of backstage work, such as ushering.

On the fund raising side, they hold a bake sale before and after each student recital in the Fine Arts Center Lobby. These feature home baked goods made by the members themselves.

The organization recently rushed a new class. About thirty were rushed, and the response is reported favorable. They also recently entertained their Province President, Mrs. James Baird; their Chapter Advisor, Mrs. Lee Kull; and their faculty advisor, Mrs. Sallie Schoen.

The girls appear at various high schools in the area, giving concerts and demonstrating several aspects of the art.

In the future, they are planning to hold a Christmas fashion show during Interim.

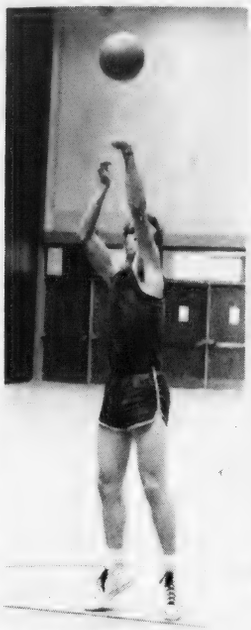
SPORTS

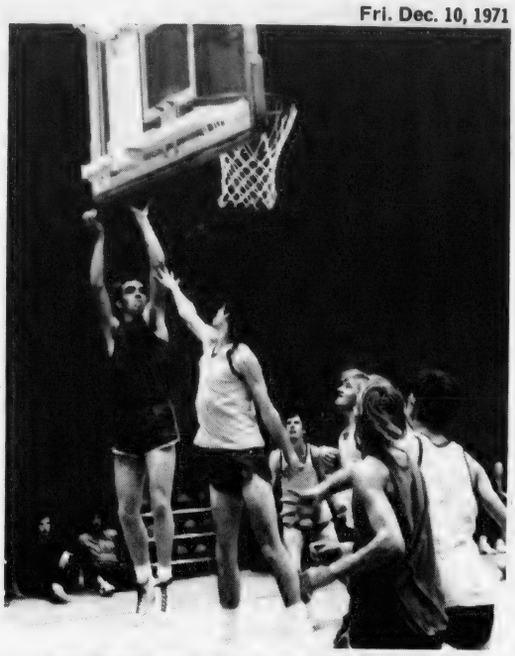
MC Wins First Wrestling Match

After a disappointing debut in the Southern Open, the Scots' wrestling team bounced back, winning three consecutive victories.



In their opening home match on December 1, the Maryville matmen handed UT a decisive 29-8 loss. Then, Saturday, the Scots continued their streak, defeating Sewanee 32-14 and UT-Martin 21-8 in a triangular meet at Sewanee.

Coached by Don Elia, the wrestling team appears headed for many more victories, both this season and in several future years; the ten-member team consists of five freshmen and five sophomores.



Freshman Paul Naylor will wrestle in the 118 pound class for the Scots, while defending SEIWA champion, John Poore, returns to the 126 pound competition. Another freshman, Art Banker, fills the 134 slot.

Joining the team in the 142 division is Doug Cunningham, and Ed Johnson returns as the Scots' 150 pounder. Freshman Gary Burd enters the line-up in the 158 division, while returner Brad Kehler should add strength in the 167 pound class.

Mat Pacifico joins the squad as a 177 pounder, and Roger Reiter returns in the 190 pound slot. Jim Batchler, a mere 195 pounder, will wrestle heavyweight for the Scots.

Scots Down Bryan

The basketball team, with an 86-85 victory over Bryan College here Saturday night, evened their record at 1-1.

The Scots opened their season in Johnson City against Milligan last Thursday. Milligan entered the game with five victories and one loss and a front line whose average height was 6'7".

The Scots stayed close through the first half and trailed only 51-44 at the half.

However, in the second half, Milligan's superior height coupled with cold shooting by the Scots proved too much to overcome. The Scots were finally subdued 111-94.

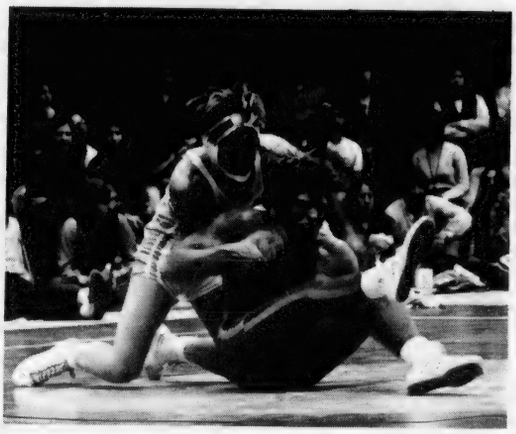
For Milligan, smooth Mark Berg tallied 35 and 6'8" Eddie Carver dumped in 25.

The Scots were paced by Larry Brown who had 29 points and 26 rebounds. Dan McKinstry had 22, Bill Postler 11, Mike Butler 12, Phil Grahem 3, Dale Morse 1, Gary Childress 4, Randy Schaverer 4, and Lou Hart 8.

Saturday the Scots held on to a slim lead through the last three minutes to gain an 86-85 win.

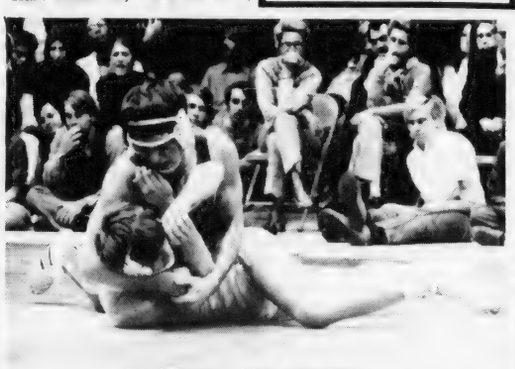
The Scots could not seem to get untracked in the first half, and with three minutes left found themselves ten down. A late surge led by Larry Brown and Bill Postler closed the margin to 44-42 at the half.

The Scots in the second half managed a small lead but never a large enough lead to break the game open. Three lay-ups by Brown on assists from Postler kept the Scots in front.



Once again Larry Brown led the Scots. Larry poured in 30 points and 18 rebounds. Dan McKinstry and Bill Postler chipped in with 15 apiece. Lou Hart added 10, Mike Butler 9, Randy Schaverer 4, and Gary Childress 3. Scott Ross played but did not score.

Tuesday, the Scots ventured to Bristol to play King College. Saturday, the Scots tangle with Centre College in Danville, Kentucky.



The next home game is Dec. 16 against Emory and Henry at 7:30. Over the Christmas holidays, the Scots go north and play in Alliance, Ohio. They are in a tournament hosted by Mount Union College. The remaining teams are Baldwin-Wallace and Hiram College. The Scots' first opponents are the Mount Union Purple Raiders, December 27 at 9:00.

Students are urgently invited to help in archaeological excavations in England next summer. Deadline for applications is February 1.

ACC Holds First Meeting of Year

BY PATTI SHELTON

The All-College Council met on Jan. 5 with a varied agenda. President Copeland first announced that Drs. Bloy and Swenson would be on leaves of absence for both winter and spring terms and asked the Council to consider whether replacements should be chosen. Dr. Willey's temporary absence due to an injury was also noted.

A visitor to the meeting was introduced: Dr. George Kramer, who is a member of MC's Board. Dr. Kramer is Vice-Chancellor and Dean of Admissions in the Rutgers University system and is here to consult with the ACC on admissions.

Ward Brooks next dealt with coming Town Hall Meetings. He announced that on January 26 a group from McAllister College in Minnesota will give a dramatic presentation. This presentation has also been toured in Europe. The February meeting will be an in-depth study of where the students' money goes at MC.

Chaplain Harrison reported on January Meetings, the theme of which will be "The Struggle To Be Human." Watch the Echo for details of the scheduled activities.

Dr. Copeland told the council that he has been in contact with Professor Joe Palk, director of food service management at the University of Kentucky regarding the coming examination of MC's meal system. No date has yet been set for this evaluation.

Dr. Copeland also announced that MC received a $25,000 gift from Charles Merrill, president of Merrill Foundation. Mr. Merrill's grandparents attended MC and his father is a member of the well-known brokerage firm, Merill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith. This money is primarily for the medical study program but is not restricted to this use.

The Meeting ended with a discussion of student apathy and the laissez-faire attitude prevalent on the campus. An open meeting for all those concerned was suggested but no date has been set.

Schwoebel Given Harbinson Award

Maryville College graduate Robert H. Schwoebel, professor of history at temple University, has been selected as one of 10 recipients of the 1971 E. Harris Harbison Award for Gifted Teaching presented by The Danforth Foundation.

As a winner of the award, Dr. Schwoebel received a $10,000 grant to be used at his discretion in the furtherance of his academic career and interests.

Winners of the E. Harris Harbison Awards are chosen annually by panels of educators who make their selections from nominations submitted by colleagues, students, past Award winners, and college and university presidents.

The awards are given not only to recognize outstandingly gifted teachers, but also to encourage greater public understanding of the art and importance of teaching. The program was named in honor of the late E. Harris Harbison, professor of history at Princeton University and a former Trustee of the Danforth Foundation. To date, 75 individuals have received the award.

Plans Underway For Belated "Messiah"

More than two hundred townspeople and Maryville College students, faculty and staff will participate in the 39th annual Community-Maryville College presentation of Handel's "Messiah" at 3 p.m. Sunday, January 30, in Wilson Chapel.

Dr. Harry H. Harter, chairman of the Fine Arts Department, will direct the "Messiah" for the 24th year. The orchestra will be directed by Lee Kull, assistant professor of music.

Although it is usually associated with the Christmas season, the "Messiah" was not written specifically for that season.

The work was first performed in Dublin, Ireland in 1742 and had its first performance in America in Bethlehem, Pa., in 1780. It is performed annually throughout the world and has probably received more performances than any master work in the history of music.

Webster Is Honored

President Nixon has designated George D. Webster, a 1941 graduate of Maryville College, as his representative to the Sesquicentennial Celebration of the founding of Liberia.

The Washington tax attorney was given the rank of Special Ambassador and will represent the President at Sesquicentennial ceremonies.

Webster is a prolific writer of works pertaining to the legal profession. His seventh book, "The Law of Associations," was published in 1971. It has been referred to by a colleague as "a legal manual for executives and lawyers."

MC Receives Grant

The Charles E. Merrill Trust of Ithica, New York, has made a grant of $250,000 to Maryville College. This grant is to endow the Charles Morton Merrill and Octavia Wilson Merrill Scholarships to be offered primarily to college juniors and seniors planning careers in medicine.

Charles Morton Merrill, originally from Florida, and Octavia Wilson Merrill, a native of Mississippi, were the parents of Charles E. Merrill, under whose will the Merrill Trust was established in 1956. A bequest to the College from Mr. Merrill's estate and previous grants total $125,000.

Charles E. Merrill, founder of the Wall Street firm known now as Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner, and Smith, was active in various business enterprises. His son, Charles E. Merrill Jr., is presently chairman of the trust and is Headmaster of the Commonwealth School in Boston.

Charles Morton Merrill and Octavia Wilson attended Maryville College in the 1870's. Dr. Merrill later practiced medicine in Florida and operated a drugstore.

Commenting on the gift, Dr. Copeland said, in part, "We are highly pleased to have the Merrill family honored through Maryville College. The family has made a fine contribution to the nation, and through its philanthropy has supported many worthy causes.

Clark Looks At Civilization

By Lynn Schieber

Beginning on January 24 and ending on May 1, Maryville College will present Sir Kenneth Clark's "Civilisation — A Personal View," a series of films recording the history of Western World culture, each Monday at 4:00 p.m. and 7:00 p.m. in the Theater.

Not only are these films a pleasure to view, but they are also a multi-media teaching medium for art and humanities courses. They contribute greatly to an understanding of the greatest philosophical and creative minds from the Middle Ages to the present.

The author and narrator of "Civilisation — A Personal View," Sir Kenneth Clark, because of his many positions in the art and cultural life of Great Britain, has been called its "minister of culture." He has published sixteen works about the arts and has written, directed, and appeared in many television programs about the arts.

CIV credit will be given for any four of the films attended in the Civilisation series. There will be no films shown on either March 6 or March 13.

January Meetings Present New Approach

BY ALICE HOOK

During four days, January 20-23, the Maryville campus will participate in the annual January Meetings. The theme of this year's meetings is "The Struggle to be Human," and the calendar of events shows much planning and creativity. The actual schedule should be in your box by Monday, but here is an idea of what we have in store.

On Thursday and Friday, there will be afternoon seminars covering such topics as ecology, abortion, the war, and extending into the fields of education and political science. For these meetings, CIV credit will be given.

Emphasis this year is being placed on community involvement rather than bringing speakers to the campus. Several of the most exciting ideas in the field of celebration worship are the brainstorms of Geoffrey Skrinar. Now an Episcopal priest, Geoffrey is a recent M.C. graduate who will be on campus conducting a multi-media happening.

In connection with the theme, January meetings has taken a more human view by scheduling the events late in the day. Friday will be an all-nighter starting at 7:30 in the gym. After the wrestling match, there will be organized recreation and community sing with some Appalachian music. Then we will adjourn to the chapel area for refreshments and the film "Rachel, Rachel." The event will end with bull sessions and communion service.

Saturday evening will give students a chance for something other than a sack supper! There will be the opportunity to sign up in small groups to eat dinner in the home of a faculty or staff member.

Several departments are making contributions to the meetings. The English department will produce the play "Antigone" and the art department will have an exhibit in the chapel area. The band and choir will participate in several events and a special brass ensemble will be used.

Added attractions include the play "No Exit" and the Peter Sellers movie "Only Two Can Play." There will be a rock festival with musical groups from the campus and community. Vespers on Sunday will feature Dr. Copeland and the choir. All together it adds up to a pretty full four days which can be a learning experience for all who participate.

New Course Examines Religion at Newton College

Newton, Mass. - (I.P.) - Does the current crisis in American culture represent a search for more adequate religious symbols and institutions rather than a rejection of religion?

This complex question along with other aspects of the Crisis in American Culture is being explored by a group of some 30 students and two faculty members in a new, experimental project that began this fall at Newton College of the Sacred Heart.

The cross-disciplinary study constitutes an entire semester or 16 credit hours for the selected students participating and involves group effort, library research, field investigation and collaboration with professors in research and writing.

The new pilot project was developed by Sister Margaret Gorman, chairman of the Division of Social Science and Religion, and Dr. William Murnion, chairman of the Department of Religion.

In describing the program, Sister Gorman and Dr. Murnion explained, "For five years now, both of us have been engaged in research, teaching and writing on the crisis of our times, one of us concentrating upon psychological and sociological aspects for interpreting it and the other on the historical origins and theological significance of it.

"When we examined each other's work, the complementarity of it became obvious to both of us, and we became intrigued by the possibility of combining forces for mutual enrichment."

Sister Gorman has approached her study of the current crisis in American culture from the viewpoint of developmental psychology, and has argued that the findings of psychologists indicate within man a need for the sacred so that the crisis might be interpreted, not as a rejection of religion, but rather as a search for more adequate symbols and institutions.

Yet she wonders whether her thesis is historically verifiable and also how her use of categories from developmental psychology to interpret the crisis relates to a theological interpretation of it.

That is where William Murnion's work comes in. For he has approached the study of the crisis in American culture from the viewpoint of transcendental method in order to give a theological interpretation of it.

Directions, 1972

A new year is a time when many individuals try new approaches and make firm resolutions. With 1972 recently underway, perhaps Maryville College, as a collection of individuals, could profit from this approach. What new directions does the College have for 1972 and what are some it needs to have?

In last Friday's CIV, former Congressman Brooks Hayes suggested that most of the problems of today's society can best be approached on an intellectual basis. The College's Statement of Purpose suggests such a background as a goal. If this intellectual basis is a goal, what is the best way for the College to acquire it?

The response to Hayes indicates by itself that there is a nucleus of interest in acquiring this type of background. But a nucleus is only a start. How do people become motivated to acquire this basis?

In a situation as at Maryville, where community living is stressed, does the College provide the necessary environment to pursue this goal? Where such an environment is lacking, how can one be formed?

Ultimately the success of any group situation rests with its individual members. MC is no exception. To realize its goals, the College must examine its directions. When individuals begin posing questions, then the College can more readily discern these new directions.

Rich Mountain Tower

BY TOM COE

New Products Editor

There is no correlation, unfortunately, between talent and success in the music business. Some of the biggest money making groups around these days are simply products of slick management and packaging — names like Grand Funk and Steppenwolf come to mind. Having once seen Steppenwolf live and finding them about as exciting there as stereo playing their albums, I come to the point at hand — performance.

On stage, a group has to come across with the goods, so to speak. They must create an energy, an aliveness that is combined with musicianship and freshness. The formula for Grand Funk was set by Terry Knight (remember Terry Knight and the Pack), their manager, who, when he took control of the group, said, "I want you guys to turn those amps all the way up and you, Mark Farner, start shaking your . . . (posterior)." And the 13-16 year-old-bracket loves it.

Somebody once said that G.F.R.R. was proof positive that acid really does mess your mind up because there are so many 15-year-olds that really like them.

You're not going to find such jive with the Tower. Their concert here last month was simply refreshing and happy. The band just hit the note. I say band here for a reason: there is a qualitative difference between a band and group. A band signifies a tightness, a feeling that a group lacks. It's like the difference between the precision offense of the Dolphins and the pick-up quality of the Browns. The word that recurs to me from the concert is "cook." The band was cooking. The audience was getting off on them and then, most importantly, the band was getting off on the audience. Something of a give and take was going on there. The band was truly into it and we in turn were into it with them.

With the return of Sandy the Bass Player and the arrival of Mike on the keyboards, the Tower has that full harmony that they have recently missed. Dana, Mike and Sandy in full voice are a joy to the inner ear. They bring a sound to the band that can carry your head to very nice places indeed. David was happily into it that night too, with his usual dexterity, George Harrison beard and hair, and a pair of red pants with brand new white boots. Bob, the drummer, is not that flash and trash that Ginger Baker got everyone into a few years ago but no, thank God, he's a drummer — a guy who's there hittin' the note with taste and economy. There's nothing overdone about Rich Mountain Tower. And Byrd, who's new, late of the Loved Ones and the Cowcatchers, amazed the crowd with his licks on pedal steel, dobro and bottleneck guitar. I should say something about Dana, who is probably wondering by now if I forgot him. His song-writing is without a doubt better than ever. "County Mile" was undoubtedly the highlight of the evening with his singing, piano, and Byrd's incredible bottleneck work. Happily, this song will be on the next album.

I really want to see the Tower make it, not because they are from here, or because they got that big single on the charts (the one with bullet) I can smugly say that I used to hear Dana Paul in the old Lantern, back in college, but because they are simply one of the best performing bands around these days. As the happy, smiling crowd filed out a friend said to me, "I know they don't sound like Poco, but didn't you just get that same good feeling?"

Buy the Tower album, not because it is a classic — it is, of course only a beginning, often marred by the poor production of Don Tweedy — but buy it because you owe it to yourself to hear the Tower. Anyone who was in the FAC that night knows the band can do better than the album and they will; few groups are satisfied by their first effort. Just listen to the Tower, tap your foot and start smiling. This is good music; a splendid time is guaranteed for all.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

How should the goals of our orientation process be redefined? Well, mainly by defining faculty and administration perogatives. The administration here at MC should keep the sidewalks clean and that is all. As for the faculty, I find them quite hostile at times. Such attitudes suggest that MC is headed for real trouble.

The solution? Real innovation would be best. Such innovation would lead to a more mature faculty and administration.

At present, the faculty appears to be becoming less and less enthusiastic towards students. Students do respect teachers, but they also reciprocate their attitudes. To alleviate this we need faculty vulnerability. Tenure and power make the faculty less responsive. In addition, student recognition must be beyond just grades.

In other words, Miss Ware's dehumanizing attitude coupled with that of Drs. Copeland, Swenson, Harter, Ramger and others contributes to violent hatred and indigestion. Officer Hurst, I maintain, is the single example of unavoidable, humanistic realism.

MC does not serve its community, or there would be more mountain folks here. Where did Copeland come from anyway?

Dear Editor

It's January Meetings time again. This could mean many things to different people. It can be a time of great intellectual challenge and excitement. A time of gaining much needed insight into the complexities and confrontations that we will experience in life. Or, perhaps, it can be a time for a great cop-out.

The editorial in last years Januray Meetings issue of the Echo related that many cities at all points of the compass experienced a sudden increase in the populations of students from the Maryville Campus. Three factors were offered for the mass exit: The first stipulated that Maryville students are not concerned with contemporary religious activities. The second indicated that the Philosophy department had done its job by instilling within the student the concept that the absolute is irrelevent and life is determined by man's existential existence. And the third alludes to the irrelevence of the "do good," humanistic type of religion that is supposedly championed here at Maryville College.

Then, as now, this writer refuted all three points as being unfounded in priciple and over generalized in method. In answer to the first point of non-concern of those students who deem it wise to exit campus stage left are these three factors of indication: They are intellectually lazy and do not wish to confront or challenge some of life's deepest problems; they are afraid of a personal commitment to a cause because they will have to give more than is received; or they are individuals who limit the definition of Christanity to fit their own personal needs — to be used only when convenient. Any one of the three limits individual maturity.

The reply to the second point of exitential influence gained through philosophical study is that if this were so then the student would realize that accountability in one's life is a basic demand and necessitates that each individual be committed to a life style for which is assumed full responsibility of choice and action.

Following in context is the third point of alluded "do good" religiosity. This writer ascribes to this point because it is considered that the embodiment of Christ lied in man's humanism. Christ set man free from the bonds of man made Scriptural Law and the confines of a demanding, hypocritical church to help the hungry and poor of the earth. Any commitment to his personal Saviour will demand no less. Real Christanity is the helping of others.

All of these points indicate that we as individuals must raise ourselves to a new level of consciousness by keeping an open and alert mind that will allow for a freedom of choice from a wider range of exposure and perspective. To do otherwise, to

Do It Yourself Corpse

BY WILEY RUTLEDGE

As we all know, during winter terms the nights are rather long, and sometimes they can get pretty boring. So, if you ever find yourself bored, here is something you can do. You can build a corpse. Corspe building is easy if you saw "Chamber of Horrors," shown here last Friday night.

Several thing are necessary for you to build a corpse. First of all, you must be a psychopath. This has something to do with the fact that you have to cut off your right hand if you happen to have one, and most "normal" people don't go around cutting their hands off.

Secondly, you have to have enough friends to make a corpse out of. If you don't have any friends, you use enemies, but is it very important that you have enough of them. This is because it is vital that each part of the corpse come from a different person. If even two parts come from the same person, the effect is ruined.

Third, you must have a good supply of wrapping paper. Any kind of paper will do for this, but it helps if you use butcher paper, since that keeps meat so well, and, after all, the principle is the same.

Next, you must replace your right hand (by now it should be gone) with a metal device to which you attach anything from a butter knife to an 80 millimeter cannon. This is because it is necessary for you to be creative in your killing. Don't kill two people in the same way. Be innovative.

Finally, you should send the police the part of the victim you are using for the corpse. Do not build the corpse yourself; let them do it. The part should be wrapped in the paper and accompanied by a note written in the victim's blood. This note should be in the form of a veiled clue.

If you follow the above instructions, your winter nights will be far from boring. Unless, of course, you get caught, and then all your nights will be boring (if you have any, that is).

Roth Exhibits Art Work

Carolyn Roth, member of the Fine Arts faculty at U-T Chattanooga, is the January exhibiting artist for the Maryville College Fine Arts Gallery.

The exhibit includes paintings, drawings and prints. Drawings and paintings are mixed media, incorporating photography by Mark McDade and acrylic with dye. Included in the exhibit are: "Electric Mama," an acrylic and dve painting with a light box by Mark McDade, and "Critter," an acrylic and dye banner.

Miss Roth, who teaches painting, drawing and print making holds a B.F.A. degree from Herron School of Art, Indianapolis and a M.F.A. from Floriday State University.

Her one-man art shows include: Next Door Gallery, Chattanooga, University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, and Creative Arts Guild, Dalton, Georgia.

Skinner Interview Appears

MADEMOISELLE magazine's January '72 issue carries an interview by Amy Gross with B. F. Skinner, the controversial psychologist, whose tenth book, Beyond Freedom and Dignity, was published in December of 1971. In a second January MADEMOISELLE article, "The Case of Dr. Skinner — For and Against," five social scientists give their reactions to Beyond Freedom and Dignity ... bearing out the fact that there is indeed a controversy over the ideas presented by Dr. Skinner.

According to Skinner in Ms. Gross' interview, we (people) are always being manipulated by outside forces; there is no "self" to be true to — no mind, spirit, soul, "real you" — and the myth of individual freedom is mucking up the evolutionary progress of our culture. He goes onto say we should, for the good of our culture, get over our irrational generalization that all control is bad (the rebel's work is not to suppress control but to correct it) and allow science to shape us into more productive, less destructive, well-behaved human beings.

Skiner is optimistic that a "technology of behavior" can improve us because our behavior is suggested by our unalterable genes, and selected by our environment. Change the environment and you change the behavior, he contends. "I think it's possible to design a way of life in which people will just naturally be nice to each other," states the author.

Psychoanalyst Rollo May, psychotherapist Carl Rogers and Barbara Brown, a founder of the Bio-Feedback Research Society, are opposed to Dr. Skinner's theories. "Skinner forgets we have an internal enviornment. He doesn't consider insight, the spontaneous problem-solving that happens so often in dreams. And creativity, the total rearrangement of patterns that haven't been reinforced. Minds, neurons, can put two and two together many different ways. There are internal factors operating in minds," says Ms. Brown.

The "pros" come from John Platt (Associated Director of the Mental Health Research Institute) and Herbert Terrace (Professor of Psychology at Columbia University). Terrace states, "What few people realize is that Skinner is a philosopher, particulary in the epistemological tradition. He has some fairly original statements about how we know about the world — we don't know anything that doesn't come from the world. He puts himself in the tradition of Copernicus, Darwin, Freud — he's stripping away another vestige of man. He's saying we can't fall back on man's inner life for explanations."

Readers outraged or converted by Skinner will find reinforcement for their position in MADEMOISELLE"s January issue.

Cast selected For Comedy

By Kathy Meier

The first playhouse production in 1972 will be strictly a student venture. Mark Mertz is directing A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum as his special studies project. Tryouts for the roles were held last week. David Nighbert, a former M.C. student living in Knoxville, will be the lead, Pseudolus. Hysterium will be played by Tom Williamson. Howard M. Welsh is Senex; his wife, Domina, is Kay Hurlburt, and their son, Hero, will be portrayed by Steve Ayers. Sean Sullivan appears as Miles Gloriosus and Tina Bergner as Phila. The Courtesans, under the tutelage of Syd Weedon as Lycus, are Angela Glenn, Linda Kaempfer, Christy Rogers, Merida Kerns-Preston, Rachel Donaldson, and Eleanor Murrah. The Proteans are portrayed by Tom Martin, Ralph Parkinson, and Terry Noack.

Lifeguard Trapped; Saved by Coach

Last Sunday afternoon - saw head lifeguard, Bob Eickelberg, lock himself in the MC Pool office. The door locks only from the outside.

Eickelberg was released some thirty minutes later when Coach Hasty, after numerous unsuccessful tries with a key, opened the door with a screwdriver.

escape from challenage and confrontation, is to limit oneself to a narrow and stagnant self-exposure. We must accept that there are no final answers in life until one experiences God in the finality of the Last Judgement. Until then every effort must be made to allow oneself to become sensitive to life in the "Now" which is an ever changing proposition.

This year's January Meetings period is entitled "The Struggle to Be Human." Certainly there is a no more fitting topic to be explored than this. World conflicts are being added to internal, human conflicts and are placing undue burdens upon the future world leaders — ourselves. Many young people have found what they consider to be the answer to their instability. Others are still groping. Some don't care. All three groups are invited to attend the Meetins — to give a little of yourself — and to absorb a new experience. Come with an open mind and hope to be challaneged. O.K.????

"... And His Truth Is Marching On"

By CARLA HULCE

On Sunday, January 9, the documentary "King: Montgomery to Memphis" was presented in Wilson Chapel as a combination CIV-Vespers. The film portrayed the last thirteen years of Dr. King's life from 1955-1968.

Although the film was somewhat lengthy, the events portrayed held the viewer's interest and involved him personally, as evidenced by audible reactions to many of Dr. King's speeches and statements. Comments on the film ranged from "fantastic" to "thought-provoking" to "terribly moving and the amount of discussion of the movie during the intermission and after the presentation made it obvious that many students were forced into thought. Indeed, anyone who could have watched the film without having a reaction of some sort must have been either remarkably insensitive to the actions of one man and his people, or unshakeably sure in his beliefs that the picture presented was a distortion of the truth.

While technically poor in places, the producers admit this shortcoming at the film's beginning. Curiously enough, the viewer's overall impression is not affected by this flaw. Dr. King's message still comes through with all its force, along with the unbelievable strength of his convictions.

To write objectively about a documentary of this sort is nearly impossible. No words can convey the tremendous impact of the film to someone who was not at the showing. Let it suffice to say that seeing King was a personally shaming experience that caused a great deal of soul-searching.

The movie was possibly the most well-received presentation on this campus in several years.

The entire College might well have benefited if everyone had attended the film to see what one man could do in only thirteen years: he could change the course of history.

Bibical Interim Planned

The Department of Philosophy and Religion will sponsor an overseas Interim course — The World of the Bible Today — departing the second day of the Interim term, November 28, 1972, and lasting approximately three weeks. This will be a trip to key Biblical sites in the Mediterranean world and to places which are also crucial in the current international scene. The purpose will be to study the work of Biblical archaeology as well as the international and national politics of the Middle East.

On the itinerary will be Egypt with stops at Cairo and featuring a trip down the Nile to the famed Aswan Dam and then by hydrofoil across Lake Aswan to the monuments of Abu Simbel, the island of Cyprus, and Israel with extended times at Galilee, Jerusalem, the Mediterranean Coast, the Negeb desert, the Dead Sea, a modern Kibbutz, and the Israeli cities of Tel Aviv and Haifa. At the conclusion of the tour, we will spend three or four days in Rome with visits to the main historical sites as well as to the Vatican and the Sistine Chapel.

Twenty-nine Maryville students enthusiastically participated in a similar study tour in 1968. A minimum group of 15 will be required this time. The maximum number will be 30. Watch for more information in the spring. Ask Dr. Stine for more details. Box 2841. If you are definitely interested and want your name on a preliminary registration list, leave your name with him.

Scot Dribblers Aren't Bouncing

The Scot roundballers, faced with a height disadvantage in every game, suffered another setback with the loss of 6'7" center Larry Brown due to a broken foot. As a result the Scots have not been able to overcome the height problem and have succumbed to Emory and Henry 74-73, Mt. Union 101-74, Hiram 90-79, Birmingham Southern 85-56, and King 70-59.

The Scots' defeat to Emory and Henry was a heartbreaker as Emory and Henry's Bobby Hicks scored a field goal with one second remaining to give the Wasps the win. In this game Brown suffered his injury and Gary Childress also was hurt with a badly sprained sprained knee.

Dan McKinstry had 26 to pace the Scots. Larry Brown had 12, Bill Postler 8, Lou Hart 9, Randy Schaurer 12, and Phil Graham 2.

In the Mount Union tournament the Scots faced a full and talented Purple Raider squad. Superior board strength was the key as the Scots could manage usually just one shot at the goal.

The Scots also played without Childress and Brown again. Dan McKinstry led the attack with 24, Mike Butler 19, Randy Schaurer 13, Lou Hart 7, Bill Postler 5, Scott Ross 4.

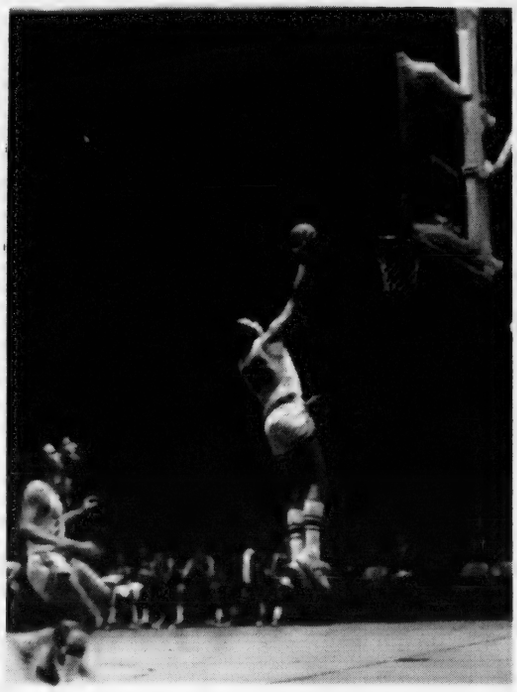
The next night in the consolation game the Scots were downed 90-79 by Hiram College. The Scots played even with Hiram for thirty minutes but cold shooting hurt the Scots in the end. The Scots' scoring was led by Dan McKinstry with 22. Lou Hart had 21, Bill Postler 11, Randy Schaurer 18, Ross 1, and Mike Butler 6.

Dan McKinstry was chosen first team all-tournament and Randy Schaurer was voted to the second team.

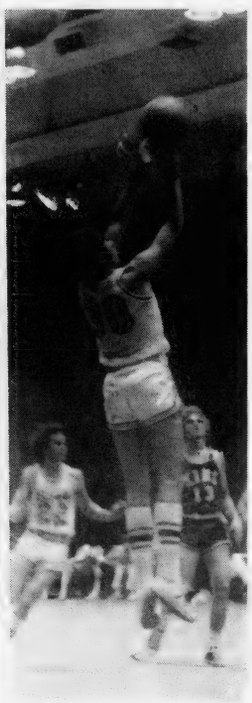
Last Friday, the Scots were at home to Birmingham Southern. The Scots were outclassed and outmanned and were beaten 85-56. "Stretch" Braxton paced the Panthers with 24 and Greg Robinson had 19.

For the Scots, Dan McKinstry had 21, Bill Postler 1, Randy Schaurer 12, Mike Butler 13, Scott Ross 7, and Dale Morse 2.

Saturday, the Scots hosted King College and battled gamely before losing 70 to 59. Height disadvantage was a factor in this game and also a tough zone defense by the King men.



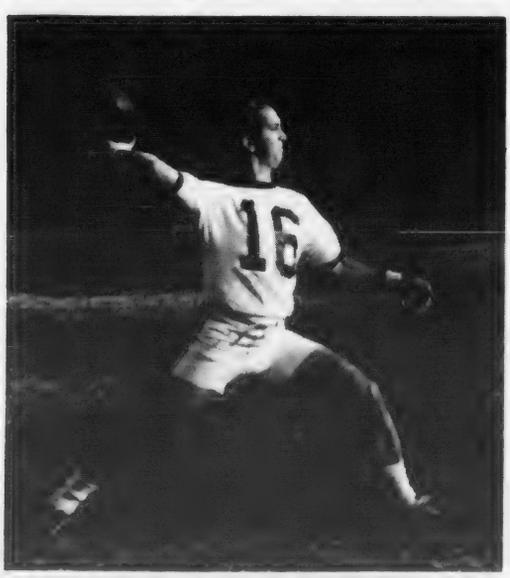
For the Scots, Dan McKinstry had 29, Randy Schaurer 11, Bill Postler 7, Mike Butler 1, Scott Ross 8, Phil Graham 2, and Dale Morse 1.



This week the Scots played Clinch Valley on Tuesday, Emory and Henry on Thursday, and go to Sewanee on Saturday. Next Tuesday, Milligan will be here to play the Scots at 7:30 p.m.

The Scots hope Larry Brown will be back in action by that time. His presence will greatly bolster the attack and give the Scots that much needed big man on the boards. Gary Childress' status is still unknown. His knee is still swollen and he will not be able to participate until the swelling disappears.

Scots go up for jump ball.



Dapper Dan McKinstry shoots one and then another.

Intramurals Wrap-Uped

By winning two playoff games, the Independents won their second flagball championship in two years. The playoffs opened with the Ind. versus Sig. The Ind. came from behind in the fourth quarter to win a 33-12 decision. Kent Smith threw two touchdown passes for Sig and Bill Cochran countered with three for the Ind. The second game featured the Juniors against the Studs. The Juniors won a sudden-death thriller on a pass from Jeff White to Steve Gilmore. In the championship game the Ind. edged the Juniors in a hard fought battle 13-0. Bill Cochran ran for one score and threw to Steve Maggio for the other. The Independents finished the season 10-0-1.

Co-ed volleyball, played during interim, proved to be a success with 17 teams participating. Team No. 5, led by Paul Grice, won the championship. Upcoming will be men's and women's basketball, a co-ed badminton tournament, and intramural wrestling.

Quarterback Bill Cochran winds up.

Unique Choros Presented At CIV

The Macalester College Drama Choros, from St. Paul, Minnesota, will appear at CIV on Wednesday, January 26, at 9:20 a.m. The 46-member group, first formed in 1931, makes an annual tour during the Macalester interim term, which comes in January.

The Choros (spelled in the Greek form to distinguish it from a singing choir) reflects the ancient heritage of the chorus and drama. The idea is taken from the speaking choruses seen in ancient Greek plays by such authors as Aeschylus and Euripides. This is a unique though certainly not a new form of art, as the chorus is the ancient heritage of drama as we know it today.

Though the form of the chorus is not new, the repertoire contains materials from 25 centuries of literature. It includes works by such authors as James Thurber, Carl Sandburg, T. S. Eliot, on such subjects as war, women's lib, and television commercials. According to the brochure, the program is "wide ranging in social comment, satire, and humor."

The group has traveled extensively. In addition to travels to both the East and West Coasts, it has performed in Carnegie Hall, New York, and has just returned from a trip to England, where it made a presentation for the London Times.

Macalester College, with an enrollment of about 2,093, is, like Maryville College, related to the Presbyterian Church. As a salute to the College's Scottish tradition, the Macalester clan tartan is used in the men's kilts and trousers and in the women's honor sashes. Listeners can expect to hear bagpipes played by uniformed members of the College Pipe Band.

Messiah Soloists Announced

Sixteen soloists have been assigned parts in the Maryville College-Community's 39th annual presentation of Handel's "Messiah." The presentation is scheduled for Sunday, January 30, 3 p.m. in Wilson Chapel on the Maryville Campus.

Philip Steele, Affiliate Artist at Maryville College, is participating for the second year as guest soloist. He will sing the airs "Thou art gone up on high" and "The Trumpet Shall Sound" and the recitative "Behold, I Tell You a Mystery."

Dr. Dan Kinsinger, assistant professor of music, will sing the recitative "Then Shall the Eyes of the Blind" and the air "He Shall Feed His Flock." Dr. Kinsinger has taken an active part in the chorus and has been a soloist on numerous occasions for the past eighteen years.

Mrs. Sallie Warth Schoen will be harpsichordist for the fourteenth consecutive year. Robert Bonham is pianist for the sixth year and accompanist for chorus.

Linda Marek, a member of the music faculty at Knoxville College, will be the organist. Miss Marek is substituting as instructor of organ at Maryville while Dr. James A. Bloy is on sabbatical leave.

Dale White, trumpeter, will play the air "The Trumpet Shall Sound."

Soprano soloists are: Mrs. James Bell, Miss Jeanne Dawe, Msiss Lana Henderson, Mrs. W. Harold Laster Miss Jane Pierce, Miss Dana Rule, and Miss Jean Tiffany.

Alto soloists are: Miss Kay Hurlbut, Miss Merida Kearns-Preston and Mrs. Delores Ziegler.

Tenor soloists are: Dr. Kinsinger and Charles Tittsworth Bass soloists are: Mr. Steele, Richard Smith and Mark Mehaffy.

Kramer Appointed To MC Board

R. Arnold Kramer, Knoxville attorney, has accepted chairmanship of the Panel on Finance and Development for Maryville College. The announcement was made today by college president Jospeh J. Copeland and chairman of the board Dr. James Proffitt.

The panel on Finance and Development is one of three major directorates of the college. It was formerly chaired by Roy W. Fisher, former general manager of Alcoa.

The panel and its subcommittees function in relation to the management of the college's financial operations and the developing of new resources for long range plans.

A 1940 graduate of Maryville College, Kramer holds the doctor of jurisprudence degree from the University of Michigan Law School. He is a senior partner of the law firm of Kramer, Dye, Greenwood, Johnson, Rayson and McVeigh. He is past president of the Knoxville Bar Association and executive secretary of the Tennessee Code Commission.

Kramer is director of Vulcan Materials and chairman of the finance committee of the Church Street Methodist Church.

Mrs. Kramer, the former Lee Hellums, is also a 1940 graduate of Maryville College. The Kramers have two sons and a daughter. Reed works with an ecumenical church program in New York City, Lynn (Mrs. Charles D'Huyvetter) teaches in Atlanta and Randy is a freshman at the University of North Carolina.

Young And Ogren Write A Book

1971 was a busy and productive year for the faculty of the chemistry department. Dr. David P. Young and Dr. Paul Ogren had a combined total of nine articles published with a book by Dr. Young scheduled for publication in April.

While Dr. Ogren's articles are of a technical nature, aimed at other scientists, Dr. Young writes for the layman. Much of his writing concerns the possible impact of new scientific advances on society. He points out that the popular issue is one of species survival. However, man's experimentation with himself is bringing him face to face with the question of species identity.

In his book "A New World in the Morning," published by Westminster Press, Dr. Young points out that one of the basic premises of modern science has been that if something is possible — such as heart transplants or going to the moon — then it should be done. His position is not that we should stop science but that we should develop ways of keeping track of what is happening and what might happen as a result of the application of scientific knowledge.

One of Dr. Young's articles, "Science is Changing the Rules of the Game," published in October's New World Outlook, resulted in an invitation for him to speak to the Theonetics Symposium in Los Angeles last December. He has also spoken to a number of local groups.

Dr. Ogren is presently on leave of absence from Maryville College. He was one of 12 persons in the United States awarded a one-year post-doctoral appointment at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colorado.

Music Meeting Held In Atlanta

Dr. Harry H. Harter, chairman of the Department of Fine Arts at Maryville College, recently attended a meeting for the formal organization of Music Executives in Colleges and Universities at George Peabody College in Nashville.

The new association is composed of heads of schools or departments of music at colleges and universities. Its primary purpose is the intercommunication and sharing of ideas.

Dr. Louis Ball, chairman of the Music Department at Carson-Newman College, was elected as the first president.

Twenty-four music executives were present at the organizational meeting.

Theory and literature achievement levels will be studied and compared at the next meeting which is scheduled for the summer.

MC Graduate Appointed Dean

Dr. F. Bruce Morgan Jr., a graduate of Maryville College, has been appointed as Dean of Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota.

MC Compiles Self-Study

Every ten years the Southern Association of Colleges and Universities requires its member institutions to compile and submit extensive reports and self-studies in order to ascertain whether or not certain minimum standards, as a basis for a renewal of accreditation, are being upheld by those institutions.

Maryville College is presently in the process of drafting a multi-faceted report on all phases of the College's structure and program.

Various subcommittees have been formed to submit first draft studies under such headings as academic standards, facilities and financing. Each subcommittee will send their reports to a central steering committee which will combine and finalize the individual studies into a single unit for submission to the Association. In May a team of at least three Association workers, having read MC's self-study, will be on campus to examine the functioning of the College.

In this year's study the Association is particularly interested in examining the ability of its member institutions to project into the immediate future, to anticipate pending problems and stumbling blocks, and to offer various alternative solutions, proposals and plans for realistically dealing with approaching needs.

Mr. Kull To Give Recital in Pittsburgh

Lee Kull, assistant professor of music at Maryville College and principal violist with the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra, will appear in recital at Chatham College in Pittsburgh, Pa., Monday, January 24.

The recital will sponsored by the American Guild of Organists, and Kull will be accompanied by Wayne Gailbraith, dean of the Pittsburgh Guild.

Kull was featured with the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra in November and will be presented in recital at Maryville College February 24. He will present in a lecture-recital at Carson-Newman College in March.

Now in his third year at Maryville College, Kull teaches strings at the college and is conductor of the College-Community Orchestra.

A native of Austin, Texas, he holds a bachelor of music degree from the University of Texas and a master of music degree from the University of Houston.

While an undergraduate at the University of Texas, Kull was a member of a viola ensemble that played at Carnegie Hall. Music performed for the occasion was especially written for the group.

He has studied viola with Paul Doktor, William Primrose and William Kroll and has presented recitals in Texas, at Peabody College, Maryville and Toledo, Ohio.

Prior to coming to Maryville, Kull taught at Peabody College where he was a member of the Blair String Quartet. For the past two summers he has been a member of the faculty of the Summer School of Music in Taos, New Mexico.

Survey Shows Students Active in Communities

Washington, D.C. - (I.P.) - If alienation and misunderstanding were conditions of town-gown relationships during the '60s, positive student community activism may well represent a trend during the '70s.

A recently completed survey by the American Association of State Colleges and Universities reveals that member institutions are encouraging students to participate in community services ranging over environmental projects, recreational development, drug abuse programs, day care, and public health projects.

Students are showing a growing awareness of local abuses and problems and are employing innovative approaches to correct them. More than 1,400 State University College at Potsdam (N.Y.) students held an evening meal fast, donating meal fees to 16 local families who have one or more children afflicted with muscular dystrophy.

Trained student volunteers at a number of institutions have organized to attack problems endemic to students themselves, ranging from orientation to delinquency and drug addiction.

At Florida Atlantic University, for example, student volunteers man a round-the-clock crisis center, and, at the same time, conduct an anti-drug educational project. These students also extend these activities into the surrounding counties, referring, counselling and educating.

The contemporary college student is beginning to find out that effective social change is earned through community participation.

If three years ago, students limited themselves to walking a picket line as advocates of the welfare rights of urban poor, today they are exposing themselves to the experiences of the poor.

Tenure Under Fire

Academic tenure is in the news these days. At Sanford University last week, H. Bruce Franklin, a tenured associate professor of English, was summarily dismissed from his position. Franklin had incited students to seize Sanford's Computation Center in protest of U.S. involvement in Laos. This dismissal of a tenured professor raises serious questions.

Briefly, tenure is provided to faculty members after several years service. It means both job security and freedom to write and speak without reprisal. Apparently, it is not blanket security, judging from Franklin's case.

Somewhat closer to home, a letter in last week's Echo suggests that a vulnerable faculty, one without tenure, would be more responsive. Undoubtedly, this idea is true. Yet, without tenure a faculty could find itself subject to arbitrary dismissal if it tried to respond freely.

On a different plane, tenure is part of a tension that exists between the interests of academic freedom and the seeming best interests of an institution. At best, the dividing line between these interests is indistinct, as in Franklin's case.

While the academic community is tugged in diffrent directions by these different interests, tenure seems a necessary device. With this murkiness produced by overlapping interests, tenure serves as a way of clarifying the situation.

What's All This Bruhaha?

From the Sports Desk: Counting them down to Super Bowl, VI or who's minding the White House?

We now have a new tradition; anyone who witnessed all of Sunday's hoopla cannot deny that Americans have become, through the use of the information media, the creators of insta-tradition and the Super Bowl in six short years has grown to be a national event bypassing the World Series in significance and standing somewhere alongside of presidential elections and moon walks. Pro football, as anyone knows, has prospered greatly in the last few years mainly through television contracts that resemble the Comstock Lode. Football that counts heavily on TV promotion and the buildup of Super-Sunday (which began last summer with the preseason exhibition games) is the case in point.

The Super Bowl has become an incredibly important event in the life of our country. It has been so blown up by TV that we all must feel a little lost if we don't get on the bandwagon. Of course I watched; of course I wouldn't have missed it. But it is only a football game, not some mythical struggle of the gods on the battlefield of life.

Football, unfortunately, has become inseparably tied to God and Country. Some recent converts to football mania must think that the game was developed for the honor of missing POW's in Southeast Asia. "Missing man" formations of Phantom jets streaking over the stadium are as much a part of the game as the re-enactment of the coin toss. And the Super Bowl, of course, had a Super flyover with two four-man formations instead of the usual one. To watch the pre-game and halftime ceremonies with all the flags falling from balloons and watching down the field, one would think that Pro Football was a function of the state. And this year we even had Richard (I AM THE COACH) Nixon sending in plays from the White House showing that he is just a regular guy like you and I. In the great tradition of Spiro Agnew, Nixon picked two losers, the Redskins and the Dolphins.

The game itself was uninspiring and anti-climatic. After the Dolphins' six-quarter marathon with Kansas City and their trouncing of Baltimore, this matchup was less than exciting — it bordered on the boring. Like last year's mistake-filled fiasco, this year's Super Bowl was less than Super. The Dolphins were quite simply brutalized by the Cowboys. The tough boys from Dallas just came in and so did a number of the youngsters from Miami. The Cowboys, who had been the premier choke artists of the game, perennially unable to win the Big One, showed no signs of nerves as they moved under the calm direction of a matured Roger Staubach at quarterback. Hitting secondary receivers with poise and rifling shots between the zones, Roger made the Dolphins look a little sad.

But the main event of the day was the running game of Dallas. My own feeling is that the outstanding thing about the contest was the interior line play of the Cowboys. Both defensively and offensively, the linemen of Dallas put on awesome display of hard-nosed football. They stopped the bread and butter of Miami by -lugging u the inside running of Kiick and Csonka and offensively they opened up holes that were big enough for a tank to slip through in first gear. Like old pros they controlled the ball and the game, battering the Dolphin defense, blocking awesomely and capitalizing on every Miami mistake.

After such a Super build-up, the game was a drag, but next year I'm sure will be even bigger, more even gala. Somehow we'll all forget how boring it was this year, and we'll be back. Let's settle back, pop a few tops and enjoy the pre-pre-pre-game Meaningful Insight into the World of Pro Football Show that begins on Super Wednesday before Super Sunday, 1973.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

"This is our poverty—
That we do not belong to each other
Nor serve one another
We go each his own way
And we do not care for our neighbor."

While it is true that the Maryville College community is not all "peaches and cream" in the sense of a true community, it is nevertheless a community of human beings. Yes, human beings do err, forget their brothers, become frustrated, and sometimes give up. But human beings can also be forgiven, for these same persons do care, serve others, and most of all–love others.

In evaluating our community at Maryville, rather than looking at others mistakes, why not try to understand our brothers in light of our own efforts and mistakes?

Cathy Bates

Dear Editor:

"Your body is a temple, give it not unto mice, cockroaches, or cold air." I Goloshes 4:16.

It seems evident that our present administration slides comfortably from one period of complacency to the next. We always satisfy our institution's needs so completely that there is never any concern about evaluation of new programs. The only things that our administrators are interested in re-evaluating are those policies which the students should be left to handle by themselves–such as visitation.

Why was there never any study done on the quad-living system? Perhaps an intensive look at the value and nature of the core-curriculum might be in order. Why do our leaders insist upon waiting until our living and educating procedures are antiquated before there can be any consideration of change?

The matter of food preparation and selection has been an issue for SO long that the administration and treasurer's office have successfully beaten the students into submission with peanut butter and jelly rations. (Class B peanut butter, at that).

More important that food is the matter of living conditions. Those of you fortunate enough to live in Dorms I, Davis, III, Lloyd, or even Pearsons might not be fully aware of those living facilities consigned to upper class males. For those that stick it out for four years, relatively decent living accommodations may be acquired. But for the freshmen men recognized as overload from Dorm III, the situation is somewhat less desirable. Basement rooms in Carnegie don't exactly go at a premium. Not only is one confronted with bugs of enormous number and proportion, but also freely flowing sewage on rainy days.

Memorial is recently suffering from seige forces of cockroaches allied with mice. Both Carnegie and Memorial are suffering from heating problems...mainly lack of it. Falling plaster, leaking ceilings, faulty plumbing, barely adquate space are just a few of the constant problems that confront the inhabitants of these dorms. Fire possibilities are nearly disastrous in thought.

How long are those people expected to know of such things when they have never even been on the premises that we are concerned with? But yet, they have the nerve to insist that we live under such conditions when we could find more comfortable and sanitary living facilities off campus at a cheaper rate. It is the job of the people in charge to know of such problems, but we (the students) must complain constantly and write letters like this just to make them aware. If the school were functioning adequately as an organization, then this letter would never have to be written.

We realize that mere complaints aren't the only constructive means of coping with this problem. So we would challenge Dr. Copeland to tour the facilities and see the holes in which some upper classmen are forced to live. We would even invite him to come and live in either of the dorms in question. But we realize the difficulty in sacrificing the comforts of Morningside.

Perhaps a week spent in chilly rooms, feasting on sick plates would better acquaint our esteemed president with the conditions under which our most important community member (the student) is forced to live. Perhaps sharing his bed with cockroaches would make him understand why some students aren't happy with living conditions here.

The problems stand stated, the complaint acknowledged, and we realize that nothing will probably done, except the absolute necessities. We reiterate our challenge, Mr. President, we ask you to come and enjoy our facilites for a week or so. If you can't find the time to do that, then don't plead ignorance to the basis for studetn complaints.

Disturbed residents of Carnegie and Memorial.

dear Editor;

No issue on our campus draws more unfavorable student sentiment than the food services here at Maryville. It is a recognized fact that the food here is absolutely inadequate and unacceptable. It is poor in quality and quantity and its nutritional deficiency is not enhanced by the administration's generous allotment of peanut butter and

To A Snowflake

Amid the doom of a frozen winter,
Buried, securely surrounded amid many friends, my favorite snowflake lies.

Once they all flew,
guided from within,
but mine, mine was a loner and had a strength all its own.

Its style, its shape,
had a grace it alone possessed.
But now it by its friends in a great snow drift lies,
no longer to change,
and freely live.

Why, O why, I plead,
must nature take her course,
and spoil my favorite snowflake?

Committee Forms To Reform

Galesburg, Ill. - (I.P.) - Governance at Knox College this year coincided with the collapse of the elected student government.

After a round of legalistic quarrels and controversial election procedures, the Student Senate went out of existence last spring and was not revived this fall.

In the meantime, however, students have been given more representation on faculty committees, at departmental faculty meetings, and at general faculty meetings.

Students are voting members of all faculty committees except the Personnel Committee (which deals with the hiring, firing and promotions of faculty members), but they do not have a vote in departmental or general faculty meetings.

A Knox Union Board has been appointed to undertake many of the functions of the former Student Senate, such as the scheduling of visiting speakers and artists.

Still another change in Knox governance makes the office of the dean of students the "court of first instance" in disciplinary cases. The dean, Ivan C. Harlan, no longer needs to have the concurrence of a faculty-student committee in acting.

He now has the authority to take whatever action he considers appropriate in the case of any student guilty of a violation.

A student may appeal the dean's decision to a faculty-student Judicial Board and ultimately to the president of the college.

Another new procedure involves cases of students who feel that their work has been graded unfairly. Students who do not receive satisfaction in such cases from individual instructors may now appeal to the academic vice president, who may appoint a special committee to investigate.

Ain't Life Hard

BY LINDA LOU BLOMEKE

Having just made an incomplete in my first term of tennis, I am beginning to reconcile myself to the fact that not every girl can be granted both a beautiful face and the skill to master any sport. In my case, I shall just have to flaunt the former and try to shrug off my lack of athletic skills. Beginners' tennis really was a struggle for me. Despite the reassurances of my instructor (who was both helpful and patient), I heard the death-knell ringing in my ears as he called upon our eye-hand co-ordination. I felt from the start that tennis really didn't sound like the sport for me, but then neither did golf or handball. Swimming was out too; I wasn't about to risk my life twice. Anyway, tennis sounded like a challenge. It was that. I originally practiced those necessary skills in the gym. As my face grew redder, I gradually faded away to the parking lot behind Dorm I. Then I moved to the 3rd floor hallway, the bathroom walls, and eventually my roommate locked me in our room and allowed me to hit my ball against the back of the door. By this time I was ready to concede defeat and be led away to a nice, quiet home far from the current day demands for physical prowess. Perhaps I was meant for shuffleboard.

I think it's somewhat unfair of Maryville College to expect everyone to reach a proficiency level in sports. Improvement should count for something. But since apparently the idea is that every person is endowed with the required attributes, I suppose I shall continue to haunt the gym and wait for the day when I miraculously hit all the balls. Meanwhile, I have enrolled in fencing, and do I already sense a desire on the part of my instructor to hurl her body upon my sword?

jelly sandwiches to supplement these inadequacies.

Contrary to popular belief, the problem does not evolve around Miss Ware. To borrow a phrase from Desiderata she is "as perennial as the grass."

The problem lies in the administration of your food dollar. Earlier this year, I talked with President Copeland concerning the food situation and I received a lengthy monologue on the problems that our food services has encountered. Believe me, I am sympathetic with some of the legitimate obstacles his financial "experts" and he have encountered, but to dismiss their delinquency in reforming this situation can only be surpassed by the blind acquienscence with which we students accept such despicable conditions.

The importance of a healthy and nutritious diet can hardly be over-emphasized. Nutrition determines your life-span, affects your personality, builds or tears down your resistance to shock, infection, and fatigue. It also regulates your working efficiency.

If a small hike in the food bill will alleviate this problem, then I say go ahead as I feel many students will agree. Certainly, it is more feasible to spend your money on the daily improvement of our meals than to splurge it on a nutritious hamburger from Hardee's or the student center. I even know some students who spend up to $15 a week on food supplements! Personally I cannot eat this food for seventeen more weeks this year and all of next year. Heaven help the sophomores and freshmen!

The food here at Maryville does not even compare with institutions of similar size and cost. I have visited several such colleges, including Emory and Henry, Southwestern, Millsaps, Hampden-Sydney, and Randolph-Macon, and nowhere is the food or food services in such a deplorable condition.

On the vast majority of issues today there is a wide difference of student opinions. But on this issue, the overwhelming majority resent the ineffective, inadequate and unacceptable conditions prevalent here. I fail to recognize any justification by the administration for their lack of effort in rectifying this sickening situation. The fact is that we pay for this food and we are not getting our money's worth.

Choir Tour Planned For Spring Break

While many MC students are wondering what they are going to do with their spring break, the members of the Maryville College Concert Choir know—they'll be on tour.

The choir is presently preparing for the 12 day tour, which will run from March 10 to March 21, and will take the group through the North Carolina, Georgia, Florida area. Appearances at churches for nightly concerts are planned, as well as several high school appearances and two Sunday morning worship services.

The tour will get under way on Friday, March 10, with an appearance in Chattanooga, and end in Huntsville, Alabama on March 21. There will also be a pretour concert in Loudon on March 5, and the annual home concert in the chapel on March 26. The latter two concerts involve the entire choir, but only about 40 of approximately 60 voice choir make the tour.

Since 1950, the choir has toured every year and has appeared in several parts of the country. Last year, the tour took the group to the northwest, including New England and New York state. There are also occasional tours to Europe in the summer for those who can go. Such a tour is planned for this

Every year on tour, the choir performs one major work as a feature. Upperclassmen will remember last year's performance of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat." This year, the choir had intended to do parts of the rock opera, "Jesus Christ, Superstar." However, due to complications which arose over the Christmas vacation, "Superstar" will not be performed but will be replaced with a work by Sister Miriam Therese Winter entitled "Mass For a Pilgrim People."

Plans have not been definitely finalized for the tour yet, but the choir is well on the way to another successful tour, and there is little doubt that they will be ready in March.

Film Odyssey On TV Friday

A collection of classic film masterpieces, including "Grand Illusion," "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," "M," "The Seven Samurai" and "Beauty and the Beast," will be brought to the nation's television audiences beginning in January as part of the "Film Odyssey" series on the Public Broadcasting Service network.

A Xerox Corporation grant to PBS will make the 26-week series available to more than 210 non-commercial stations affiliated with the network. Most stations are expected to televise "Film Odyssey" Friday evenings at 8:30 o'clock (EST) beginning Jan. 14.

Each movie in the Xerox-funded collection was chosen because of its impact on the development of the film medium. The movies reflect specific contributions to the growth of film as an art form by such world-renowned directors as Sweden's Ingmar Bergman, France's Francois Truffaut, Russia's Sergei Eisenstein, Germany's Josef Von Sternberg, and Mexico's Luis Bunuel.

In addition to their esthetic qualities, each of the films is also solid entertainment. Whether fantasy (Jean Cocteau's "Beauty and the Beast"), adventure (Alfred Hitchcock's "The 39 Steps") or tragedy (Eisenstin's "Ivan the Terrible"), each film has been acclaimed since its original release for its attention-grabbing story, its excellent acting and innovative cinematography.

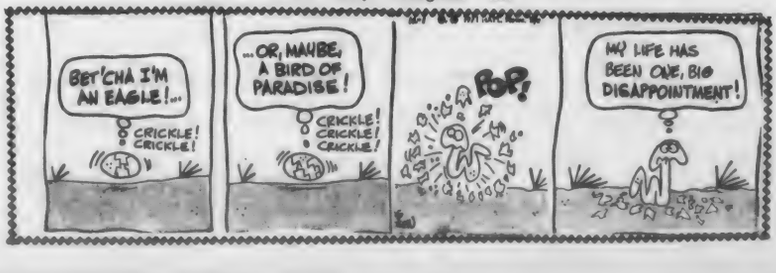
Film buffs and students are expected to look for the personal directorial touches reflected in each. In "Jules and Jim," for example, which launches "Film Odyssey," Truffaut helped initiate France's "new wave," the group of directors who broke new ground with their unique talents and emphasis on emotionalism.

Starring Jeanne Moreau and Oskar Werner, "Jules and Jim" is a nostalgically romantic story set in pre-World War I Europe.

In the German-made "The Blue Angel," which made Marlene Dietrich an international star in 1930, von Sternberg introduced harsh realism to the movies. The story tells of the moral and mental degradation of a college professor under the influence of a cafe performer. "The Blue Angel" will be televised Jan. 21.

Jean Renoir's "Grand Illusion," third in the series, studies the fading concepts of glory and honor in war. Produced in 1937, the film stars Jean Gabin, Erich von Stroheim, and Pierre Fresnay.

All movies in the Xerox-funded series will be televised in their original uncut version, with soundtracks intact. Superimposed English sub-titles will translate the dialogue of the foreign films.



Charles Champlin, entertainment editor of the Los Angeles Times, will be program host. In addition to introducing each film, he will conduct on-camera interviews at the conclusion with such movie luminaries as King Vidor, Fritz Lang, John Schlesinger, Peter Bogdanovich and Robert Altman.

Funky Dance Planned for Next Week

Kappa Phi, in cooperation with the Social Committee, is planning a dance on January 29. "Funk University" will be playing in Lloyd Hall. The cost will be $1 per person. According to Chuck Wineland of Kappa Phi, "Funk University is one of the top bands in East Tennessee."

Some students who attend the dance may recognize the members of "Funk University" as of the old "Supreme Court" band who played at Maryville College in the fall of 1970.

"Funk University" is composed of two trumpets, one sax, a lead guitar, drums, a lead singer, an organ and a bass. Kappa Phi is willing to sponsor more dances if this one goes over big.

Georgia Snaps Scots

The University of Georgia snapped the Scot wrestling team's three-meet winning streak on January 11, defeating the Scots 24-14 in Athens.

However, the Bulldogs did not have an easy time of it. John Poore and Brad Kehler weon their bouts in splendid style.

Freshman Gary DeAlmo, weighing only 118, defeated Georgia's 134 pounder. Extending his own winning streak, Doug Cunningham downed his Bulldog opponent.

Saturday night the strength of Appalachian State's wrestling team defeated the Scots 24-15 in an exciting home match. As against Georgia, the Maryville matmen made the Appalachians work for it.

Freshman Paul Naylor defeated ASU's Phil Shultir in the 118 pound division. Herb Singerman dealt 126 pound John Poore a 7-3 decision. Doug Cunningham retained his undefeatted standing, handing Al Journell a decisive 7-1 defeat.

Steve Kitchen fell victim to Dale Midkiff in the 142 pound class, and Ed Johnson lost to Butch Triplett in a close one. Appalachian's John Seal handed Gary Burd a slim decision, and 167 pounder Paulis Johnson downed Brad Kehler.

The Maryville crowd came alive when Matt Pacifico exploded in the second period, pinning David Proffitt in short order. Roger Reiter followed with another exciting match, defeating Ferrell Smotherly soundly, and barely missing the pin. Jim Batchler held off several minutes before being downed by hefty heavyweight Harry Hilewitz.

Tonight the Scot matmen entertain the University of Southwestern Louisiana's wrestling team.

Bouncers Better Their Position

The Scot basketballers picked up two victories last week against one defeat as their season reached the halfway point.

The Scots entertained Clinch Valley last Tuesday and with a fine team effort walloped them 91-67. Bill Postler's board play and Mike Butler's hustle were the keys for an early Scot lead.

Dan McKinstry had 23 for the Scots. He was followed by Mike Butler 10, Bill Postler-17, Randy Schaurer-10, Phil Graham-11, Scott Ross-7, and Dale Morse-4.

Thursday, the Scots ventured to Emory and Henry where they met the Wasps. After being down by 13 points at the half, the Scots started to work. After seven minuted the Scots were down by six. At this point, Postler picked up his fourth personal foul. Emory and Henry pushed the margin to eleven before he returned. After he re-entered the game the Scots battled but at the end were on the short side of 73-71 score.

Randy Schaurer paced the Scots with 19 points, Bill Postler had 17, Mike Butler 14, Dan McKinstry 13, Scott Ross and Phil Graham each contributed 4 points.

Saturday, Maryville went to Monteagle, Tennessee, to tangle with Sewanee. A superb team effort and an outstanding rebounding performance by Postler pushed the Scots to a 81-70 victory over the Tigers. Postler had 17 rebounds and 12 points in playing his best game of the season. Dan McKinstry tallied 41 points, Mide Butler 18, Randy Schaurer 7, and Scott Ross 4.

The schedule for the Scots has them playing in Dayton, Tennessee, against Bryan on Saturday. Next Tuesday, the Scots will go to Chattanooga to play Covenant College. Larry Brown's return is still uncertain but next week seems as the earliest foreseen.

Bicycling Hits

By Debbie McClain

There are three reasons why people on our campus enjoy bicycling: for exercise, for transportation, and for pleasure.

Those students participating in the "Fundamental" physical education program have found that bicycling is a sure method for getting back into shape. By adding this pastime to their daily schedule, they are guaranteed to see a favorable increase in their fitness at the end of the term.

For others, bicycling provides quick and easy transportation on campus and in the Maryville area. It also comes in handy when one is running late for a class that is clear across campus.

Finally, there are those who enjoy riding just for pleasure. The college Woods provide a peaceful atmosphere for this and enables one to "get away from it all."

CROC Fights Ad Pollution

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. – College students across the country are being asked to support a movement to try to ricicule irritating and obnoxious television commercials off the air.

Bill Bentzin, a Minneapolis public relations man and founder of the Committee for Rejection of Obnoxious Commercials (CROC), launched the campaign November 10 in a talk to the Mankato State College Marketing Club in Mankato, Minn.

CROC was formed in September in Minneapolis, and now has more then 1,000 members from coast to coast. The organization hopes to improve the quality of television commercials by calling attention to the bad ones, at the same time recognizing some of those which CROC members feel are good.

Main activity of CROC will be a balloting by members in the spring to name the "10 Biggest CROC of the Year"—the 10 worst TV commercials of the season. CROC award winners will be nationally publicized.

"There seem to be enough bad TV commercials to offend just about everyone. We've got memberships from the grade school set to retirees," says Bentzin. "College students I've talked with feel very strongly about improving commericals. They're much too sophisticated to be impressed by the ridiculous things that some of the agencies resort to in commercials."

Memberships in CROC costs $1.00, and all the college student members get eight "You Commerical is a CROC" protest cards to send to companies sponsoring bad commercials to let them know they may be heading for a CROC award; a membership card; a "Let's Get CROCed Together" button, and a "Crush Revoltingly Obnoxious Commericals" poster, plus the right to join in the spring voting. The poster, covered with graffiti about current TV commercials, was created by a Minneapolis College of Art and Design student. Graffiti was contributed by several persons concerning their favorite CROC candidates.

To receive all CROC material and get on the spring ballot list, students send $1.00 to COLLEGE CROC, Box 1022C, Minneapolis, Minn. 55440.

College students also are being asked to participate in a "CROC art" contest to creat a new poster for the organization. The "CROC art" competition is open to any college student and has a first prize of $100 for the best poster capturing creatively and imaginatively the goals of the organization. Second prize is $50 and third prize, $25.

Pegi Hjermstad, University of Minnesota student, shows CROC poster. A member of Committee for Rejection of Obnoxious Commercials, she will vote in spring for the 10 worst TV commercials this year.

Judges for the "CROC art" contest will be Jay Belloli, assistant curator, Walker Art Center, Minneapolis; Mrs. Howard Kaerwer, former lecturer at The Minneapolis Institute of Arts and instructor of art history and culture at the University of Minnesota, and Evan Maurer, assistant to the director, curator, The Minneapolis Institute of Arts. Posters should be done in black and white. Choice of media and size is open, however consideration should be given to possible photographic reproduction and use in a 17x22 inch size.

Entries should be sent to CROC art, Box 1022CA, Minneapolis, Minn. 55440, postmarked no later than Dec. 15, 1971, and arriving no later than Dec. 20, 1971. Winning entries become the property of CROC and other entries will not be returned unless accompanied by a postage paid, self addressed envelope. Decision of the judges is final. Winners will be notified by January 31, 1972.

Astronauts Sought

The pilot in a flight to Mars will be "more of a passenger than a pilot, contemplative rather than aggressive and a high performer," says the November issue of Science Digest. This new kind of astronaut will be needed for the long-term space flights of upcoming missions. Tests in simulated space labs show that long periods of confinement will cause psychological stresses not yet experienced by our astronauts.

Opera Master Comes to CIV

Kurt Adler. Chorus Master and Conductor at the Metropolitan Opera, will be the guest speaker at Maryville College's Community Issues and Values program Wednesday, February 2, 9:20 a.m.

Adler, who was born in Czechoslovakia, started his career on the musical staff of the Berlin State Opera. He had conducting assignments all over Europe before coming to the United States in 1938, where he continued his career as conductor and pianist.

In 1943 Adler joined the Metropolitan Opera and has since conducted more than twenty different operas there. He has also conducted at Mexico City's Opera Nacional, the Central City Opera Festival, the Summer Opera Season at the Greek Theatre in Hollywood and for numerous other performances and concerts throughout the United Sates and Canada.

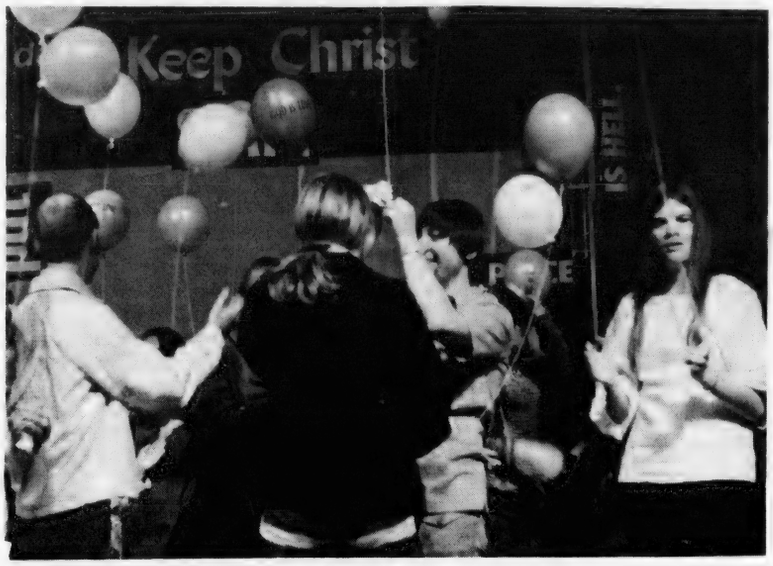
Adler was the first American conductor to be invited to direct performances at the National Operas of Sofia, Bulgaria and Bucharest, Rumania. He was also guest at the Music Festivals in Yugoslavia.

Among his most recent conducting assignments at the Metropolitan are "Die Zauberfloete," "Andrea Chenier" and "Madame Butterfly."

Political Science Is Topic Of Seminar

Thursday afternoon Dr. Robert Braid acted as moderator in a seminar presented by the political science department. In keeping with the theme of January meetings, the seminar dealt with government's responsiveness to the wants and needs of the individual.

Joining Dr. Braid were three political science majors and a Maryville College graduate.



Doug Brown discussed the dehumanization of highly commercialized political campaigns and the price of justice in the American court system.

Also in the seminar was Mack Garner, who contended that Presidential influence over foreign policy gave the inidividual little voice in this area.

Chip Pusey also discussed the executive branch, discussing the insensitivity of American bureaucracy to the individual.

In contrast to these views, Lance Dunaway presented his belief that through pressure groups and political activity, an individual could influence government.

Pumpkins originated in Mexico and Central America.

This year's January Meetings reached new heights through novel devices as "God is Love" balloons. See page 3 for reactions to meetings.

Does Man Belong to Nature?

The seminar entitled "Ecology: Is Man a Part of Nature?" was based on several interesting questions. Dr. Shields, Mr. Stewart and Dr. Ramger more or less directed the discussion which asked such questions as "Is man's road to self destruction part of the evolutionary process?", "Is science alone dangerous?", "When the definition of 'humanness' changes, will there be any recognizable basic themes?"

One person voiced the opinion that man needed to become aware of his limitations. He felt that if everyone could become aware of mankind's total situation, much needless destruction could be eliminated.

One other important question raised concerned the attitudes regarding abortions, deformed infants, and changing definitions of life and death. Some people seem to think it is dehumanizing to consider birth control, death control and other questions concerning the quality of life. Yet it is certain that "dehumanizing" steps must be taken to prevent the world from overflowing with people.

A thought provoking seminar resulted from these questions.

Messiah Presented This Sunday

On January 30, Sunday afternoon at 3:00, the 34th presentation of Handel's "Messiah" will be held in the Chapel.

Peace Is Best For Humans

By Patti Shelton

"War is not Good for Humans" was one January meetings seminar led by Dr. Stine and Reverend Howard Hines, assistant superintendent at Asbury Acres and a leader of the peace conference of the United Methodist Church. Dr. Stine stated immediately that he felt he had made a mistake in naming the seminar, suggesting the title, "Peace is best for Humans" as a better one. The reason for this, he said, is that our society is too oriented toward thinking in terms of war. The seminar sought to change this orientation.

A film called "Once Upon a War" was shown. This film included scenes from a medical outpost in Quang Ngai, Vietnam, which showed children who had lost their arms and legs. The film raised questions about the effect a war would produce in these children later in their lives.

A film called "the Magician" was next, a nightmare on celluloid. This allegorical tale concerned a sleight-of-hand officer who lured children off the beach and made them into "soldiers" by reinforcing properly destructive tendencies.

After the film both Dr. Stine and Rev. Hines expressed a desire to hear comments from the students on the proposals to grant amnesty to those who had refused to fight in one way or another. Some students said the expatriates didn't want to come back; some said it was a legal, not a moral question. The discussion was still concerned with war and what it does to people. This seminar exposed many people to a different way of thinking. Perhaps it made some aware of what it will take to orient this country's thinking to peace instead of war.

Pros and Cons Of Abortion Examined

In connection with the theme of January Meetings, "The Struggle to be Human," a seminar on Thursday explored "Abortion and the Right to Live."

"Each Child Loved", a movie, recounted the experience and justification of today's abortion, was presented under the auspices of Planned Parenthood.

Following the film, Rev. Fowler of Oak Ridge and Dr. Robert Proffitt of Maryville discussed implications of abortion. Dr. Fowler presented the Christian ethical view encompassing abortions moral and philosophical ramifications. Dr. Proffitt turned to the practical legal aspects. Each man's view was based on the belief that an individual's humanity begins at conception. Both speakers disagreed with the practice.

In the heated question and answer session following the presentation, the struggle to be human was exemplified. The session was moderated by Dr. Nelson.

Seniors Make Plans

At a recent senior class meeting held to discuss various aspects of graduation numerous decisions were made:

Dress for the graduation is to be left to the discretion of the individual. Caps and gowns will be available through the bookstore for $5.50. This year caps and gowns will be sold rather than rented. Those not choosing caps and gowns are asked to dress with proper respect for the solemnity of the graduation ceremony.

In keeping with last year's consideration for dropping caps and gowns, the senior class is asking for an individually determined donation by all seniors to be made in the name of the senior class to the library.

Suggestions for speakers at graduation include Kurt Vonnegut, Sidney Bijow, Senator George McGovern or other political leaders, and-or students or faculty members. Requests and invitations are currently being submitted to these individuals and plans for a graduation speaker will be finalized at a future senior class meeting.

Rather than the regular class prophecy, it was suggested that all interested seniors might contribute in written form reactions to and remembrances of their time at Maryville College. Each contribution would be incorporated into a literary collection dedicated to the Class of '72.

It was decided also that there would be no daisy chain at this year's graduation.

At an announced date a company representative will be on campus to take orders for graduation invitations.

Further, all seniors were urged to check with the Registrar to be sure all individual requirements for graduation are in order. They were also advised to submit the exact name they wish to have entered on their diplomas.

A Pennsylvania farmer once raised a pumpkin that weighed 260 pounds.

Dehumanizing Aspects Of Schools Found

The seminar Friday afternoon of January Meetings entitled "Who Says Our School Systems Are Dehumanizing?" was an opportunity for students to voice gripes about schools in general and Maryville College in particular.

When asked to name the five most important dehumnizing elements in the present school system, including grades one through college, the seminar came up with these statements. (1) too much structure, (2) too little structure, (3) pupil's thought not accepted as important as teacher's, (4) competition, (5) grading system stifles curiosity and creativity, (6) dictation of moral standards, (7) mass concept, (8) administrative apathy (run-around about instigating any change), and (9) separation of sexes.

After some discussion of the humanizing elements, which were (1) the learning process in itself, (2) teacher-pupil interaction, (3) improved buildings, materials and techniques, the discussion moved to the pros and cons of a grading system.

January Meetings Reviewed

This year's January Meetings encompassed a much more innovative approach than has been used in several years past. These new ideas seem to have made for more successful meetings.

Perhaps most noticeable among these innovations was the lack of outside speakers. This break with tradition gave the meetings a less stratified approach. Instead of the usual preacher-people approach, the lack of preaching gave the meetings a more relaxed atmosphere with a personal basis.

Also noticeable was the increased student response to January Meetings. Perhaps the personal approach contributed to this response. MC will have achieved one of its goals when education can be carried on outside a formal classroom structure. The less structured January Meetings contribute towards this goal.

The theme of this year's meetings, "The Struggle to be Human," is a particularly relevant one. Technology and its propagandists are continually seeking a dehumanized society. Being human in such a society truly is a struggle.

This struggle became particularly apparent in Friday's Seminar on "Behavorial Engineering." Men must always struggle for their humanity against the dehumanized manipulators of society such as B. F. Skinner and his technological sycophants. Too few people recognize the threat to human dignity and freedom implied by Skinner's concept of "control," 1984 is only twelve years away. Those intellectual elitists who accept Skinner merely promote Orwell's nightmare.

Through innovations such as these, January Meetings became a more vital force at MC than in several years past. Perhaps these innovations can be retained for the future.

Reich Of The Future

BY TOM COE

PART I INVOCATION OF THE MUSE

There is a revolution coming. It will not be like revolutions of the past. It will originate with the individual and the culture, and it will change the political structure only as its final act. It will not require violence to succeed, and it cannot be successfully resisted by violence . . . This is the revolution of the new generation.

—Charles A. Reich

PART II Sticks and Stone

Rolling Stone just turned 100 (issues, that is) and that has to stand as some sort of milestone. The Beatles are over 30 and we've all mellowed some over these last few years. Rolling Stone, beginning with a dream and a prayer, has been recently called the New York Times of the underground, but that is only because it is well put together (i.e. they still believe in copy editors).

Anyway, to get to Charles Reich. I have heard many professors on this campus criticize Reich as a dreamer and a fool, but I can't expect too much from them. They're old. They also have Ph.D's (many of them) and there seems to be something about specialization that places blinders on lots of people. I happen to think that Charles Reich has hit the nail squarely on the head. The world will not change for the better until the people in it change their attitudes. Attitudes towards money, people, nature, self, etc.

Ralph V. Gleason writes in Rolling Stone's Issue 100 "We started out to report and encourage all the areas of explosion of the on-rushing generation and we have tried to do just that." Rolling Stone sort of symbolizes the thing that is happening. It's neo-Capitalistic. Sure they make money — everybody's got to do that — but somehow one can't help but get the feeling that they're a little less driven by it. Anyway, their reporting has always been diverse but sharp and clear. Their reports on the Chicago Police Riot of 1968 and Charles Manson are classics in their depth, seriousness and objectivity.

PART III FATHER D.

Father Geoffre Skrinar, recent participant in January Meetings, said that if he were a student here again he'd write his special studies on rock music (lots of luck trying to get that thrugh some Con. II committee) because he feels tht rock music is the art form of the generation. It's a long way from Bill Haley and the Comets to an art form but anyone who listens to side 2 of Abbey Road must agree that rock music has indeed evolved. Imagine how those guys (the Beatles) must feel; they, most importantly, have been responsible for the elevation of this art form and have also been responsible for a generation gap.

Which gets us right back to Reich. The change of consciousness he talks about is what the media call a generation gap. Different values are operating here. There are certainly things that you must take for granted that would shock your parents. And you're not going to change either. The Beatles made 30 and so will you. You won't automatically become untrustworthy either — only if you want to be.

PART IV MY BACK PAGES

Sometimes people want this column to be rag sheet. All I'm saying is don't waste your good time worrying about Joe Copeland, you've got better things to do with your life. In Reichian terms, the school is changing out from under him anyway.

P.S. (Part V Coming Attractions). By the time you read this I'll have been in New Orleans for three days. Next week watch for Another In the Continuing Series of In-Depth Reports on Life-in-General: Fear and Loathing in New Orleans, in Search of The American Dream or Is this the Trip? Big Deal.

Letters to the Editor

Carnegie Still Needs Improving

Dear Editor:

Every day we wake up and have to fight the cockroaches for bathroom privileges. Why? We never hear of the residents of Dorm III, Dorm I, Lloyd or Davis, making this complaint. When we get a chance to escape from the filth of our present house and gaze at the sanitary conditions of the newer dorms, we really get disturbed. Why must nearly one-third of our community be forced to live in old dilapidated shacks while the other, more privileged members of our college live in warm, clean, well-furnished rooms.

We are paying nearly $450 a year for rooms as are all of the other students living on campus. In Dorm III, the freshmen have good heating and air conditioning, rugs in their rooms, good beds, desks and bureaus. They have sanitary bathrooms, hot water, lounges, washing machines and dryers that work, good lighting as well as walls, that are not crumbling. What makes it all jive is the fact that if anything goes wrong it gets fixed right now, not "when we get around to it."

Would you believe that the residents in Pearsons, Memorial and Carnegie can not even depend on having hot water let alone sanitary living conditions. The fact that we are deprived of these things basic to dorm living is minor considering the fact we still pay as much as the luckier ones attending this institution of higher learning. But then again the college is supposedly in the red as far as finances go. Perhaps if they would hire some more competent administrators this school might be able to cut the mustard.

We would once again mention the poor food at this college but by just mentioning the word "food," every one gets sick. After all, Green Giant Brand Corn is the best, but you must admit it still tastes terrible. We really like to go to supper and have one ear of corn and hamburg. But we should not complain because we are only students and as administration has demonstrated, it is more important for the president to have a beautiful office than for us to have heat on cold nights.

Once again we come to the question of "where has all the money gone." The answer is; who knows? We all know it has not gone to Miss Ware or to the old rundown slums in which we are living. So Mr. Copeland, where has it gone? We are sure our parents would like to know. But we do not want any of you who run the school to hurry and investigate the question. Let's all go out to lunch. Perhaps, some of us have been out to lunch too long. It hasn't been the students. It only takes five minutes to eat lunch in the dining hall.

Just remember before you go to bed, or use the bathroom that the most important member of

Joy Overflowing

For years I could see only the barren desert of my live. Nothing would slake my thirst. Parched, I wandered aimlessly, wearily from one illusive mirage to another.

A stream appeared, but I ignored it, thinking that it, too would vanish when I approached. But it crossed my path, so at last, with a skeptical, knowing smile, I bent to touch the semming stream. It was cool and wet, and in relief I plunged in, drinking and splashing until my heart overflowed with joy and I was clean forevermore.

The Schillings, a folk group, perform during January Meetings.

Schillings Concert Was Fun

Saturday night one of the most enjoyable events in current times happened when the Schillings came to Maryville College. They shared with a large audience their love and knowledge of Appalachian folk music.

Although drinking songs like "Mountain Dew" and religious songs such as "Old Time Religion" were familiar to most, the style with which the Schillings presented them was fresh and alive. Bringing only the simplest of instruments, the dulcimer, a wooden flute, an autoharp, and a harmonica, Lee and Jean filled the music hall with a genuinely American sound, and everyone loved it.

After they had been on stage only a few minutes, the entire audience was charmed by their casual humor and their warm manner. From the oldest to the youngest there, everyone was clapping and singing along. And every one was smiling.

MC Hoe Down Is Success

Last night, MC students who had never square danced (and those who had) got a chance to try their hand at it at the country hoe-down which was part of the January Meetings.

The event was held in the Health and P.E. building, and featured Dr. Cartlidge as caller. It also featured students who tried several different square dances. The dances were first shown to the dancers by Dr. Cartlidge. Then they got a chance to practice, and finally, the dance itself was held.

Several times during the evening, one dancer or another would go in the wrong direction or make a wrong turn, and confusion would result. This was particularly true when dancers went the wrong way and almost collided.

The evening also featured the return of Affiliate Artist Philip Steele. He sang several songs during intermission, including "The Impossible Dream," which he had not done there before. But it wasn't his singing that really showed him off this time, it was his dancing. He cuts a fine figure as a square dancer.

After the intermission, a few more dances were danced, and the evening was over. From the faces on the dancers (not all students) it was evident that MC's country hoe-down was a success.

'No Exit" Is Hell

The play No Exit was presented Thursday night in the Theatre as part of this year's January meetings. The play was presented on a bare stage, except for three stools and a bronze ornament.

The play dealt with three damned souls who were doomed to live together in hell in a room with only three sofas and a bronze statue.

Anglea Glenn portrayed Inez, a woman disgusted with her life on earth and even more disgusted with her life in hell.

Christine Rogers played the part of Estelle. Estelle was a young woman who threw her illegitimate infant daughter to her death in a pool with a rock tied to the body. She was a woman who needed love and continually played up to the only male in the play, Mr. Garcan.

Garcan, played by Robert Hutchens, was a man who had mistreated his wife and deserted from the army. Garcan needed to be told that he wasn't a coward; neither Estelle nor Inez would do that.

Each one of the three became the others' own personal hell until finally they are offered an out — a previously locked door opened. They stayed in the room, however, and decided to stick it out together.

All three parts were played extremely well. One could almost see the contempt in Miss Glenn's words each time she spoke. Miss Roger's Estelle could not have been portrayed better and Mr. Hutchens played the aloof Mr. Garcan perfectly.

The play was well received by the audience and, as one student said, "I don't like plays, but this was pretty good!"

A Black Perspective

Impasse
By Langston Hughes

I could tell you,
if I wanted to,
What makes me
what I am,
But I don't really want to and you don't give a damn.

There are many ways of communicating with one another in the struggle to be human in these United States of America. Silence can be the strongest and most powerful means in existence if used at the proper time. It communicates, to use a Shakespearian phrase, that "all is not well in Denmark" nor at Maryville College.

Whether or not many realize it, the struggle to be human has never been my bag, for I have never felt less than human in my whole life, so this is not my struggle. I think the organizers of the January meetings left us out again this year as they have for the last 400 years, or to be more specific, for the last century that the January meetings have been haunting this campus - - probably an unconscious effort.

As unique as this campus is, if there is no melting pot here, how do we propose to act when we leave? The sub-title given to us "The Struggle of Black People for Equality in America" makes even less sense to me since to be equal would mean becoming like you, less than human, which is the idea that the January meetings seem to protray you as being. No way! Not me, anyway!

Silence, I said, can be the most powerful means of communication in existence, especially as it was used by the Black concerned members of this Maryville College campus: after hearing Julian Bond speak; after Maryville College Black students portrayal of the Black struggle through readings, recordings, and dance, after the Black drama group from Atlanta came to this campus, after that baseball incident with Knoxville College, after that white Maryville Student was cut by a Black dude from Alcoa on this campus because he was called a nigger, after the Martin Luther King, Jr. film was shown on this campus what else was left but silence.

I'm sick of hearing "Well, maybe we ought to get together more often" after such emotional, exciting and stimulating gatherings once or twice a year. I hope for those who were concerned enough to come that the art exhibit, the most primitive language of communicating, and poetry was emotional, exciting, and stimulating, and I hope that it made you feel human.

Circle K Collects Bottles

Every Sunday afternoon, the Circle K service club collects glass bottles for recycling purposes. These bottles are collected in boxes placed in the main lobbies of each dorm.

The bottles are taken to a rehabilitation center for the handicapped, located in Maryville. Handicapped workers then pack and ship them to Chattanooga for recycling.

This project, however, consists of more than merely recycling glass. It also rids the campus of junk glass, gives the handicapped a means of supporting themselves, and helps the Circle K raise money for various charities.

Leland T. Waggoner, a member of the Board of Directors of Maryville College, was honored recently on his 25th anniversary as associate editor of the CLU Journal, a monthly publication of the American Society of Chartered Life Underwriters. Mr. Waggoner is senior vice president and director of the Home Life Insurance Company in New York City.

Mr. Waggoner also is consulting editor of the Life Insurance Handbook and contributing author of the Life Insurance Management Handbook. He has co-authored a college text and written two other insurance books.

SPORTS

Wrestlers Win Two Out Of Three

Last week the Scots' wrestling team participated in three back-to-back matches, winning two and dropping one.

Wednesday, January 19, the Maryville Matmen scored an amazing exhibition, defeating the Carson-Newman Eagles 55-0, registering seven pins and one superior decision.

Paul Naylor took the 118-pound class in a forfeited match. John Poore, wrestling with his usual speed and agility, pinned Steve Price in the second period.

Pinning his opponent, Buddy Godfrey, in the third period, Doug Cunningham increased the Scots' lead to 18-0. Steve Kitchen made short order of John Abbott, flattening him in the first period. Ed Johnson followed with a pin early in the second period.

Showing good takedown strength, Gary Burd defeated Charlie McGaha in a 15-6 decision. Brad Kehler pinned his opponent in the third period and Matt Pacifico won a superior decision of 17-4 over Artis Young.

In the 190-pound division Roger Reiter pinned Doug Wallace early in the first period, and Jim Batchler quickly downed his heavyweight opponent. Final score, Scots 55, Eagles 0.

Thursday night things were not so bright as the Scots suffered several setbacks at the hands of Chattanooga, being defeated 29-14.

Doug Cunningham's undefeated streak was snapped when he suffered a knee injury. Hopefully, he will be back in action before long. Ed Johnson sustained a separated shoulder and will be out for sometime. Also Gary Burd injured his ribs and sprained his neck in his match.

Matt Pacifico pinned his opponent, but in doing so, pulled a chest muscle. John Poore and Jim Batchler won decisions over their opponents.

Friday night the Scots came from behind to defeat a strong team from the University of Southwestern Louisiana. Weakened by injuries in the lighter weight divisions, the Maryville wrestlers emerged victorious after the last match.

Paul Naylor and Dan DiPetta struggled to a 5-5 tie, and John Poore followed, pinning his opponent, Walt Ragan, early in the second period.

Wrestling in the 134-pound class, Gary DeAlmo lost a close decision to USL's Dan Wilson. Bill Baxis, still not back in top form after an operation, lost to Mike Smith.

Geoff Hanahan handed Steve Kitchen a defeat in decision and an injured Gary Burd was victim to Bill Pethtel.

In an aggressive match, Brad Kehler pinned John Mikurs in the second period. Matt Pacifico, hampered by his injury, was dealt a defeat by Bryan Musfeldt.

Wrestling in the 190-pound class, Jim Batchler pinned Ed Matthews in the second period. With the score 20-21, Roger Reiter flattened Pat Manuel in the first period to serve the Scots' victory 26-21.

Tuesday night the Scots wrestled Western Carolina and Saturday night they tackle Chattanooga again.

Program Offers Experience In Human Services

Knoxville, Tenn.—(I.P.)-The College of Liberal Arts at the University of Tennessee has introduced a new program in human services which combines varied classroom work in a social science curriculum with out-of-the classroom field work.

The program will enable students to earn either a B.A. or B.S. degree in human services.

"We're not training people to solve a particular problem, but what we are trying to do is to prepare students so they can know themselves, so they can be perceptive to the environment around them," said Dr. Robert F. Kronick, director of the program.

He said the program offers students an opportunity for a liberal education with emphasis on human problems and how to solve them.

"This way the student can evaluate what he has gotten in the classroom. He can find out whether the theory we talk about is in fact the way it is in the real world."

The program offered two courses fall quarter within the Sociology Department and will begin offering its own courses winter quarter, Dr. Kronick said. It also will serve to organize courses from other departments into a coherent inter-disciplinary program, he said.

The program, as presently structured, will require the student to complete 12 hours of upper division credit in human services and, in addition to the group requirements of the College of Liberal Arts, will require three hours' credit from other departments in each of five topic areas.

The topic areas are culture and personality, social psychology, complex organizations, research and statistics, and urban society.

Dr. Kronick said it is hoped the students in human services can provice a needed service to the communities where they participate in field work outside the classroom.

Students will be able to earn up to 12 hours of credit through field work in appropriately organized and directed human service enterprises.

"This is the thing the students are screaming for, relevancy in education," Dr. Kronick concluded. "You can't get much more relevant than sending them out there to get first hand experience."

Highlanders Tour South

The Maryville College Concert Band begins its annual tour on March 12 for five days in New Orleans, Louisana. The band plays both high schools and colleges giving performance and listening experience as well as publicity for the college.

The forty-member organization will travel south by bus, holding two to three concerts per day for audiences of between five hundred and two thousand students. A tenative schedule is yet to be worked out. A definite evening concert will be played in Meridian, Mississippi, for the Meridian Junior College.

Music for concerts consists of a selection from the band's wide-ranging repertoire. Some of this music will preview at the band's winter CIV concert on February 12. Marches, classical and popular styles compose a mixture of the program.

The band, although provided with some funds, must raise a good portion of its own expenses. Doughnuts are the project for this year. These red and white striped boxes are already familar to campus residents.

Previous tours have ranged to Alabama, Washington, D.C., New Jersey, Delaware, Ohio, and Kentucky, exposing hundreds of prospective students to what Maryville has to offer. Anyone interested in joining the band during their concert season and on tour should contact Mr. Dan Stallings at the Fine Arts Center.

Hot Spring Seen

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to speak out against what I would term a blatant violatin of the most basic of a student's rights — the right to live.

I think that it is about time that the administration of this institution took a long, hard look at the very thing which keeps this school alive — the students. We are starving from lack of nutrition, and we are living in substandard, bug-infested housing which is both intolerable and undesirable. How can one honestly be expected to pursue studies when his stomach is aching from lack of food? And how can one be expected to be concerned with community issues and values when he is exhausted from a shortage of sleep, because the dorm was freezing the night before? And how can one be expected to participate in campus activities when he cannot even wash himself in clean facilities? How long can students tolerate this below-average living? The campus has long been in need of serious reform as far as living conditions are concerned.

The time has come. And the students will no longer remain silent. And their demands are not in the least unfair. We want only to be housed and fed in a fashion becoming a student. We want to live, not just exist in these disgraceful conditions!

The administration of this institution may take the next statement as either a warning or a threat: If something is not done promptly about the shameful conditions in which the students are forced to live, it's going to be a long, hot spring at Maryville College!!

Dribblers Go Up And Down

The roundballers, playing improved ball every game, split two games last week.

Tuesday, the Scots lost a tough game to Milligan. Milligan had a decided height advantage but in the end, free throws provided the margin of an 83-82 victory. The score was 44-43 for the Buffaloes at the half. They upped their margin to eleven points, but Scott Ross and Randy Schaurer sparked the rally which brought Maryville within one.

Dan McKinstry paced the Scots with 26 points, followed by Scott Ross with 18, Bill Postler with 16, Randy Schaurer with 14, and Mike Butler with 16.

Saturday, the Scots traveled to Dayton, Tennessee, to play the Bryan Lions. With Bill Postler getting 9 quick points, the Scots sprinted to a 12-4 lead. From that point the Scots built their lead, and by halftime the margin was 25 with the score standing at 58-33.

The second half saw Bryan close the gap somewhat, but they never got closer than 14 until the last two minutes. The Scots played very well with Postler rebounding along with Scott Ross. Randy Schaurer and Mike Butler guided the fast breaks very well.

Dan McKinstry tallied 38 to lead the Scots. Mike Butler had 22, Bill Postler 15, Randy Schaurer 9, Steve Ayers 3, and Dale Morse 4.

The Scots' record stands at 4-10, but things appear to be very much on the up swing.

Next Tuesday, Tusculum will be here at 7:30 p.m. to play the Scots. We hope everyone will turn out as the season begins to draw near its conclusion.

The schedule this week shows the Scots going to Virginia to play against Clinch Valley. Following the encounter with Tusculum, the Scots go to Harrogate, Tennessee, to tangle with the LMU Railsplitters.

Gripe Session Airs Opinions

The All-Class meeting held last Wednesday night immediately following supper dealt with three main topics — the food and dining room situation, the CIV requirement, and the poor conditions of the upper classmen dormitories, Memorial, Pearsons, and Carnegie.

The topic most students were concerned with was the food and dining room situation. The meeting started off with the question: "What do you think about the food situation?" and from there proceeded into a general gripe session including many aspects of the food service from carrots to peanut butter.

After it was well established that most students do feel a few major changes need to be made in the dining hall, Ward Brooks and George Boronow suggested waiting for the results of the evaluation to be made by a consultant who will be on campus soon, before taking unnecessary action.

The discussion moved on to the CIV requirement with Dr. Cartlidge presenting a new idea for the CIV program. His proposal was basically to have a committee made up of concerned, energetic, and creative individuals who would work towards direct involvement of college students in community issues and values. If the committee succeeds, he feels a program of this type would be far more beneficial than the system at hand. He left this proposal, and students discussed its pros and cons.

Final topic of discussion was the dormitory situation. Complaints included lack of pest control, water pressure, heat, and general repair. These complaints centered around the fact that these students pay as much as those living in the newer dormitories. Since little attention seems to be paid to the problems, the men in Carnegie and Memorial have extended an invitation to Dr. Copeland to spend some time living in the dorms.

Dining Hall Is Watched

Constructive measures are being taken to improve the dining hall services on campus. The dining hall sub-committee, an official committee of the All College Council, has been hard at work investigating the problems of the present dining hall services and seeking solutions to these problems.

The sub-committee has arranged to have a food consultant brought to evaluate the situation. She will visit the campus sometime within the next few weeks. To help her evaluation the sub-committee has drawn up a report on the problems of the present food service. This report, taken from student complaints and observations, compiles the areas of complaints and provides an outline for the consultant to investigate.

Areas suggested for investigation include: hours, food line, service, quality of food, inconsistency of menu, economy, the possibility of meal tickets, and the unprofessionalism of the present dining hall system. Under these headings, detailed areas of dissatisfaction are discussed to fully inform the consultant of the present situation.

In addition to furnishing the consultant with the report, the sub-committee will give the consultant a list of twenty-five students' names representing a cross-section of the student body. These students will be able to further aid the consultant with her investigation by answering any questions she might have and by giving their opinions of the food service. A list of these students' names will be posted prior to the consultant's arrival.

When the consultant's report has been submitted, it will be presented to the entire student body.

Van Cliburn Winner Appears At MC

Christina Ortiz, winner of the 1969 Van Cliburn International Piano Competition, will appear in a Performing Artists Concert at Maryville College Thursday, February 10, 8:15 p.m.

The youthful pianist has won acclaim in Paris, Germany, Brazil and the United States since winning the Van Cliburn competition when she was only 19 years old.

Miss Ortiz, who began piano study at the age of four and one-half, entered the Brazilian Conservatory of Music in Rio de Janeiro when she was only eight. When she appeared in public for the first time at the age of nine, she already promised a future of distinction.

When she was 15 Miss Ortiz won the first place in the Sixth National Piano Contest in Rio de Janeiro and received a fellowship for study sponsored by the French Government. She studied in Paris with the great French-Brazilian piano artist, Magda Tagliaferro. She has also studied with the renowned pianist, Rudolf Serkin, at Curtis Institute of Music.

Miss Ortiz has been praised for her exceptional technique. One critic said of her, "She plays with remarkable strength and vitality, as well as an unusual musical sense — maturity beyond her years."

For the Maryville concert Miss Ortiz will play 32 Variations by Beethoven, Variations Serieuses by Mendelssohn, Mephisto Waltz by Liszt and Carnaval, Opus 9 by Schumann.

Sinking Creek Film Festival Shown At CIV

By Alice Hook

A group of innovative short motion pictures with an average running time of five minutes in length will be next week's CIV program. Produced by award winning U.S. student and independent filmmakers, the films will be shown at 9:20 a.m. on February 9 by Mrs. Mickie Coleman, director of the annual Sinking Creek Film Celebration, Greeneville, Tennessee.

Sinking Creek, the widely recognized Tennessee film festival now in its third year, attracts entries from many states to its national competition. Celebration events, to be held April 27-29 on Tusculum College campus, will draw film buffs from regions far beyond Tennessee who will view and discuss as many as 100 motion pictures and meet invited filmmakers who know how they are made.

Films to be presented by Mrs. Coleman represent excellent examples of film artistry achieved on very low budgets. They cover various film genre including animation, cumentary, narrative and abstract styles. Her enthusiastic comments on what she considers "the most exciting gems of the motion picture world" have made her informal program a great favorite on college and high school campuses and at film seminars and art conferences.

A member of the Tennessee Arts Commission, Mrs. Coleman is founder of the Sinking Creek Film Celebration. In 1971, she was presented the Golden Phoenix Award by the Atlanta International Film Festival in recognition of her work in encouraging study of film as art and for her interest in films produced by young people.

Films to be shown in the program here were purchased from among the best entries of the 1970 and 1971 competitions and will be supplemented with a preview of unjudged 1972 entries. There were 215 entries from 29 states in the Sinking Creek Film Celebration competiton last spring. Mrs. Coleman expects twice that number for the third annual event this coming spring. This remarkable film project, the only one of its kind in the Southeast, is funded by the Greeneville Arts Guild, Tusculum College and its Student Government Association, and the Tennessee Arts Commission.

Surveilance Crops Up At Minnesota U.

Minneapolis, Minn. - (I.P.) - The new report issued by the Task Force on Military Surveillance at the University of Minnesota, a body composed of faculty, students, and a civil service staff member, differs sharply from a report issued last February by Eugene Eidenberg, assistant vice president for administration.

Headed by political science professor and department chairman Samuel Kirslov, the task force was appointed by President Malcolm Moos at the request of the University Senate. The report points out that the policy guiding police surveillance is a jointly drafted administrative-police document, which the task force found violated "at regular intervals" and "at the police's own initiative."

While the Eidenberg report concluded that more stringent enforcement of existing University policies would end most of the problems, the task force went several steps further.

"Excuses such as those outlined in the Eidenberg report (that no useful purpose would be served by holding anyone responsible) do not mitigate the fact that the administration does not live by its own rules," the report states, and that "accountability must start somewhere."

W. Donald Beatty, University recorder and director of the Office of Admissions and Records, is singled out for this role in allowing investigatory agents access to student files, in violation of a policy on student records adopted by the Board of Regents in 1968.

That policy holds that material in students' files, other than matters of public record, is confidential except under specifically defined conditions. The task force concurred with Eidenberg that for a 24-month period after the Regents issued the policy investigatory agents were still allowed access to student files on the basis of their credentials alone.

For that period the office was operating by a memo issued by Beatty which ordered that a full range of investigatory agents, from the FBI to military security to U.S. probation officers, when identified "are privileged to full access to all information without questions."

"Mr. Beatty," the report states, "no matter how sincerely, exercised bad judgment in reinterpreting the Regents' policy." Further, the report states that "clear unequivocal Regents' policies carefully considered should be obeyed by administrators as well as faculty and students."

The task force found that in the vast majority of cases, agents were checking student files for employment purposes, and could have produced proof that the student had authorized the opening of his file.

However, with respect to the FBI, the task force found the "reverse to be most probable: that the majority of such use must have been in the absence of possible waivers" based on evidence developed on the national level. Evidence was not available because no one from the FBI consented to appear before the task force.

Dorm Meeting Held On Food Situation

Last Wednesday (Jan. 26) dorm meetings were held in each dorm to discuss the problems of dormitory conditions and food.

The meeting in Carnegie was not limited to these points. After a discussion of the all-class meeting which had taken place earlier in the evening the meeting was opened up for people to gripe about anything that was bugging them. These complaints were added to a list which is to be presented to the All-College Council and Dr. Copeland.

The proposed food strike was also discussed, and it was announced that the strike had been postponed pending action by the ACC.

Besides the questions of food and living conditions, visitation and drinking were discussed. It was decided that inquiries would be made as to why escorting is necessary and why there is no place to drink on campus.

Oratorio Rehearsals Begin

The Community-College Chorus will begin rehearsals Monday, February 7 for "The Story of Abraham," according to the director, Dr. Harry H. Harter.

The oratorio, which was postponed last fall because of a strike situation involving the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, has been rescheduled for May 18 and 19.

The Chorus will rehearse at 7:15 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center rooms 101 and 102 on the Maryville campus.

Editorial

Activism or Apathy?

Last Wednesday and Thursday nights, Maryville College saw a series of student meetings to discuss the most vital issues at the College. It's time to examine the results of these meetings.

The most outstanding event coming out of these get-togethers was the tenative decision to strike the food service. This decision seems to have been made late Wednesday night. It was then foisted on the rest of the student body by a self-seeking clique of pseudo-radicals.

It's unfortunate that these people, bloated with their own self-importance, missed the irony of this situation. The language used to arouse support for this strike is much the same as the peace movement. The American that witnessed the tragedies of My Lai and Kent State now witnesses a food strike at Maryville College. There is an incongruity between the Movement and the food strike that smacks of insincerity. The high ideals of the Peace Movement are being dragged in the gutter to satisfy the selfish ends of a few. Such a debasement is a travesty and cannot go unnoticed.

A second aspect of this irony is the undisguised materialism involved in a food strike. If Reich's Conscious 3 is the tone of our generation, then Maryville's students rate about Consciousness 2.25 with out concern with such universals as food. If the creiteria for activism is the quality of peanut butter, perhaps we'd do well to ignore the activists.

The food services at MC need upgrading. With the coming of a food consultant, it would appear that improvement is also coming. But to expect an immediate switch from one food system to another within a week is unrealistic.

A second issue steming from last week's meeting is student disillusionment with the All-College Council. Too many students feel that the ACC is nothing more than a rubberstamp for the President's decisions. That's possible. But the question we'd ask the ACC's critics is how many hours did you spend in a committee last week?

The governing structure at MC is a particapatory body. Particapatory government requires participation. Too few people are willing to spend the time it takes to make it work. Too many people are willing to pass the burden of responsibility to someone else and then sit back and criticize. This type of irresponsible attitude was eptiomized at last Wednesday's meeting when one student commented, "We haven't gotten beer on campus...the ACC's a rubberstamp."

Change comes through a concerted effort. The channels for a change are there. Perhaps more personal responsibility would make them work.

Letters to the Editor

Steppenwolf VS R.M.T.

Dear Editor:

In response to Tom Coe's article written on January 14, 1972 concerning music in general and Steppenwolf in specific, we would like to dispute your criticisms. We find it extrememly hard to believe that there is no correlation between talent and success in Steppenwolf's music. In their five years of popularity they have cut nine albums, two of which have been million sellers. Certainly no one can doubt the talent illustrated in "Born to be Wild", "Magic Carpet Ride", "Pusher," and "Rock Me". We believe this talent can be versified in the fact that two of these songs, "Born to be Wild" and "Rock Me", have been used as theme songs in two movies.

After we saw Steppenwolf in concert in Knoxville last spring, we came to the conclusion that Steppenwolf has a style unique unto themselves which can not be irresponsibly mislabeled as "packaging." We do not believe that is is beneficial to promote one band (Rich Mountain Tower) by the mistreatment of another. Although we do not negate the right of opinionated writing, we do feel a necessity for more responsible journalism. We hope this editorial is enlightening!

Sincerely,
John Cochran

Other Side Of Food Situation

Dear Editor:

Recently, numerous complaints have been hurled against Miss Ware and her food services, and against food administration resources. Many recent ECHO articles indicate a great need of students to know more about the inner workings of our food service.

In the first place, what do the critics know about the facts? According to information furnished by Miss Ware, many rummors regarding antiquated equipment, lack of fresh and wholesome foods, and budget deficiencies are often overly exaggerated. The equipment is only eight to ten years old and is considered adequate (though she would appreciate an extra over and an extra fryer). All salads and other prepared dishes are made ready no more than a few hours before the disignated meal, and the budget is not such a restricting factor in food selection as might be imagined–the meat for one meal alone often averages $400 to $900 in cost. All the food we eat comes from reputable outlets such as Magnolia, Lay's, Pet, etc.

Secondly, Miss Ware has welcomed and honored suggestions from students regarding food selection. She has stated that other foods (from what we eat) could be obtained. How many critics have taken this offer seriously?

Another point–how many have stopped to consider the complications of a dietician's job? A typical day for Miss Ware (Weekends being exceptions) begins at about 5:40 a.m. Through a thirteen-hour day, two overlapping shifts of men are

My Back Pages

Madman Across The Pontchantrain

BY TOM COE

New Products Editor

We moved out on Tuesday before the sun, and I guess I was alseep when it did arrive. Soon those Alabama and Mississippi miles were clicking off looking so much the same. Scrubby pines and swampy worthless land — you can see some poor folks' shacks; but mainly the Interstate Highway System does an effective job of insulating you against seeing and-or feeling. The pines don't let you see through to the people. When you can, you're going 75 MPH in your steel and rubber projectile, thereby missing the heat and the smell of humanity. Once in a while we could gather the stench of some paper mill but even that we outran, not having to live with it.

We crossed Lake Pontchartrain over what somebody said was the world's longest bridge (who cares?) and settled on what one postcard called the Paris of America, New Orleans. It is, perhaps, one of the most decent cities in the U.S., remarkably clean and aesthetically pleasing in a relative sort of way with its broad boulevards and overhanging trees. And the public transit system, still employing trolleys, is cheap, efficient, and clean. The air is cleaner than in most cities; it is a nice place to get up early in.

But beneath the surface this place is much closer to the American Dream. It is a city of bacchanal spirit; liquor is available anywhere, anytime, and there seem to be no laws against public drunkenness. The American Dream of "freedom," i.e. license, is all there as one sees wide-eyed adults who should know better staring unmoved at the strippers, exotic dancers, and female impersonators. Bourbon Street is the Heart of the Dream, and as one moves down the street, the hawkers open the doors to the joints and urge you to come in and see Sally Sexton or the Cat-Boy (Don't be cheap and peep!") Some places have windows above the street where the legs of a naked girl on a swing periodically pass through. Looking at that, the word that came through to me was brutal. The whole place is just a brutalization of sex. And it is less erotic than sleeping in a pool of warm oatmeal. Even more disheartening is the fact that the female impersonators are better looking than the real thing.

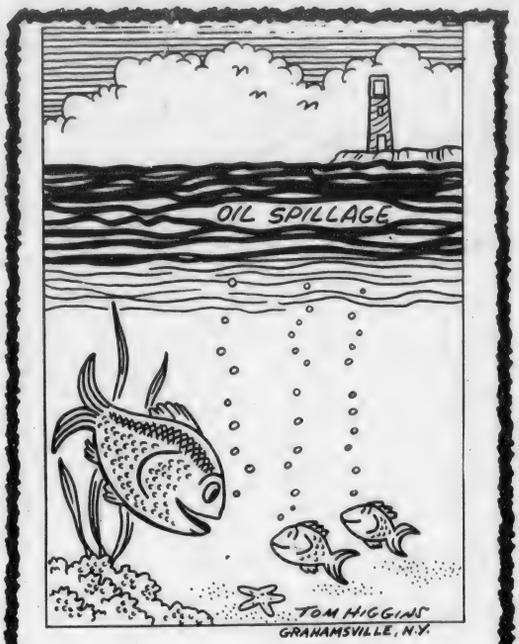
The conference on Behavior Modification was another story. It might have surprised some people to hear the behaviorists talking about restoring human freedom and dignity to mental patients. The conference had to be seen in juxtaposition to the reality of fear and loathing in New Orelans, a city with more policemen than one can imagine. To walk the streets of the French Quarter at 2 a.m. one takes on a defensive posture — you put your wallet in your front pocket to protect against Willie the Dip, and you begin thinking of your umbrella as a possible weapon. Life is not fun in that kind of situation. No wonder half of the hospital beds in the U.S. are taken by mental patients.

The city is the place to see the broken and twisted lives of human beings; here are the wages of our social sin. B. F. Skinner is seeing these same things and attempting to help us make our lives richer, fuller, and yes, Virginia, even more meaningful. As Dr. Robert Wahler of U.T. addressd the convention, he complained that the label "humanistic" has been given to one narrow field of psychology (notably populated by Rollo May, Erich Fromm, and the like). He feels that "humanistic" applies to the behaviorist just as well. Too many people have half-cocked ideas about Skinner and Behaviorism; they haven't attempted to understand what the field is saying about human beings.

When you walk the city streets and see the destruction of sex and beauty or feel the fear of other human beings attacking you or see the broken down drifter who hitch-hiked in from Jersey or look at the eyes of the shoe shine boy who hustles with a tap-dance and a quickly fading smile, when you see some guy so stretched on drugs that he can hardly walk or a drunken tourist type dancing in the mad street of Bourbon, you can't help but think that we could do better as a society. You can't help but consider the defective social environment that we all must deal with.

Christians Thrive At MC

By Wiley Rutledge



If one were using cliches, one might say that the Jesus movement has reached Maryville College. This means quite simply that there has sprung up on campus a group of dedicated Christians. You may have seen or talked to one of them because they are not afraid to talk about their faith; in fact they are proud of it.

The group numbers anywhere from 75 to 100 members and includes residents from every dorm. They come together in small groups in their own dorms to pray on weekday mornings, and the entire group meets together on Tuesday nights in the Little Chapel for worship. These meetings are at 9:30, and everyone is cordially invited to attend.

This group has one overriding ambition; to spread the gospel in a personal way. They stress the personal relationship with Jesus Christ as, the only way to happiness and salvation. They also stress the simplicity of obtaining such a relationship.

This does not mean that they are evangelists. They approach people on a one to one basis, talking informally about their faith, "sharing" it with the other person. They don't hit you over the head with it.

They also stress that they are not a clique; anyone is welcome to join them. Those interested in finding out more about this group should contact Ted Stewart in Carnegie.

Yes-You May Go Out And Play, But-Don't You Dare G Near The Surface!"

Jim Colpitts Takes Music And Runs

By LEIGH THORINGTON

The combination of distance running and playing a piano may seem strange to some, but Jim Colpitts, a new MC music major, says that staying in top condition makes long hours of practice easier. Jim ran in the Boston Marathon in 1967 and placed twenty-fourth out of 601 entries. To get in top shape he ran about a hundred miles a week.

Twenty-nine years old, Jim has a B.A. in German from Washington State University and has spent a year in Germany. A stint in the Air Force put him in Thailand for a year where he had a hard time adjusting to the strict punctuality.

Jim plans to "go as far as I can on the piano." He says a student must make a habit out of practice and practice correctly and sensibly. He came to MC because of its fine music program where he feels that he is getting the best possible instruction. Future plans include performing and teaching, but Jim isn't sure in what proportions.

To run 26 miles, 385 yards in 2 hours, 31 minutes and 4 seconds burns a lot of energy. Music majors, such as Jim Colpitts, will say that it also takes a lot of energy to practice a piano.

Campus Crusade Meets At MC

Friday, January 21, found MC host to members of the Campus Crusade for Christ from UT.

The visitors conducted a Leadership-Training Conference. The Friday night registration signalled the opening of the conference. Meetings were held in the Sutton Science Center. Friday night lectures and a seminar were held as students divided into smaller groups.

Saturday morning was a continuation of the lectures and classes. On Saturday afternoon, the participants shared their beliefs. The conference ended Saturday night as people shared with one another personal experiences.

The conference mainly emphasized the need for Christians to live a Spirit-filled life and to share their faith. A crowd larger than expected turned out for the meetings.

Students Paint on Bodies- Not Canvas

By Wiley Rutledge

In case any of you saw a man with a green face at lunch last Thursday, don't worry, we haven't been invaded from outer space. That was our own Mr. Schoen. He had taken part in a demonstration of body painting for the Fine Arts course.

The demonstration covered several aspects of body painting, from such things as the paint worn by American Indians and make-up used in the theatre down to painting portraits of people by actually having them lie down on the canvas. People themselves were also used as "canvas" in some cases.

The demonstration was conducted by Mrs. Bianco and Mr. Jones and involved several students. At the end of the hour several students who had participated in the demonstrations came back out on stage and began painting each other. Invitations were extended to anyone in the class who wanted to participate. A few went up to paint, but no one volunteered to be painted.

Reaction To Choros

By KATHY MEIER

In a summation of last week's CIV, the Macalester Drama Choros, I'd like to mention the goal of such a program. Many of our CIV lectures serve the purpose of instruction such as the social theories of Brooks Hayes. The Black theater members from Atlanta represent the use of shock tactics in an effort to electrify apathetic students.

The Macalester Choros doesn't fit into either category. The program was a show, not a presentation of information. The selections recited were chosen because they reflected life, our life, as we see it. The Choros members held a mirror to life and acted what they saw there in a satirical, humorous fashion.

In many ways the selections about the Black man's pain and the absurdity of war was an affirmation of what most of us college students see reflected in our own lives. The Macalester Choros didn't pummel, shock, or put to sleep. Most of the listeners heard an inner voice chanting in unity with their fellow students on stage.

managed in food preparation, not to mention control over student help, menu-planning, bill-managing, and the feeding of extraneous groups of people. Even though she is paid, how many of us work thirteen-hour days?

Whatever the amount of blood, sweat, and tears, the complaints still keep rolling in. Many grievances come from those who are so provincial in their tastes that they refuse to try anything new. Others come from those who complain about the nutritional quality of the meals. Some of these complaints are quite legitimate. The person who takes only a slug of patatoes and a dessert for a meal is justified in complaining of poorly balanced meals. The question is, to whom should he direct his complaints? Still others complain of not enough meal selection, but how many students get such a wide variety of different foods at home?

There are those of us who do appreciate Miss Ware's efforts, even though they do not always agree upon certain food selections or preparations. The times when Maryville College will hire a catering service and when students leave M. C. and cook on their own will soon arrive. But while students are expected to eat designated food at a designated place, grievances of almost any type may be expected to arise, regardless of Miss Ware, the administration, or a catering service.

Nature's Child

I am nature's child, born of the wind
and as restless as the sea.
I am like an eagle free,
riding on the open sky,
to discover the ever increasing horizons of life.
I am like the bear untamed, wilder than any roaring river.
I am like the tiger mighty,
evasive of the cage secure,
and making my home in the forest wild.
I am like the leopard swift,
a cat without a home,
a hunter whose only prey
is life.
The paths I travel are my own, carved by a craving for a quest—a search to see the world
unfenced and free
in all its glory.

Poetry Ponders Questions Of Self

Who knows what tomorrow will bring?
As I sit here and pause to think,
I see a world of strange, strange things-
Could they really be?

When man begins to tinker with his brain,
Where will he go from there?
He touches it with electric probes
That change his state of mind.

Of course, this can bring pleasure,
Or pain, or laughter, or tears,
But are they real?
Yes, they are, you say.

But how can they be real,
When there is nothing to make him glad
Nor anything to bring his tears,
Just a tiny touch of his brain.

In life, there are so many things
That people are able to feel,
Things like playing on a beach on a warm summer day,
Or sledding in the snow.

Are you willing to have these things
Without the joy of living them?

Tomorrow we may move into a world
That is quite different than it is today.
For instance, man may be hooked to computers,
Quite a new way to think!

Can you imagine a day to come
When there are no teachers nor schools?
A first grade child could be attached
To a computer to learn his counting rules.

Or how about a teenage girl
Whose parents just don't understand?
Could she be wired so to feel
Them giving a helping hand?

It seems to me, as I think,
That much more is involved.
Who would want to go through life,
Not living it at all?

And if a person could always be happy,
Why should he want to change—
But how can he know what real happiness is Without knowing sadness too?

But who knows for sure—
Maybe someday these things will be.

I have heard so much talk about being free,
Free to choose, free to do, free to say-
But are we really free,
Free in any way?

When I look at myself,
I say, "Sure I'm free,"
I'm not a slave, nor a prisoner,
Nor am I tied in chains.

But then I must realize,
That in every single move I make,
I am in some way touching
Someone besides myself.

Even so, I may still act as I choose.
Now, if I imagine, in my brain,
An electric probe that could rule me,
I'd not have a choice.

If I wanted to shake my head,
But it wanted me to hop on one foot,
I would lose my will-power,
And I would only be able to hop.

Perhaps we are not so free as we'd like to be
But at least we do have some control.

Maybe I sound too pessimistic,
That's because I like life,
And enjoy living it
Through every minute.

People have made it for thousands of years
Without picking inside their brains.
If it's time for that to start,
I wonder how far it'll go.

Perhaps it might be used for aiding the sick,
This would be cause to move on,
Or maybe to the extent of taking pleasure trips,
Simply by touching the point to remove all cares.

Man is always curious,
And won't stop searching
Until he dies in trying
To find the truth about his world.

Sitting here, and pausing to think,
I am frightened and awed,
But at the same time,
Searching too, to know what is really there.

Perhaps I will never learn that truth,
But someday, somewhere — someone will find it.

Dribblers Gain Bounce

With two victories last week, the roundballers upped their season mark to 6-10-0.

Tuesday, the Scots ventured to Chattanooga to play Covenant College. The Scots led most of the way but could never put the game out of reach. They finally won, 86-85.

Bill Postler had 18 points and 22 rebounds and played a fine game for the Scots. Dan McKinstry tallied 38 points and Mike Butler added 22. Leading the fastbreak was Randy Schaurer with 6 points. Scott Ross added another 5 points, and plucked off 10 rebounds.

Saturday, the Scots traveled to Wise, Virginia, to play the Clinch Valley Cavaliers. The Scots jumped off to an early 6 point margin, but by halftime a cold shooting stretch had them trailing by two.

The second half opened with the Cavaliers extending their lead to 10 points. At this point, Larry Brown entered the line-up, though noticeably crippled. The Scots began to run with Brown getting the rebounds. Soon the score was tied. From then on Brown took over and powered the Scots to an 89-95 victory.

Brown finished with 19 points and 15 rebounds. Dan McKinstry had 29 points, Mike Butler 12, Scott Ross 3, Randy Schaurer 11, and Bill Postler 15.

Saturday, the Scots go to Birmingham to play a very tough Birmingham-Southern. Tuesday, the Scots will be back home at 7:30 against the College of Cleveland, Tennessee.

Injuries Change View Of Wrestling season

The Maryville College wrestling team, after an excellent beginning has been hit with a rash of injuries which may make a big change in the remaining matches of the 1971-72 wrestling season.

Captain Ed Johnson was injured, possibly for the remainder of the season, along with several other Scots. One hundred and thrity-four pounder Doug Cunningham is out of the lineup and Gary Burd and Matt Pacifico are wrestling with injuries.

A shut-out of the Carson-Newman club team, a come from behind victory over the University of Southwestern Louisiana - the meet depending on a least a pin and a decision in the last two weight class - and the wrestlers coming through with two pins to win the match. A tough game was to a very good Appalachian State team which could have gone the Scots way. A lot of interesting matches remain plus the SEIWA tournament to be neld at Maryville College in February. The Scots hope for the return of the injured so they can maintain the winning percentage.

Wrestlers Give Up Two Matches

The Scots wrestling team, dropped two matches last week.

Tuesday night the Scots fell to the Western Carolina squad 32-11.

Paul Naylor battled UWC's Terry Short to a tie, and John Poore won a 12-7 decision over Jim Blair.

Wrestling in the 134 class, Gary DeAlmo made a good showing against John Simpson.

Brad Kehler also won a decision over his opponent, as did Roger Reiter.

In this match, Gary Burd and Mat Pacifico agravated injuries sustained in a previous match.

Saturday, the Scots fell to U-T Cattanooga 33-11, facing them for the second time this eason.

Paul Naylor won his match by default, when Vic Hood sustained an injury. John Poore won a decision over his opponent.

Steve DeWitt and Steve Timpano entered the line-up and fought-valliantly against the Moccasins.

Roger Reiter won a decision in the 190 pound class, and the Scots forfeited the heavy weight division, as Jim Batchler wrestled at 177 pounds.

Doug Cunningham and Mat Pacifico will be back in action by the SEIWA tournament. However, both Gary Burd and Ed Johnson may be out for the season.

Tuesday, the Scots traveled to the University of North Carolina at Charlotte and to Western Carolina on Wednesday. Saturday night Sewanee visits Maryville.

Emory Compresses BA

Atlanta, Ga.—(I.P.)- The faculty of Emory College has approved a new program which will permit Emory College students to complete a bachelors degree in fewer than four academic years, Dean John C. Stephens Jr. has announced.

The new program combines the features of advanced placement, petitioned examinations and course overloads to permit a student to save a full year from the usual four-year program.

The program provides that academic credit can be obtained for individual courses on the basis of scores made on the College Board Advanced Placement Tests or the College Level Examination Program.

In addition a student is permitted to take a petitioned exam in any course in which he feels he has sufficient background for exemption. If he achieves a grade of C or better on the exam, he will receive full academic credit for the course. Unsatisfactory grades will not be entered on the student's transcript.

An unexpected child can really rock the cradle.

Don't get us wrong.

We think children are priceless, too.

But if a child happens to be unplanned, it could mean financial pressures.

You see, a child is not just an extra mouth to feed. It's a whole other life to be provided for.

And that takes money.

Fact is, the cost to raise a child to age 18 ran around $25,000 (more for some, less for others, dependent on family income) in the mid-60's. And what inflation will do to the cost in the future is anybody's guess!

But no matter what the amount is, it's easy to see that the cost of rearing children is an economic reality one can't ignore. That is, if each child is to get what he or she deserves.

Which is why we advise every couple to plan how many children they want. And when they want them: when they can be a welcome addition rather than an accidental burden.

Because, as we all know, it's awfully hard to give with a full heart when one's pockets are empty.

Messiah Presented The College-Community Chorus signs during the 39th presentation of the Messiah

Many Personalities Put Messiah Together

Sunday afternoon, January 30, marked the 39th annual presentation of the "Messiah" at Maryville College. There are few parts of Maryville College's program tht so completely involve not only people from Maryville College, but musicians from the Maryville-Knoxville areas as well. Many people come together and work together to make the production a success.

Participants in the orchestra come from many varied backgrounds. Mr. and Mrs. James Marable, who play cello and violin, are free-lance musicians who play in various orchestras, including the Cookeville, Chattanooga, and Kingsport Symphony Orchestras. Thev are also members of the Kull-Marable-Schoen Quartet. Visiting musicians from the Knoxville Symphony Orchestra include Phyllis Steen, cellist, who is in charge of the strings program in the Knoxville public schools; Jacinta Howard, and Betsy Wheeler, both violists.

Many of those who participate are alumnae, faculty of the college, and relatives of the faculty. In addition, many young musicians perform who are junior high school age and who have had experience performing. Some are sons and daughters of the faculty members.

Some of the listeners are interesting also. Many bring their "Messiah" scores and follow along with the music. Some chorus members mav remember in particular a man who regularly attends the production and who not only follows his score, but also goes through the motions of conducting from his seat in the audience. One wonders what his background may have been!

Famous Author Will Speak At CIV

On February 16, at CIV, the Maryville College Community will have opportunity to hear from one of the foremost writers of the Great Smoky Mountains area. She is the author of such novels as The Far Family and The Tall Woman. Together with her husband, James R. Stokely, she has produced other books, including The French Broad, for which they share the Thomas Wolfe Memorial Trophy of 1955, and Neither Black Nor White for which they were awarded the Khillman Award in 1958. Miss Dykeman has contributed to the Encyclopedia Britannica, Reader's Digest, New York Times Magazine, and many other publications. She writes a column for the Knoxville News-Sentinel, and her book reviews appear in the Courier and the Chattanooga Times. Besides her duties as a housewife and a writer Wilma Dykeman also takes the time to lecture at colleges and universities and for various civic, religious, and social organizations.

Costs Is Topic of Town Meeting

A town hall meeting was held last Thursday night in the theatre. Ward Brooks presented the following figures concerning the MC budget:

Endowment (invested)	$4,000,000
Income (interest)	222,000
student tuition and fees	1,125,000
Dining hall	357,000
Dorms	281,000
Total student income	$1,763,000
Budget for this year	$2,807,000
Fees	$1,763,000
Endowment income (interest)	222,000
Gifts	250,000
Federal grants	236,000
Total	$2,471,000

Dr. Copeland announced that this year we would receive no money from the Presbyterian Board of Missions and $3000.00 from the Synod. However, we do get some contributions because of our affiliation.

In answer to a student's question, it was stated that no plans are being made for the renovation of the old men's dorms nor the building of new ones, despite the projected increase in enrollment next year. Nor is there a planned increase in faculty. Dr. Willey announced that at present there is an approximate ratio of 14½ students to each professor.

Also in answer to questions, Colonel Taylor said, and was backed up by professors, that MC's academic standards have in no way been lowered.

Concerning the difference in cost between new and old men's dorm despite the varying living conditions, Dr. Copeland said that most men lived in a new dorm at least one year and that they are probably undercharging for the new dorm rooms as well as overcharging for old ones.

ACC Discusses Food Service

The proposed discussion of the intellectual atmosphere on campus did not take place at the Feb. 2 All-College Council meeting. Instead the meeting opened with a discussion of the ever-controversial food at MC. George Boronow read a compilation of student complaints which are to be presented to the food consultant for investigation. George also announced that a list of twenty-five students, carefully selected as a cross-section, would be given to Mrs. Moore, the consultant, if she wished to talk over the problem with students.

After some debate it was decided that small changes in the food service would be attempted right after Mrs. Moore's visit on Monday.

Another delaying factor was a report from the January Meetings committee given by Chaplain Harrison and Doug Chase. Statistically at least, the meetings were successful.

Dr. Willey announced that the Academic committee is projecting a new class, English 104, titled "Fundamentals of English Usage." It would more or less take the place of English lab and be a prerequisite to English 105 for freshman deficient in the subject. A final decision on this was postponed for further study.

The planned meeting concerning attitudes on campus has been postponed until Feb. 16 when it is again hoped that all concerned students will attend.

MC Hosts SEIWA

Friday and Saturday, Maryville College will host the Southeastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association tournament.

Eight of the eleven conference members will participate in the tourney. Going into the competition, Auburn and UT-Chattanooga are favored.

They won't have an easy time of it though. The Scots, as well as UT-Martin, should make good showings.

Also entered in the tourney are Georgia Tech, Morehead State, and Sewanee. Defending champion L.S.U. could not participate. UT and Alabama chose not to compete.

Admission for MC students, staff and faculty is $.75 a session or a $1.50 for the entire tournament. Other students will pay $1.00 each session or $2.50 for all three. Adults' admission is $1.50 each or $3.50 for all sessions.

Editorial

Dorms Lead To Problems

Among the various inequalities at Maryville College, the dormitory situation has been the topic of discussion lately. It's apparent that the living conditions of the newer dorms and Persons, Carnegie and Memorial are not equal. This situation needs remedying as much as possible with the older structures.

There's been a great deal of talk of the intellectual environment at MC. One of the greatest factors contributing to a lack of it is the living conditions in the older dormitories. Noise and overcrowding, while present in all dormitories, are greatly multiplied in the older residences. These problems gear the intellectual environment to the lowest common non denominator.

One of the most blatant inequalities in MC's residence is financial. At present, all students pay a standard rate for room. With the obvious lack of equal services, a standard fee is both inequal and unacceptable.

The rationale for standard rates, as we understand, it is partly a generation theory. Each student goes through a four year cycle by living in a new dorm as a freshman. Then, sophomores are dumped into the older dorms until they wind up enjoying the ecstasies of senior living. Unfortunately, very few people complete this cycle.

A second explanation for a standard rate is that students don't really pay for the room, only the bed. Considering some of the furniture in Carnegie we'd suggest lowering the rates to 25 cents a night to be competitive with other flop houses.

With all the problems of the older dormitories steps need to be taken to remedy them. One such step might be a complete renovation. Another might be graduated rates based on some sort of property assessment.

Regardless of the particular solution, one must come. To continue ignoring the living conditions present in older dormitories is to provoke other crisis situations.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

A lot of concern over the contents of the yearbook has been expressed lately. The following "state of the yearbook" message does hereby override any previous rumors:

1. Seniors: Arrangements are being made for your individual, portrait type pictures to be taken within the next two weeks.

2. Underclassmen: The suggestion was made at the Communications Committee meeting on Monday to take group pictures by dorm floor.

3. Organizations: The remaining organization picturess are being taken this week.

4. Athletics: A sports section in accordance with the Athletic Department request is being included in the book.

5. Faculty: Pictures are now being taken for this section.

6. Introcuction: With this section, the yearbook hopes to present an artistic, accurate look at the 1972 college student. An understanding of the year and the community is the aim of the staff.

If there are any questions please contact Tim Hodge, Box 2738.

My Back Pages

Joyful Noise: Bangla Desh

BY TOM COE

New Products Editor

George Harrison used to be the silent partner of the Beatles. John and Paul were the acknowledged leaders, Ringo the clown. George was hiding back there somewhere behind the amps, rarely looking up from his work. Rock and roll and George were both still in their adolescent stages then. But we are all older now.

Jon Landon has called The Concert for Bangla Desh "rock reaching for its manhood." What we have now is Gentleman George in his white suit bringing his friends for a magnificent event. Rock musicians are taking up their responsibility, saying, "This is something that we can do, in our own way, for these people." Harrison sings:

My friend came to me,
With sadness in his eyes,
He told me that he wanted help,
Before his country died,
Although I couldn't feel the pain,
I know I'd have to try,
Now I'm asking all of you
To help us save some lives.

The significance of the event is clear. Just as George is no longer the clean shaven little guitar player from Liverpool but a gentleman of the world, rock has grown up too.

The audience has a tremendous time on this record. Somehow, at first, that seemed incongruous with the suffering of the people of Bangla Desh but the feeling of the album is not one of abandon and release but one of overwhelming joy. It comes closest to being an ecstatic religious event. A joyful noise is made to the Lord. As Landon notes, the show is brought off as enjoyable but serious because it is presented with " . . . honesty, dignity, . . . maturity . . . (and) self-respect . . ." on the part of both the audience and the musicians.

This is more than a concert, more than an album; it is an event. The thing signifies all the values that this generation has said it stands for. It gives more than mere lip service but stands tall with taste, dignity, and responsibility; it may be rock and roll at its best in that it goes beyond music and emotion to a place in the world at large. This album is a symbol of love and justice, humanity, and brotherhood but most of all, hope and faith.

Catch Me If You Can

Chase me through moments of stolen time, in vallies of grassy green and cities of side walk shops.
Try to catch my thoughts with yours and let them meet
With memories pleasant and happy plans.
Try to catch my heart and let each heart beat feel each part of life we live and the part of Heaven that is ours.
Chase me with wings of wind on hills of scented pine, over lakes of sky blue waters.
The freedom I found in solitude will mushroom into a monarch, like from the sleepy catepillar, and fly to unknown thresholds when the chase is done.
And we, with wings of golden buttercups, will turn home ward bound and flow in harmony down the river, known as life.

Odes to Classes

"Columbus sailed the ocean blue and discovered the Preposition too."
The combination of English and History
To me shall always be a mystery.
Did Columbus discover the Predicate Noun?
Or did a Conjugation land upon dry ground?
Sir Isaac Noun did see the apple from the tree,
And discovered Apostrophy.

An Ode to Philosophy

O God, why could Thou not be one instead of Holy Ghost and Son.
As philosophers wonder and students sleep,
The topic of Savior is just too deep.
Tillich exclaimed and Clement too,
The relevance of Trinity, not mentioning you're a Jew.
Are you one God or are you three?
When asked on the midterm, that will end me.

Where Were You When The Lights Went Out?

"Oh, how spooky!" "Isn't it weird?" "Where's my flashlight?" These phrases and others exploded all at once on Thursday night about 9:40. A power failure left most of Maryville dark for about 30 minutes. No doubt each person has his own funny story.

In Dorm I, auxiliary power fed the hall lights. Somebody moved her typewriter out in the hall. The term paper must go on!

Of course no one thought of studying by candlelight, but gin rummy games abounded.

One group of girls had ordered supper from Jerry's. They panicked when the power failed soon before the delivery at 10:00 P.M. Their stomachs growling, the hungry girls rejoiced when the power was restored.

I'm sure the dining hall breakfast crew wound up their nonelectric alarm clocks. Those who had A hour were envisioning telling the Professor that they had gone to bed and didn't know there was a power failure.

One girl was nearly hysterical and kept repeating "Oh, how spooky. The whole town is dark. I'm scared. Oh, how spooky . . .

After the initial shock, however, everyone found the blackout exciting. No doubt some of the luckier people had someone to be romantic with. At any rate, life returned to normal, except that matchbooks are now in conspicious places all over campus.

Civilization Films Reviewed

If you need something to do with your Monday nights that is entertaining and educational, or if you just want a good way to get some more CIV credit, now you can do it. The highly acclaimed series "Civilisation" is being shown in the Theatre at 7:00 every Monday night..

The series is a personal view of history by Sir Kenneth Clark, noted English historian, and takes the form of showing the art and artifacts of a certain period, with commentary by Mr. Clark. It has already been shown twice on the NET television network and both times was very successful.

The films themselves are very well done. They show the best of the art of a particular period, instead of concentrating on a lecture format. The commentary that is coupled with the art makes the period come alive for the viewer. Mr. Clark does not talk down to the viewer; his attitude is simply a conversational one, and he presents his material in a very good format.

All in all, the "Civilisation" series is well worth the time of anyone, whether or not they have something else to do. CIV credits are being given for any four of the films attended, and they will be shown every Monday until May 1, except for March 6 and March 13.

MC Concert Band Gives Concert

The Maryville College Concert Band presents its annual winter concert Saturday night, February 12, at 8:15 p.m. in the chapel. The performance will carry CIV credit and will feature the forty-five member organization under the direction of Mr. Dan Stallings.

Music for band will consist of two organ works and two dance numbers. Voluntary VIII and Variations on "America" by Charles Ives are both transcribed for band from keyboard organ works. "Suite of Old Aerican Dances" by Robert Russell Bennett is one of the most popular of concert pieces designed especially for band. Its sections incorporate many familiar American dance rhythms.

The final selection is "Terpsimetrics" by Donald White, a modern dance number choreographed by the Van Metre School of Dance and using both community and college participants.

Suggestions Made For Flu Fun

By Wiley Rutledge

Since the flu has hit MC so hard, it seems only fair to give those who are sick some suggestions which might make their time in bed a little happier, so here are a few ideas for spending your time recovering.

First, you can try to frustrate your professors by trying to get as many people in your classes as you can sick. The goal of this is to try to get at least one class down to one person, so the professor has to teach to one person.

You can drive your roommate into a state of panic the first time he (or she) finds you in bed by becoming as pale as you can and groaning a lot. Maybe it'll look like you have a fatal disease.

When people start asking what happened to you, you can have the rumor spread that you went away on safari and drowned in a mud puddle.

You can have somebody waiting on you by threatening to roll over and die unless you get a hamburger from the Student Center right away.

If you're a girl you can scare any guy to death by screaming every time there is one on the floor. Just have a fit about the fact that you're not dressed.

You can get good grades for the rest of the term by threatening to have a relapse and pass out in class.

But most of all, you can get well in a hurry. Hope this look at the lighter side of the flu has helped the process.

World Leaders Hold Workshop At MC

On February 25 and 26 two world leaders will be on the Maryville College campus conducting a workshop on "Economic Exploitation in the Americas." Both are Episcopal priests and have lived in the Dominican Republic. The Rev. William Wipfler is presently the Director for Mission in the Latin America Department of the National Council of Churches. Rev. Phillip Wheaton is with the Ecumenical Program for Intercommunication and Action in Washington, D.C. This workshop is being sponsored by the Social Concerns Committee of the Maryville District of the Holston Conference of the United Methodist Church and the World Concerns Committee of Maryville College.

The workshop will have a varied format including the film, "Chile Puts on Long Pants"; a case study role-play, "The Kennecot Mining Proposal for Puerto Rico"; and such presentations as "Missionaries: For God and-or Country?." and "How Do You Affect the System?" There will be considerable opportunity in small groups to deal with the history of dependency in the Americas, the recognizing of patterns of exploitation in Latin America and the United States, and in chartering courses of action. Peter Kami, a Brazilian urban worker with the Epworth Ministry in Knoxville, and Edwin Walker, Vanderbilt student working on his doctorate on the United States Aid Program in Latin America, will be resource persons. The workshop will conclude with a liberation celebration.

This workshop is open to college students and town people. A small registration fee for students ($.25) will cover the expense of a packet of materials to be given to each student participant. Anyone interested in enrolling in the workshop or obtaining more information should contact Sue Sterling, Andy Yankama or Chaplain Harrison soon.

Is There An Annual?

By Kathy Meier

The growing dissatisfaction of most students concerning this year's annual prompted a meeting of the communications committee and yearbook editor Tim Hodge.

One of the questions asked by students was "Will there even be an annual this year?" Tim Hodge assured the committee that three-fourths of the yearbook has already been submitted to the publishers. The yearbook must be completed by the 14th of March.

Another rumor on campus concerns the dearth of pictures of students, especially undergraduates, in the yearbook. Tim Hodge reported that he had taken a poll of students last year to discover their preferences. Of the 200 responses, the majority did not want "pages of meaningless faces."

There seems to be a discrepancy between the students' idea of a yearbook and new trends in such publications. New concepts include a more artistic, unified book of the year's events rather than a directory of people. The yearbook for 1972 does include pictures of organizations, a larger introduction and will contain pictures of seniors. The senior pictures will be taken in a home setting.

Mrs. Cate raised the argument that the other students have paid just as much as seniors and seem to be left out in the '72 yearbook. Tim Hodge replied that most of the campus is represented but not in rows of pictures. If the lower classmen wanted more formal pictures, a summer supplement could be issued for two dollars more.

Hodge offered to try to work in pictures of the lower classmen by the deadline to try to soothe hostilities growing in the student body.

B League Begins Season

Intramural league play finally began last Thursday with the Band and the Olympians meeting in an important A league contest. With seven seconds left in regulation, Ed Rupp drove with the baseline for a lay-up to put the Olympians ahead 48-46. The Band immediately called time out. When play resumed, as the final buzzer went off, a twenty footer by Buddy Lewis ripped the nets. Referee Steve Gordon called it no good, saying that it was shot after the buzzer, but Ref Gary Moore called it good, so good it was. In the overtime, Thompson hit one basket and 2 free throws, and DeBlois made a basket to put the Band ahead 54-48. Rupp hit a basket and two free throws to pull the Olympians within two but the Band stalled out, Thompson hitting two more free throws to ice the victory 56-52. Thompson led the Band with 25, while DeBlois had 13. Rupp and Kozel had 14 apiece, and Stephens contributed 12 for the Olympians.

Friday, the Band utilized a devastating full-court press to out-class the undermanned Sophomores 99-44. Desperately trying for 100 points, the Band consistently forced Sophomore errors in their backcourts, turning them into easy layups. DeBlois scored the season's high, 33, while Thompson added 27. Chris Leng had 12, and his brother Steve finally scored on the game's last basket. Cochran scored 17, Ferguson 9, and Paul Miller 7 for the sophomores.

The Dark Horses showed much improvement in sweeping past the Sophomores, 83-40. Led by Ron Salage's rebounding and Tony Willis' outside shooting, the Dark Horses had little trouble with the again undermanned but valiant Sophomores. Salage scored 28, Willis 25, and Rich Gaunt 19 for the Dark Horses. Andy Ferguson led the Sophs with 15, Williamson adding 10.

The Juniors survived an early threat by Park Burly and went on to a 73-32 victory Sunday. Park Burly played deliberately early but the Juniors' fast break and rebounding strength eventually took control.

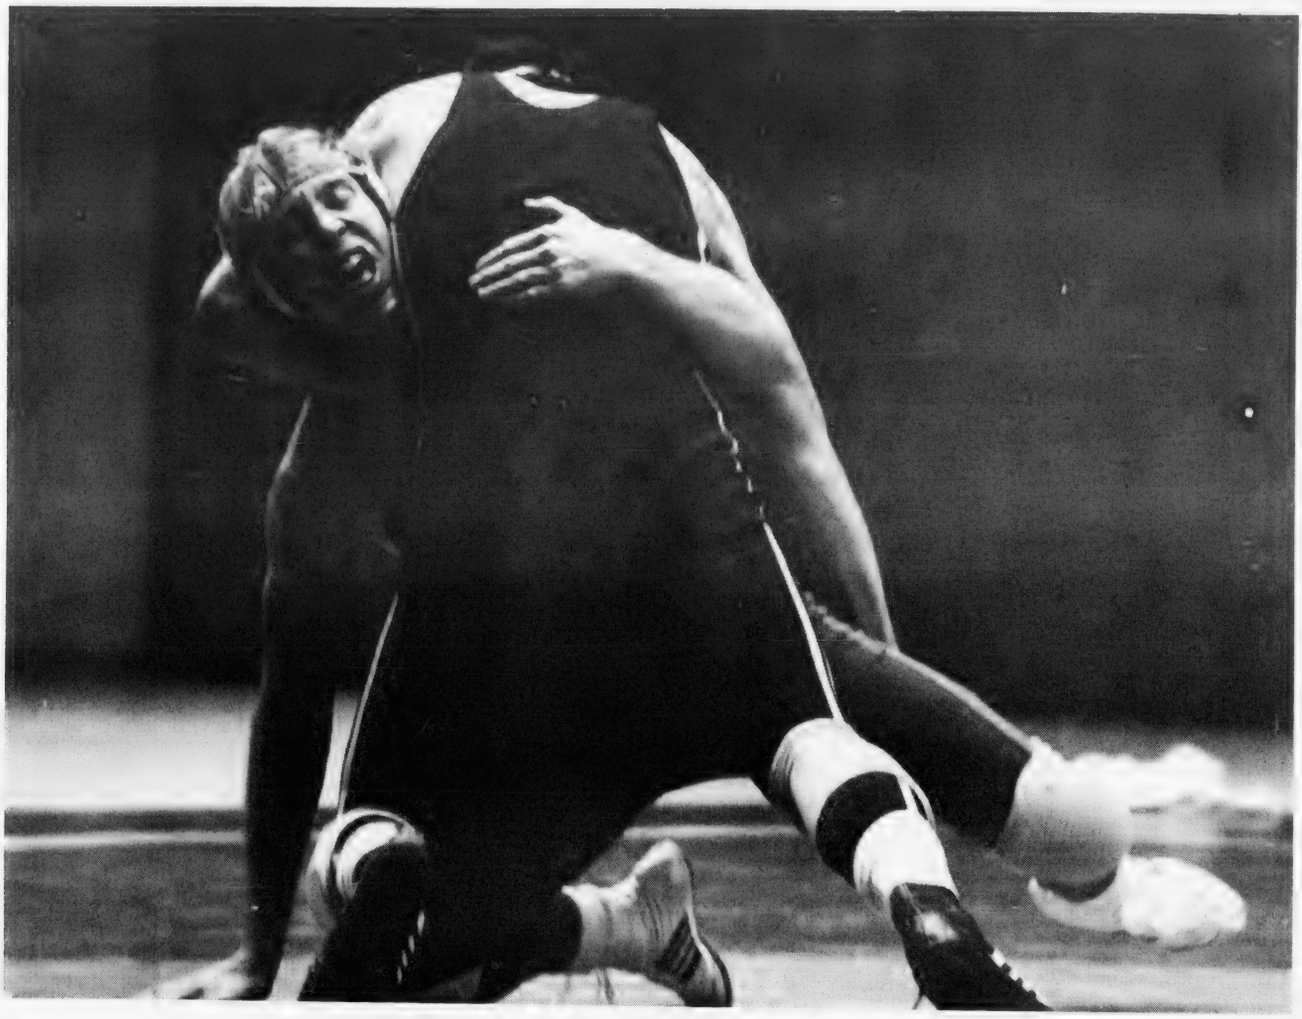
Drewery hit for 21 and Lentz for 16 for the Juniors. Bob Hughes and Mike Parks each had 8 for Park Burly.

Dribblers Bounce Hard

What started out to be a partial rebuilding year turned into an almost entire rebuilding year at the Christmas break because of crippling injuries occurring adding to the disabled list already and one letterman not returning to the squad.

So with Captain Dan McKinstry as the only starter available from last year, Coach Baird has gone with McKinstry, Mike Butler, a reserve last year, Bill Postler, a 6'2" center who played sparingly and for the first time in the 1970-71 season, and two freshmen, Randy Schaurer and Scott Ross. This combination began playing together as a unit at the Mt. Union College holiday tournament in Alliance, Ohio, and has improved with each game. Captain McKinstry is leading the scoring — has a scoring average of 25.3 points per game and a 46.4 shooting percentage. He has a 35 point average in the last four games (35, 38, 26 and 41). Mike Butler's scoring is improving and he has had two 22 points scoring games the last two times out.

Bill Postler amazes Coach Baird in his increasing rebounding ability with giving away so many inches in height to begin with and his scoring average is on the rise. The two freshmen have shown great poise — Randy Schaurer guiding the team from his guard position and Scott Ross working the boards and being a play maker from his forward position. The results of the improved play have brought three wins out of the last four games and the loss was by two points against Milligan College, a fine ball club.



Coach Baird is particularly pleased with the attitude of all the players — the bench warmers as well as the starting unit. The starting unit gets encouragement from the substitutes whether one enters the game to relieve a starter or cheers from the bench.

Larry Brown appears to be the only cripple who will be returning to the line-up — and he should be seeing plenty of playing time from here on in — recovering from a broken bone in his foot. His 18 rebounds per game and 25 point average prior to his injury in the Emory and Henry game will be a welcome return and will give Coach Baird a better opportunity to rotate players to keep them at their top efficiency during a game. Gary Childress, a starter at the beginning of the season, had a knee operation this week.

With a lot of tough games remaining the Maryville Scots are looking forward to the challenge which lies ahead and to letting the opponents know they have a fight on their hands. The Scots' record to date is 5 wins and 10 losses. Five games have been decided by 1 or 2 points — Maryville winning two of them — and Coach Baird states that if there are more like this Maryville must win them.

Grapplers Go! The Scots' Brad Kehler takes on an opponent from UT-Chattanooga

Wrestlers Pull Two Out Of Three

Last week the Scots wrestlers faced three opponents, defeating two and losing to one.

Wednesday night the Scots lost to the University of Western Carolina for the second time this season.

Thursday night the grapplers won over North Carolina, 42-14, scoring six pins and two decisions.

Steve Timpano, Brad Kehler, Steve Kitchen and Jim Batchler all pinned their opponents.

Also registering pins were Gary Burd, who returned from an injury, and Paul Naylor.

Gary DeAlmo and Mack Baxis won decisions over their UNC opponents, giving the Scots an overwhelming victory.

Saturday night the Scots entertained the Tigers from Sewanee sending them back to Monteagle with a 29-15 loss.

After Mark Baxis participated in an exhibition match, Paul Navlor was awarded his match by default.

Hercules Pettus fell victom to John Poore, who scored an impressive 13-0 decision.

Bill Baxis followed, flattening Humphries McGee early in the third period.

Doug Cunningham returned to the line-up after an injury to wrestle 142. He won a decision over Yogi Anderson.

Gary Burd and John Billings ended in a tie, while Kevin Lanahan downed Steve Kitchen.

Brad Kehler won a decision over Whittaker and Jim Batchler defeated Fred DeCasino.

Due to injuries, the Scots forfeited the 190 lb. class, and Roger Reiter moved up to heavyweight, where he tied Sewanee's Elder.

Friday afternoon, SEIWA competition begins. John Poore, one point away from the MC record of 53, will wrestle in the afternoon as will Paul Naylor with 46 points.

How will the earth end? Long before the sun cools off, it will go through periods of intense heating which will turn the earth into a cinder, according to Dr. Isaac Asimov of the Boston University School of Medicine, reporting in the November issue of Science Digest. Many scientists have long thought the end would come when the sun burned itself out, freezing the earth and everything on it. But don't get upset, says Dr. Asimov. It won't happen for about eight billion years.

Fire Burns Pearsons

Fire broke out and gutted the upper stories of Pearsons Hall last Sunday night. The fire began in room 426 and spread down the hall. Causes are yet undetermined.

Head resident Rick Ziegler turned in the alarm shortly before 11:00 while residents evacuated the burning building. (Calling the roll, Ann Holmes) discovered all 94 residents were out.

Units of the Maryville Fire Dept. began arriving shortly after 11:00. The out-of-control-blaze brought six trucks from Maryville and Alcoa.

Consumed in the fire was the MC Dining Hall. The food consultant scheduled to evaluate the food service at the College had just arrived on campus when the fire broke out.

Pearsons Hall was built in 1910 with a $20,000 from to the College. The 3rd and 4th stories were added in 1912. The building was remodeled in 1959 with additions to the Dining Hall in the early 1960's.

The Pearsons Hall fire is the third major fire in the College's history. Carnegie Hall burned in 1916 and the Vorhees Chapel was consumed in 1947.

Anderson Tower is viewed through charred ruins of Pearsons Hall's upper floors following Sunday's fire.

Community Meeting Explores Feelings About Pearsons

"This will not stop the continuous on-going life of the college. We have continued for 152 years and we will not be stopped." These were the closing words of an all-community meeting held Monday morning, February 14, after the Sunday evening fire at Pearsons dormitory.

The meeting was opened by Dr. Copeland reading selections from a Bible taken from second floor Pearsons. Credit was given and responsibility of the student body acknowledged for the conduct before, during, and after the tragedy. Thanks was especially given for the safety of human lives and stress placed upon a continuing sense of responsible conduct.

Dean Massey spoke briefly, announcing a Pearsons Hall meeting in the theater immediatly following the community gethering. Dean Willey assured the curious that classes would resume on a regular schedule on Tuesday with Civilization films being shown as usual. Ward Brooks further emphasized the need for sacrifice, sharing, and cooperation in the days ahead.

Details were given as to more technical procedure. With all of fourth floor gutted, one half or third and one third of second, references were provided for information: Mr. Ussery for press comment, Mr. Layman for insurance, Dr. Wiley for academic concerns, Mr. Layman and Mr. Brahams for food af-

The Red Cross, it was announced, would have lunch for students in the P.E. building while additional provisions were being planned for more permanent arrangements.

Insurance needs considered involved homeowners policies carried by individual students. If coverage in the family homeowners policy covered fire damage, costs up to $1,000 could be salvaged. Policies in excess of $20,000 carried coverage of 10 per cent of one half of the policy.

Assurance was given for the welfare and financial security of earh Pearson's woman. Other questions raised involved concern for other dorms in the same condition as Pearsons, especially in regard to fire alarm systems.

Following the all-community meeting, the senior class held a meeting. Books for the use of Pearson's residents were placed in the faculty lounge of the student center of Monday afternoon where anyone needing a text or supplies could be taken care of. The traditional Senior class donation was voted to be collected immediately and put under the direction of Mr. Ribble for those in dire financial straits. Contributions to this fund are to be given to Bill Postler in check or cash form.

Twelve Seniors Elected to Honor Society

Twelve seniors at Maryville College have been elected members of the Alpha Gamma Sigma Scholarship Honor Society. This Society was founded at Maryville College in April 1934 as a scholarship honor society, with eligibility requirements similar to those of the national honor society, Phi Beta Kappa.

Murr, Rockford, Tenn.; (no publicity) William J. Postler, Cincinnati, Ohio; John F. Powell, Memphis, Tenn.; Nancy L. Rankin, Charlotte, N.C.; Mary Carol Robertson, Knoxville, Tenn.; Kathryn Schieber, Creve Coeur, Mo.; Deborah S. Stearns, Dayton, Ohio; Richard H. Wilson, Maryville, Tenn. (Syracuse, N.Y.)

These new members will be inducted into Alpha Gamma Sigma at a meeting of the Society on February 21.

Pearsons Girls Meet; Make Plans

Dean Massey met with the 90 burned-out coeds of Pearson's 12:00 Monday in the theatre. The main point stressed in the meeting was that everyone would be treated on an individual basis. The Administrative consultants to go to in case of any questions are Dean Massey for housing, Dr. Willey for academics, and Mr. Ribble for immediate financial assistance.

The lobby of Lloyd has been established as the locale for clothing distribution. Members of the college community, the Red Cross, and several churches have begun collecting. Any girls who are unable to find their sizes or articles necessary may even receive money. Proffitt's Department Store will provide credit with a 10 per cent discount.

Regarding housing, at first count there were 21 openings in Lloyd, 15 in Davis, 18 in Dorm I, and II in the infirmary, making 64 total. In addition, faculty members and 21 townspeople have offered rooming. Dean Massey urged that all girls should try to stay where they were Sunday evening. Definite arrangements should be immediately made with permanence in mind. These arrangements should be acknowledged with Dean Massey's office. If any problems arise, they should be voiced immediately. It was stressed that as soon as people could get back into a general manner of living, the better it would be for all. The question of indiviidual renting of off-campus quarters was raised. The dean's office would only consider such a proposal if no other arrangements were available.

The senior class has offered to contribute books. This outlet will be located in the student center. If a particular book is not available, a borrowing system will be established. There will be a sheet available to designate specific needs. Also the senior class offered the student assistance office money.

The immediate vicinity of Pearson's has been sectioned off. Everyone is urged to stay away from the area until the officials give their okay to enter the building. The school does not have any form of insurance for personal loss. Victims are to immediately inform their parents, first to let them know personal conditions, and second, to find out if they are covered by any type of homeowners policy.

Many girls have requested a short time off. Some said they did not now how soon they could get back into momentum. Dean Masey siad that this was an individual problem having each girl decide for herself what would be best.

Rick Ziegler and Dave Gritzmarker have offered to help with any transportation problems. The meeting closed with Nadine Hays, a 3rd floor resident of Pearson's asking everyone to not worry so much about material things but to be thankful that no one was killed.

Editorial

The Passing of an Era

Thomas Jefferson once used the metaphor "as ominous as a firebell in the night" to describe an event. Following last Sunday night's fire in Pearsons, Maryville College became aware of just how ominous and awesome a firebell or siren can become.

The burning of Pearsons marked the end of an era for the College. Ninety-four people survived the fire only to face the chaos of displacement. The residents lost their possessions and the College lost its dining facilities. Miss Ware had dedicated thirty-seven years of her life to the College in this building.

Today, the fire's been out almost a week. Yet, the scars, both physical and psychological, remain. These scars will take a long time to erase and to change. What can be changed in the wake of such a tragedy, however, is the way we respond. An awesome event demands an awesome response.

Some people have already ceased to make a sacrifice. Others are all too ready to be dominated by their misfortune. These responses seem a bit selfish. Quite a number of people exhibited a great deal of selfless, individual courage during the fire. A week later, now is the time for all of us to reconfirm their courage as a group.

The end of one era marks the beginning of a new one. Life, however disrupted, must continue. If the College as a whole can maintain the selfless courage and dignity of its members in the face of adversity, then this new era can become one of Maryville College's finest.

Letters to the Editor

'Encourage Use of P.E. Building'

Dear Editor:

We whould like to take this opportunity to discuss the availability (or lack) of our college physical education building to discuss the availability (or lack) of our college physical education building to the college students. It is quite apparant that the average student does not rate due consideration in the planning of the usage of our gym. For instance, the use of the basket-ball courts is limited because of the hours that the gym is open. It seems unusual that a school would go to the expense of building a modern gym complex and then cut down on its usage because they don't have the money to pay help to supervise activities.

We think this policy is a little inconsistent and foolish. The weekend schedule of having the gym open for a total of roughly seven hours (Sat. and Sun.) is absurd. We feel the college student is not receiving a fair return on the money he paid to have the chance to use school facitities. We can understand the using of the gym for school activities (basketball, wrestling, intramurals, etc.) yet these activities take up a small portion of the time.

Why can't the gym hours be extended? Why is the gym open to the community one night each week when during the previous year the same community missused the oportunity of using the gym. We refer to the destruction of school property by the community. Above and beyond all this the community gains gym usage at the expense of literally excluding student activity in the gym for that one night.

Possibly a method of compensating for the limited access to the gym would be re-opening of the Alumni gym (if possible). We feel that either the college should attempt to gear more gym usage toward the student or out with the realization that our new physical education complex is being used well below its full capacity.

Sincerely,
Don Gilbert

Pros And Cons Of Special Studies

Lancaster, Pa.- (I.P.)- Due to an increased interest in the Special Studies program at Franklin and Marshall College, Dean Norman Charles, director of the program, has released a report to the Curriculum Committee evaluating the program.

Dean Charles listed as possible shortcomings that "a special studies program is not likely to provide a sufficient awareness of the tacit assumptions, the methodological subtleties, the traditions and forms of scholarship within any single discipline.

"The charges of dilettantism and superficiality may therefore be levelled at the program and the depth vs. breadth arguments trotted out." He adds "the special studies major forfeits the academic home base provided its majors by the individual departments and as a result a student is deprived of the intellectual companionship afforded to upperclass majors in a given discipline.

"More specifically, he misses the experience of the upperclass seminar for departmental majors, usually designed as a culminating undergraduate exposure to the discipline."

Dean Charles also lists the possible benefits of the program in his report. "The program provides a maximum curricular flexibility while requiring a minimum of administrative reorganization and new courses. By combining existing courses into new patterns, the curriculum becomes indefinitely adaptable to individual interests and goals, all the while avoiding the potential formlessness of the free-elective system."

He adds that "the process of designing an original academic program that has a coherence and an internal logic compels a student to reflect on the interrelationshops among the branches, a continuing search for these connections. If one of the marks of a liberally educated person is an appreciation of contexts and an ever broadening perspective, this program can establish valuable intellectual habits. "The program affords students who have not yet settled on a major academic interest or a career goal a legitimate opportunity to temporize, to keep options open, to find themselves academically."

Dean Charles closes his report by discussing the quality controls inherent in the program. He lists four measures which act as a screening process of a prospective Special Studies major:

(1) At the time of the student's initial inquiry he can be dischouraged from proceeding father;

(2) The faculty member who is approached to serve as advisor can refuse to endorse the program, or if he agrees to serve, can suggest ways to strengthen an individual program in progress;

(3) The Curriculum Committee can reject the complete application;

(4) The Faculty Examining Committee can find unacceptable the paper resulting from the student's senior project.

Dean Charles added that of the students who originally inquired about the program, only about 50 percent actually submitted applications.

The Burning Of Pearsons

Six pillars stand,
like Grecian temples holy.
Six pillars stand,
symbolic now of life.
Six pillars stand,
all else eaten
by the golden flame of time.
Six pillars stand,
with only ashes left behind the glory of their shine.
Six pillars stand,
and upon the ashes built will be tomorrow's life.
Six pillars stand,
only pictures of yesterday,
just another step in life,
just another step in growth, and forever, history will see
Six pillars stand,
speaking in their silence,
of the life that lived in them.

Tremont Director Plans Future For Tremont

By LEIGH THORINGTON

Lloyd Foster says that being the director of Tremont is one of the five or six best jobs in the world. The questions of intense currency and the stimulating challenge of teaching on all levels make it so.

Tremont is defined as "an integral part of MC." For shortness sake the Maryville College Environment Education Center is called MC East or the Tremont Campus. All wage hour personel and assistants are considered MC faculty. MC students volunteer for important jobs such as emregency fire crew or instructor assistants. Mr. Foster emphasized the participation of MC students at Tremont. He also stressed the invitation to any MC group, regardless of size, to come out to Tremont.

Mr. Foster seemed excited about long range plans for Tremont. The Science Department wants to include some informal Tremont programs in its new interdisciplinary moves. The State of Tennessee has talked with MC about involving Tremont with more student teaching and other solid credit work for education majors. Tremont at present is a long way from its potential use, says Mr. Foster.

A certain value to the student is involved in more formal programs with Tremont, stated Mr. Foster. He guaranteed a student with experience in Environmental Education a job in the teaching profession. He says a market is being created for teachers willing to work in this area.

Mr. Foster also seemed proud of the study facilities at Tremont. There is no cost for the volunteer assistant program, and a library is there. He did mention transportation as being a problem. But he hoped this would be worked out with the more formal programs anticipated.

Mr. Foster is strongly opposed to the Tellico Dam Project. He said, "It is an economical and ecological boondogle. The TVA is lying about its value." He said that trying to justify the dam with a city and its need for power is utter nonsense. However, he is encouraged by the battles won by environmentalists and thinks it's a great development that the courts can work two ways.

With his pride and enthusiasm for Tremont and its plans, Mr. Foster represents and important segment of modern man.

Dribbling Seniors End Year

Saturday evening will be the final home game of the season for the Scot basketballers. It's also the last game for five seniors. Dan McKinstry, Co-Captain; John Weston, Co-Captain; and Dusty Miller, have all played for four years. Bill Postler winds up his second year as a team member while Larry Brown ends his first year.

The season's end will find John Weston and Larry Brown trying to recover from injuries. Bill Postler goes outdoors for his third season with the track team. Dan McKinstry and Dusty Miller will begin baseball for their fourth season. Each senior expressed his appreciation for the student body's support given in spite of injuries.

Playhouse Rehearses For Spring Show

The long-run New York musical comedy hit, "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," is coming to the Maryville College Theatre March 3 and 4 with David Nighbert in the lead role.

"A Funny Thing" is based by its authors, Burt Shevelove and Larry Gelbart, on hilarious situations from the farces of Plautus, the Roman Gelbart, on hilarious situations from the farces of Plautus, the Roman playwright who convulsed audiences in the Coliseum aroung 200 B. C. The same wacky situations have been borrowed down the centuries by such aruthors as Boccaccio, Rabelais, Shakespeare, Congreve, Moliere and George Abbott.

Under the direction of Mr. Abbott, "A Funny Thing" enjoyed a phenomenal run of 28 months (nearly 1,000 performances) in New York from the spring of 1962 to the end of the summer of 1964. The New Yorker Magazine declared that "Plautus never had himself so well adapted" as in this antic musical with action set in ancient Rome.

Mr. Nighbert will be seen as a slave-in-a-toga who creates uproar as he tries to gain his freedom by catering to the yearnings of his master and the master's lecherous old father.

Howard Welsh will have the hilarious role of the aging but still chipper father, Senes; Kay Hurlbut will play his shrewish spouse, Domina; Sydney Weedon will play Lycus, the business-like owner of the girl market; and Christina Bergner will be seen as the delectable piece of merchandise, Philis.

Thomas Williamson will be seen as a fellow-slave in the household who is content to remain in slavery but is pulled into Pseudolus's schemes. Sean Sullivan will play a virile military man who complicates the plot with a prior contract for the sought-after girl, and Paul Hollingsworth as Erronius is the neighbor who is constantly being sent off the run around the seven hills of Rome.

In addition, the cast includes a group of beautiful inmates of the slave market. Featured are Angela Glenn, Linda Kaempter, Christy Rogers, Merida Kearns-Preston, Rachel Donaldson and Eleanor Murrah.

Portraying the Proteans, eunuches, soldiers, saulors and slaves will be Terry Noack, Ralph Parkinson and Tom Martin.

Mark Mertz is following the George Abbott direction is staging the jolly romp; Mrs. Cheryl Van Metre is staging the dances; Melissa Collins is the assistant director; and DAN Stallings is musical director.

Dribblers Didn't Bounce Very High

After two tough defeats, the Scots' record has slipped to 7-12. The Scots downed Tusculum 85-70, but lost to LMU 91-88 and to Birmingham Southern 82-69.

In the Tusculum victory, the Scots lost center Larry Brown for the season with a broken foot. This time it was the left one and resulted the same as the previous break on the right foot — with someone stepping on it.

The Scots trailed at the half 36-34, but came alive with Mike Butler and Dan McKinstry sparking the rally. Butler's basket put the Scots ahead 59-58. Then McKinstry reeled off 14 consecutive points, and the game was the Scots' from there.

McKinstry finished with 35, Butler 17, Postler 7, Schaurer 6, Morse 4, and Ross 6.

On Thursday, the Scots ventured to LMU. LMU, with a superior height advantage and fine outside shooting, opened with a 48-40 halftime lead. However, the Scots, paced by Butler, came on strong but in the end were defeated 91-88.

Butler led the Scots with 30 points, McKinstry 29, Schaurer 14, Ross 6, Postler 5, and Graham 2.

Saturday, the Scots played in Birmingham. With a good fast break and 55 per cent shooting, the Scots led 49-41 at the half. From the start of the second half it was apparent that Coach Arnold had his Panthers fired up. The Panthers caught the Scots at 58 and then increased their margin as "Stretch Braxton took command. Braxton finished with 20 points, 16 rebounds, 6 blocked shots and several intimidations.

Butler again led the Scots with 23, McKinstry had 22, Schaurer 15, Postler 3, and Ross 8.

Saturday the Scots play Tusculum in Greeneville, Tenn. Next Thursday LMU will be here and then on Saturday, Covenant College will supply the opposition in the final home appearance for the roundballers for the season.

MC Hosts SEIWA

Friday and Saturday Maryville College played host to the SEIWA Championship Tournament.

In many ways the tourney went as expected. Auburn swept the competition collecting 98½ points, and UT-Chattanooga followed with 68½. Georgia Tech and Maryville had 54 and 38 respectively. UT-Martin claimed 23, Georgia 22, and Sewanee 14.

Individual competition was much more keen. Only 13 falls were recorded in over 80 matches, and only one in the final rounds. Most decisions were close, and several decided by riding times and overtime periods.

The championship round saw many new faces, as only two of last years crownholders returned to the finals. However, both John Poore of Maryville and UTC's Fred McKenny lost Saturday.

In the 118-pound class, Jack Lione of Georgia Tech took top honors, defeating Auburn's Ed Rew 8-6. Another Tiger, Greg West, fared better, edging out John Poore 9-7.

Auburn then scored two consecutive victories. Trent Miller defeated UTC's John Kaluelage in the 134-pound division. Bob Haun followed by downing Laird Carmichael of Tech.

Jerry Goldstein, 150-pound Yellowjacket, squeezed out Turner Jackson 9-7. Moccasin Steve Grass defeated Tech's Mike Samum to gain the crown.

Auburn's Mike Roberts won his title by defeating UTC's Tim Brennan in the 167-pound class. Steve Brown, also of Auburn, won over defending champion Fred McKenny.

Maryville's Roger Reiter lost to Tiger George Calloway by a slim 2-0 decision and Auburn's heavy weight Larry Hill pinned Pegauan Whatley of UT-Martin.

Besides Poore and Reiter, other Scots made good showings. Paul Naylor finished third in the 118-pound divisiton. Bill Baxis placed fourth, as did Doug Cunningham and Matt Pacifico, in their respective classes.

Tiger Steve Brown took the trophy for most falls. His teammate Trent Miller won the award for most outstanding wrestler, and their coach Swede Unbach was named Coach of the Year by coaches' ballot.

In a special presentation, former Maryville coach John A. Davis was recognized for his outstanding contributions to area wrestling.

Vespers Sunday night, February 20, at 7:00 p.m. in the Little Chapel will be the first in a series of messages entitled "Here I Stand." The Rev. Al Cropp, retired missionary to the American Indians, will speak on the subject, "First Americans."

Colleges Are Changing

Tucson, Ariz.-(I.P.)-The key word in higher education of the 1970s will be "change" and the student unrest of recent past is merely part of a bigger picture of tomorrow.

So said University of Michigan President Robben W. Fleming at the inauguration ceremonies for President John P. Schaefer of the University of Arizona.

The emerging picture of higher education, President Fleming continued, will be made up of diverse changes, but notably in the campus life-style, in the nature of the student body and in the climate for faculties. He cited these changes:

Undergraduates have begun to reject the traditional dormitory system. "They tend to prefer apartment style living where they can be more independent. As a result, most universities find themselves with substantial dormitory facilities, financed by loans amortized over a quarter of a century period, and with no immediate alternative use for them," President Fleming said.

"The result has been a series of adjustments to try and meet the interests of students in a changed style of living."

Along with the changed dormitory patterns have come changes in rules, some of which have been "worrisome to older generations." Yet the nation is moving in the direction of treating all members 18 years of age or older as adults and full-fledged citizens, he said.

"With that change will come an inevitable difference in the way students who live in dormitories are to be treated. The old parietal relationship will largely fade from the scene and be replaced by a landlord-tenat contract."

The 1970s will produce "a considerable trauma" for faculties, President Fleming predicted. College faculties are most likely to consider "new and different forms of organization which they believe may help to protect their interests.

"The probability is that the next 10 years will be full of experimentation on this front, with the final outcome not clearly foreseeable at this time."

Finally, President Fleming noted that a university president knows he must work with at least three constituencies–the public, the faculty and students

ACC Discusses Learning Environment

By Patti Shelton

The All-College Council convened on Feb. 16 for the purpose of discussing the learning environment on campus. Several students attended and the first topic was the need for appropriate places to study; some suggestions were the third floor of Fayerweather and Bartlett. However, extensive renovations would have to be made on both buildings for them to be usable.

Scott Thompson voiced the idea that students are dissatisfied with both the type of learning offered and the structuring of classes. In response to Scott's comments, Mr. Ramger said Science 101 had attempted to utilize relevance and little structure and there was little response. Soph. aides present said freshmen are often bewildered by lack of structure due to high school methods of teaching.

Dr. Stine brought out the fact that goals are less clearly defined now.

Scott also said that students should be allowed to express themselves as they wish and not be protected from their own mistakes.

In answer to a question from Dr. Copeland concerning MC's flexibility, several members of the council stated that there is a disappointing response to the independent courses and majors offered.

Some requests voiced were that more personal interaction between students and faculty take place and that students appreciate the value of experience in their learning. Possibilities of a year's work experience affiliated with the college were mentioned. Fear of challenging the professors was cited as a reason for lack of participation in class.

Students' aversion to required subjects was also discussed. The point was raised that thinking can be learned and used in required subjects as well as electives.

Those present were reminded that Advanced Placement Tests are accepted here dependent on the grade and dept.; a fact that is in the catalog but often overlooked.

To conclude this discussion Dr. Copeland asked the Council to consider two questions: "Where is the college at its best in the environment?" and "Is the college honest, faculty and students alike?"

Next on the agenda, Dr. Stine shared some of his students' reactions to the Pearsons' fire. They expressed great concern over safety precautions in Carnegie and Memorial as well as other buildings and Dr. Copeland promised everything would be checked out.

There was some debate over what type of structure or structures to plan on and whether to begin fund raising now. Alternatives to the latter include waiting for the insurance to be adjusted and using that money for food services.

After some further discussion of proposed food services, the meeting was adjourned.

Library Asseses Loss

By Kathy Meier

Shock wave effects of the Pearson's Hall fire continue throughout the campus.

Mrs. Best reports that approximately 170 library books were lost or damaged in the blaze. Water damaged books are being pressed and dried out while burned or scorched books will be rebound.

In spite of these measures twelve of the books returned so far by Person's residents are no longer usable. The most significant losses were several out-of-print Shakespeare volumes. These research books have already been replaced by Dr. Hunter, a former MC professor who lives in Maryville. It is hoped that other donations will come to the library.

Mrs. Best estimates that the cost to replace losses will run at representatives. The negotiations with the insurance adjustor may result in an allocation of funds for the library.

One insurance consultant has suggested that each Perasons girl list any library book that was burned or damaged along with her personal possessions.

If no insurance money is forthcoming, the library will be forced to use funds for new books in replacing the old.

Guess What's Coming To Dinner?

Contrary to popular belief, Mrs. Ware has nothing to do with planning the food at the gym. Morrisons, a well known Southern cafeteria chain, has taken over the food service. Morrisons caters to clubs and hospitals also.

The cost per meal has risen slightly. Although MC gets some credit for the use of some equipment, food and manpower, the service does cost more. The food is prepared at the Senators Club, which is also catered by Morrisons. The club is closer to MC than the Knoxville Morrisons.

The biggest problem is keeping the food warm and getting it ready to serve, since no one known what's coming to dinner.

Catholic Theologian Speaks At CIV

On Wednesday, March 1, Michael Novak will be M.C.'s CIV speaker. Called by the New York Times "the most exciting of the younger Catholic theologians," Mr. Novak will speak on the topic "Do Students Want Education?"

Mr. Novak is Associate Professor of Philosophy and Theology at the State University of New York, Old Westbury. He has written six books (including Belief and Unbelief, A Theology for Radical Politics, The Experience of Nothingness) and two novels.

For almost three years Mr. Novak lived in Italy and for a month he traveled through the countryside of South Vietnam during the Vietnamese elections of 1967. He wrote speeches during the presidential campaign of John F. Kennedy, campaigned for Robert F. Kennedy in 1968, and covered the Democratic Convention in Chicago for Connonweal.

During his three years on the faculty at Stanford, he was twice chosen "most influential professor" by the senior class. He has been active in the Resistance against the draft, the war in Vietnam, and has written extensively about the coming revolution in America.

Debaters Return From Tournament

Eight Maryville college students participated in the Tennessee Intercollegiate Forensics Tournament at Tennessee Tech in Cookeville last week. They were accompanied by their coach, Mrs. Lucy H. Proffitt.

Janet Vail, a sophomore from Boyds, Maryland, brought home third place in oral interpretation doing a selection from Randall Jarrell. Diane Wood was also a finalist in interpretation with Kevin Russell representing the team as a finalist in persuasive speaking.

Other participants were Mark Stoub in interpretation, Cari Peeples and Bob Cox in persuasive, and Jerry Reed and Kevin Russell in extemporaneous.

Bob Cox and Jerry Reed filled out the busy weekend by entering six rounds of debate on the national topic.

The next scheduled trip for the team will be to the Magnolia Tournament in Columbus, Mississippi on March 3-4. On March 9 the squad will provide an exhibition debate for the Alcoa Kiwanis.

Weird Characters In 'Funny Thing'

"Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," the New York musical hit coming to the Maryville College Theatre on March 4 and 5, is so filled with the kind of clowning that kept audiences laughing in earlier times at Mack Sennett movies, Marx Brothers madnesses, vaudeville and burlesque, that it might be thought that the authors only had to have a gag file, or might perhaps be veterans of the old burlesque shows themselves.

Such gags, for example, as when Pseudolus is being measured back to back with Gymnasia, a voluptuous prospective concubine—(trying her for size?)— he is a little doubtful, because she is so tall. Eager salesman Lycus assures him they make a great fit. "Yes," says Pseudolus, "but how often will we find ourselves in this position?" Or, when he is told that the first ingredient of a recipe is the eye of an eel, he thinks a moment reflectively and then nods, "That – we have."

Then there's the pride and care Lycus has for the scantily clad girls of his bordello. He won't let them be fanned while wet, for example. They might catch cold. He warns a fanner, "If you're not careful you'll be a eunuch all your life." And domineering Domina adjures a slave carrying a sculpture of her, "Carry my bust with pride."

Summer School Analyzed

By Sarah Winbigler

Maryville College's summer term is as vital a part of its curriculum as any of its other terms. Plans for the 1972 summer term are already being made, with the largest course selection ever offered.

The summer term here at Maryville is rather innovative, in that it is set up in three sessions at three weeks each. During each three-week session, the student is allowed to take only one course, with the exception of those students who wish to take a P.E. course in addition to a regular course.

The class periods meet in two 70-minute sessions a day, five days a week for three weeks. This plan gives the student the equivalent class time of a course taken during any other term. Many students find this intensity of study stimulating. In fact, in a study of Maryville summer school students, 92½ per cent of those responding said that the summer term was "about the same as" or "more satisfactory" than the regular ten-week term.

This summer school program appeals to many people for many different reasons. For new students, the summer session provides a beneficial early adjustment to college life. Classes are very small, and extra-curricular activities provide few distractions, so the incoming freshman has a chance to get settled into college life.

Students already enrolled at Maryville or another college find that the summer term is an excellent time to either make up deficiencies or to accelerate their studies. Many local teachers attend the summer term to take refresher courses or to take advantage of the specially designed education courses offered only at that time.

This year's summer session will include greater use of the Tremont facilities, with several teachers conducting classes there. Dr. Fowler will be teaching a course on the twentieth century novel there; Mr. Swenson will have a painting class there; and other courses are being planned.

Further information on this year's summer school will be out soon. The number of courses which can be offered will be decided by the number of students who wish to take each course. Mr. Bushing, chairman of the faculty committee in charge of the 1972 summer term, has asked that all students who are even considering attending summer school indicate to the Registrar's Office the courses in which they are interested. This involves no commitment; it will simply aid the registrar in making up the final list of courses to be offered.

The Echo Wants YOU!

As the winter term draws to a close, it becomes necessary to think about the selection of a new editor for the Echo. The new editor will be selected at the beginning of the spring term in order to give him a longer time of apprenticeship.

Any interested persons who have had previous newspaper experience are eligible to apply. All applicants will be interviewed by the Communications Committee of the All-College Council and the Echo staff.

Each of those who were apply will publish an issue of the Echo. Selection of the most qualified person to act as editor next year would then be made by the Communication Committee and Echo staff. The entire community however, is encouraged to express their preference to either members of the Publications Committee or the Echo staff.

On Or Off Campus Living?

There's been a lot of talk about the advantages of off-campus living. With arrangements now underway to substitute for Pearsons, this type of arrangement is a definate possibility. At the risk of becoming the devil's advocate, we'd like to point out the disadvantages.

Community is a much overworked word. Yet, community living promotes more unity and a sense of identity than a non-residential, suitcase college or a faceless university. Off-campus living limits involvement in campus affairs.

Many people have the goal of acquiring experience. Without dormitory living, they're missing a valuable lesson in getting along with other people. It's a sad commenatary on today's society that is as small a place as MC people cannot live together.

Independence is cited by some people as a reason for off-campus living. We'd wonder how many people know what complete independence involves. Complete independence may become as awesome as Jean-Paul Sartre's freedom.

Cutting costs is another reason usually mentioned for living off-campus. How high would apartment rates jump if the demand for them increased by 800 people? It wouldn't take long for Maryville College to become surrounded by an academic ghetto such as the Ft. Sanders area surrounding UT. Ft. Sanders' Slumlords would be very much in favor of everyone living off campus.

While off-campus living has immediate appeal, we'd question the unabashed acceptance of such a policy without first determining its long-term effects.

Notes To Garcia

BY TOM COE

New Products Editor

In a dozen weeks or so the senior class will be passing on out of here, sheepskin in hand, to take a crack at the "real" world, better yet, to let that real world take a crack at them. I had a letter from an old friend the other day, one who is several years out of school. They wrote, "Well, so you might go to Florida and work — you'll be surprised to see where life takes you in the next few years." They were speaking, I'm sure, of our collective aimlessness. Most of us simply lack a set of plans for the future and maybe that is right, maybe it isn't.

One often hears from old Maryville graduates how unprepared they were for "out there." This certainly is not a specifically Maryvillian malaise, but possibly the fate of a liberal arts education. Having been described as a "rich man's education," liberal arts offers little direction and less job opportunities. The problem is that maybe too few of us are rich, too few of us can afford our kind of education. It is, indeed, an expensive proposition.

Perhaps though we should take another view. College is not a job corps center; that is, a college's job is not to mold its students to fit a job description (which is what many large universities do or attempt to do). Maryville, like many other liberal arts colleges, hopes to instruct something like "the whole person' in the classic formula of traditional values and intellectual inquiry.

We might well look at the place of school in our society. What is its function? For the most part, the western system of mass education is the most effective transmitter of cultural values ever built by men. School is the molder and the indoctrinator of culture. Ivan Illich has pointed out that all school really does is create status and that no one learns anything at all. The liberal arts college is supposed to turn all this around, but of course, it does not. We are still injected with the values of our western culture here and what we come out thinking is little different from what most other westerners think. After sixteen or seventeen years of running to meet that bus every fall, you're pretty well robatized as to how you think.

So what does that degree mean to us? For many parents, who did not themselves attend college, it will be part of a dream that they had twenty odd years ago, and they will not understand the blase attitude of many of those graduating. But maybe that attitude haunts us because the degree no longer means social security like it used to. And maybe some of us just feel like all we've really learned is how to play the "school game." We have learned more how to pass a class than what individual classes have purported to teach. This is not the heritage of the last four years but of the last twenty some years, since we learned the mother was warm and hollering got us fed. This degree is only a part of that continuing process.

We have been programmed by our educational system. The idea is to get that degree (the school game's objective) and gain our status. Then we can look down on others. It's quite obvious that this sort of snobbery goes on in our own dormitories. People throw their paper, cigarettes, etc. on the floor because they know that somebody is there to clean it up. The basic assumption is one that we are better somehow than the housekeeping people, while as idealistic, elists, and "educated" young people, we might mouth something else.

I hear some of those who will graduate this spring wonder if college was the right idea. Some are wondering if they are really any further along than they were when they left home.

The best thing to do is to take that degree and then do your best to forget it. Take what you learned along the way (incidental to the school game), use it on yourself. They used to say that college was a place where folks "found themselves;" it seems basic to this graduating class that we aren't headed in any direction yet. But don't wait too long. Ignazio Silone in Bread and Wine suggests what happens to many along the way: "When Concettino confessed that you don't become what you would like to become he expressed crudely, without realizing it, the essence of modern tragedy."

What does that degree mean to you? Where will it take you? Only you can answer that, my friend.

Student Questions Refunds

DEAR EDITOR,

After attending the community meeting after fire, I thought I should respond to one of the questions raised. The question dealt with the refund of money in the event a girl from Pearsons decided to leave school. From my personal experience with the refund of money from the treasurer's office, I would like to attempt to shed some light on the subject. Last year I was unable to return to school after Christmas vacation due to being hospitalized in my hometown. After recovering from my illness I returned to school in the sixth week of the term. I then talked to Mr. Layman of the treasurer's office about a refund of my money for the entire winter term. He stated to me that I would be given $675 credit to this year's payments. He assured me that he would send a letter to my parents stating the school would refund said amount, which they never received.

When I received the bill for this year it did not include the deduction of the $675 credited to me. I then contacted Mr. Layman and at first he was hesitant to refund me any money but then stated that I would receive only $400 credit. When I asked him about the other $275 he told me that I was mistaken and he said he had never stated that I would be refunded $675.

I would suggest to anyone who trys to get a refund of their money to get it in writing as soon as the treasurer's office states how much they will refund or expect the same kind of treatment I received from the "HONORABLE" treasurer's office.

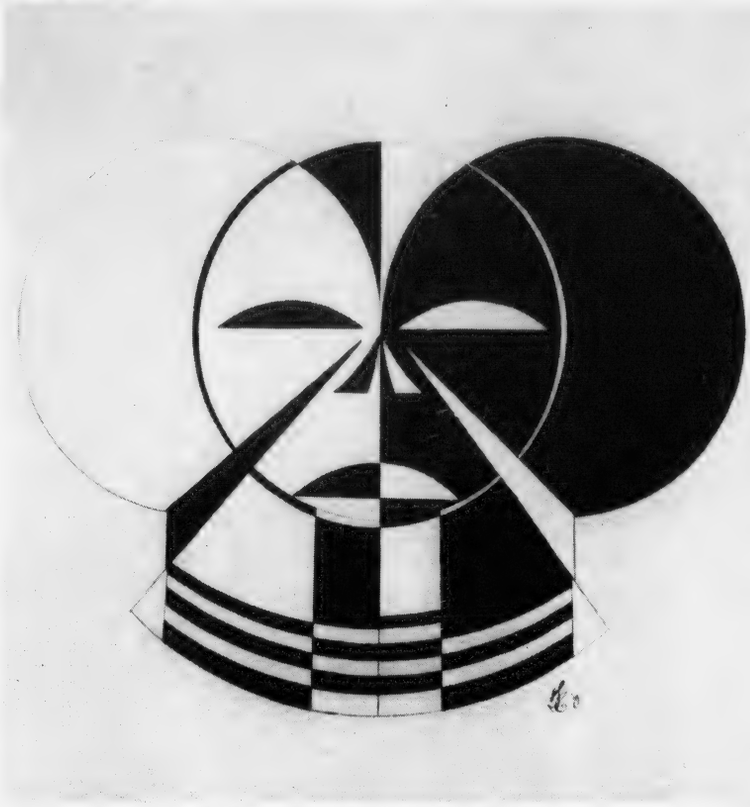
Trees



By Bill Martin

Sometimes I wish to be as a tree in winter, facing nature's cold on my brow,
yet standing firm my ground.
Yet sometimes, I wish to be as a tree in spring, giving birth to many and many a leaf, and spreading a drop of radiance to those around.
Sometimes, still, I feel the urge to be a tree in summer, draped in a cloak of leaves so green, bearing my fruit for all to eat.
And in other times, a tree in fall, I wish to be,
to turn colorful with joy,
my coat of arms for all to see.
O, how glorious a tree,
giving shade and beauty,
germinated from within,
And spreading its limbs skyward,
as an eagle giving birth to flight.

Ode to a Whopper

One charred pickle lies where once a whopper stood.
The flame that cooked the whopper's meat,
T'was not as fierce as this!
"My whopper's still in there!" sopped the Fourth floor girl. "I left it in that Hell!"
the long-hoses held her back.
She stretched her arms towards Moose and Bear.
"Hold her fast!" barked the noble Moose —
But the loss of a whopper's too much to bear.
She falls and weeps, the stars throw down their spears. Six pillars guard their horrid snack.
That Grecian temple, the Burger King,
May keep on making burgers, but they shall not forget the unholy flame which ate the sabbath whopper.

Heritage: part of the Terry Collins Exhibit

Exhibit Features Terry Collins

The Student Center at Knoxville College will present an art exhibit of the work of Terry Collins, February 20-March 12, 1972. The artist, who is Black, is a senior art major at Maryville College. The show will reflect four years of study at Maryville College. A variety of mediums such as pencil, charcoal, felt-tip pen, ink and washes, collage, clay, oil, acrylic and wood is included in the exhibit.

Mr. Collins says: "Art is my major medium of communication. Art is one of the most primitive means of communication, is powerful in transferring thoughts and feelings of pride, anger, rage, and other messages as any other medium of communication and we do need to communicate."

A piece of sculpture, "Flame of Life" combining ancient Christian symbolism with contemporary expression was incorporated into the schematic design for a church in California. The sculpture may be seen beneath the Cross and above the door of the Church of Reconciliation, United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. located on Grove Street in the Golden Gateway. The artist has exhibited at Hunter Gallery in 1969, the Annual Black Arts Festival at the University of California at Berkley, 1970, the 1971 Dogwood Arts Festival at the University of Tennessee and has had a one-man show at Maryville College. Enclosed is a photo of his work, a drawing in black and white, entitled "Heritage".

The exhibit will be open Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and on Sunday from 2-5:00 p.m.

Status Quo VS Change

Dear Editor:

Carl and I received a phone call this past week from a former MC student who still resides in the area. The party relayed the fact that Pearsons decided to let the world know that she is showing her age; in short, fire. We regreted to hear this, because Pearsons, from my own non-architectural standpoint, is a beautiful building. However, I began to ponder the situation in which the students and (that ungodly label) Administration are now placed. The fellows of Anderson Hall, first floor, are faced with worry and predicament. The students are worried about their safety in the older dorms and about eating facilities.

But let me point out that the predicaments are the same, only the situation is different. Pearsons was the spark (so to speak) that again relayed that old conflict of status quo vs. progress (or improvement). Perhaps Pearsons was a blessing in disguise. This conflict, whether it is at MC or in society, will probably never be resolved; however, there can be a compromise.

If students are "fighting" for renovations or new facilities, don't conduct yourselves like a bull in a china shop. I learned this bit of advice the hard way when Carl and I were Head Residents of that infamous Dorm III. Battle tactics of the most highly organized nature are essential. But don't forget to listen to the other side as well. And all this applies to any other gripes you may have. I yelled and demanded better administrative procedures right into the President's face, and got nowhere. (Carl thought we were going to be fired right on the spot!)

Anyway, there are a few of you who are concerned about this particular situation and other "problems" encompassing MC. Don't lose this concern, because you are the ones who can remedy some of the problems. Don't let the ACC do it all for you without letting them hear your voices. Just don't sit in your rooms and gripe because you will just make yourself miserable. True, you are at MC to get an education (and I assure you, you'll get an excellent one); on the other hand, you live at MC, and you should get involved with your college politically and socially in order to get a total education.

In short, you are at Maryville not to be just at MC. You are there to be with her and not against her; consequently, you can then help the college to be a better college, and not as a refuge for chronic gripers.

Peace,
Pam Gehman, '70

Judy Greer Has A Kitchen Candle Factory

By Leigh Thorington

Judy Greer has her kitchen divided into a wax half and a food half..Her candle factory, which needs no expensive materials, uses peach cans and cookie cutters for molds. She says anyone with a little ingenuity can make candles.

Judy began her candle career in November 1970 with an interim project. Being an art major, she likes the creative quality of candle making best. Although the same molds are used for a number of candles, she never knows how the finished candle will look. She is also delighted when other people find enjoyment in candle making. In fact, Judy introduced her brother to the fairly simple process, and he is now doing better than she is!

Judy thinks that students appreciate handcrafted articles more than the average shopper. Her attempts at selling candles at stores have been unsuccessful. Although she gives some away and sometimes sells at half price, Judy expects to make a little more this year than last because she bought her supplies wholesale.

Candles provide Judy with some emotional needs also. When she gets depressed or lonely, she heats up her wax like other people would write poetry or play an instrument.

After graduation in June, Judy would like to make candles all day; but she expects to work somewhere else as well. She will sell candles from her home and is willing to answer any questions about her hobby. Another show is planned for sometime in March or near the end of school.

Judy is lucky to enjoy making an article which she can watch from beginning to end. She sees each candle begin with her hands and the wax and end with the expression on someones face.

Last Home Game For Dribblers Was Big Bounce

In the closing home game for the Scots in the 1971-72 season, the fans were treated to a thriller with the Scots eking out an 87-72 victory over Covenant.

The game was close throughout, and the Scots, although holding an eight point lead at one stage, could not put Covenant down. At half time, the score was deadlocked at 40-40. The start of the second half saw the Scots gain a 52-48 advantage and maintain that spread until Covenant tied them at 72-72. At that point, Postler, McKinstry, and Schaurer took over and provided the margin of difference.

The highlight of the evening was the appearance of Dusty Miller. Dusty entered the game and was promptly fouled. However, Dusty failed to convert the charity shot. His comment after the gale was, "I could have made it if I had taken my time."

The scoring saw McKinstry with 35, Postler 14, Schaurer 14, Butler 10, Ross 10, Graham and Morse with apiece. Postler also pulled down 23 rebounds.

In previous action, the Scots had met some rough going. Lee College bounced the Scots 93-78, using superior board strength and cold Scots' shooting to gain the victory.

McKinstry led the scoring with 23, Butler 17, Scharuer 15, Ross 14, Postler 6, Graham 2, and Morse 1.

Tusculum College was next for the Scots. The Scots started fast and appeared to be in control at the half. Tusculum opened the second half with a press, and the Scots dissipated rapidly. The Scots had the ball with the score tied at 80 but were unable to convert a shot and thus were forced into overtime. The overtime proved disastrous for the boys and they fell behind at the outset and never caught up. The final score was 92-86, the Pioneers on top.

The scoring was led by McKinstry with 32. Schaurer had 15, Postler 10, Butler 13, Ross 12, and Morse 4.

Last Thursday, LMU came to Maryville in hopes of repeating their first victory over the Scots. From the start, the Scots were ice cold from the field. Of their first seventeen shots they canned only one. They managed to stay close throughout the half and trailed only 41-35 at the intermission.

The second half saw the Scots catch up twice but were never able to pull ahead. Postler's exit by way of fouls hurt the cause on the boards. Where the Scots had been getting two shots off on offense, they were now being held to one. The final end at 93-79 saw LMU on top.

Dan McKinstry had 32 points and 16 rebounds to lead the Scots. Postler contributed 14 points and 15 rebounds to the cause. Butler had 19 points, Ross and Schaurer 3, Morse 4, and Graham 4.

The season drew to a close on Tuesday when the Scots ventured to Lee College for their final game of the campaign.

Men's Intramurals

A And B Leagues Score

The most exciting game of the week was between the Dark Horses and the Band. Led by Salage's rebounding and Rhodes' outside shooting the Dark Horses built up a 12 point second half lead. But then, plagued by bad passes and stupid mistakes, their lead dwindled to one point with 1:30 to go. With :40 left the Band went ahead 59-58, the final score. DeBlois had 14 and Thompson 13 for the Band, Yacucci adding 10. Rhodes paced the Dark Horses with 21, while Salage had 14 and Steve Rael 10. The Dark Horse defeat may keep them out of the playoffs. At this point the Juniors and the Band will be the A League representatives.

In another close game the Dark Horses sneaked by Park Burly 57-46. The game was close the entire way, with superior rebounding making the difference. Freddie Rhodes again paced the winners with 16 while Salage poured in 14. Portz paced Park Burly with 10, while Malcolm Westbrook had 9 and Bobbie Hughes 8.

The Juniors made it four in a row against the Sophomores, 61-34. The game was close in the first quarter but the Juniors' overall strength eventually took over. Jay Lentz hit for 20, Mark Brooks 14, and Drewery 12 for the unbeaten Juniors. Jefferson Whitesburg and Davy Marsden played very well, scoring 5 and 2, respectively. Don Gilbert led the Sophs with 13 with Ferguson adding 8.

B League

The People began the week with an upset of the Independents, 57-42. "Daphnia" Ramger led all scorers with 18 with "Gunner" Schwartz adding 15 for the People. Bobby Eickelberg had 14 and Maggio 10 for the Independents.

The Hackers kept their perfect record with a 66-46 victory over Southside. David Clinton scored 22 for the Hackers, David Warwick adding 14, and Eddie Stapp 10. Willie Blair had his third straight 20 point game, scoring 25 for Southwide, with Andy Simmons dropping in 10.

Wrestlers Return From Road

The Scots' wrestlng team rounded out their regular season last week with a road trip into Kentucky.

While there, they defeated Eastern Kentucky, won over the University of Kentucky and bowed to Moorehead State.

In the 21-15 loss to Moorehead State, Paul Naylor won the opening match by decision.

Doug Cunningham and Roger Reiter also won decisions. Teammate Brad Kehler pinned his opponent. Due to injury, John Poore did not participate.

In what was to have been a triangular meet, Maryville emerged victorious over Eastern Kentucky 24-19. The University of Kentucky forfeited the match.

John Poore won by default in the third round, and Bill Baxis took a decision. Brad Kehler won by a fall in 15 seconds.

Jim Batchler scored a pin, and Roger Reiter won a decision over a 6'4" 260-pound heavyweight.

Participating in the Scots' 9-6 season, four wrestlers broke the school scoring record. Poore, Naylor, Kehler, and Reiter all topped 53, with Batchler following at 51.

Six of our wrestlers qualified for the nationals through their performances in the SEIWA tourney. These six are Naylor, Poore, Baxis, Cunningham, Pacifico, and Reiter.

'Forum' presented

The cast of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" worked hard during the week to put the finishing touches on the performance. This comedy, directed by Mark Mertz, will be performed March 3 and 4. Student tickets are $1.50, others $2.00.

Pearsons fair postponed

The first annual Pearsons Hall Memorial art fair, which was to have been held this weekend, has been postponed until some weekend in the spring term. Definite dates for the event have not yet been set.

The fair is planned to raise money for the girls who lived in Pearsons Hall, which was heavily damaged by fire on February 13.

The fair will feature various arts which will be the work of the participants. Included in these arts are pottery; boutiquing, which is the art of wax printing on shirts; decoupage; tie dying; knitting, and crocheting.

Music will also be included in the f. ir. The MC band will play, and members of the music department are tentatively scheduled to participate. A play will also be presented by a group of students.

Each department is encouraged to participate in this money raising event. The money will come from the sale of various works of art that will be available at the fair. Those interested in participating should contact Gil Nicholas, Chip Murray, or Amy Dickerson.

Kitchen plans explained

Miss Ware may be cooking by Spring Term. Mr. Brahams said that many of the plans for Pearsons will depend on the weather and how the building's interior reacts to being wet. If all goes well, Miss Ware and her staff can cook in Pearsons, and use silverware (in the gym).

Plans for Pearsons also depend on the insurance settlement which can come anywhere from 30 to 90 days. There is quite a gap between insurance coverage and the actual cost of replacing a dorm and dining hall. Plans for remodeling Pearsons or building new buildings also depend on the amount of funds raised.

The catering service from Morrisons is MC's only hope for feeding the college at present. Morrisons has a different concept of portion, and they don't have the facilities for mass cooking. Mr. Brahams said that MC is paying for food for the college and they are working on getting enough food.

The optimum arrangement of dorm and dining hall is separate buildings. Again, the insurance settlement and money will be factors.

Mr. Brahams offered to consider any suggestions for improvement. He mentioned that griping about food was not a suggestion.

W.C. Fields and Oldies Return

This brand new program feature has become very popular with the college-age television viewers throughut the country. This program will feature a series of classic movies dating back to 1928. They will star W. C. Fields, of course, along with Gary Cooper, Cary Grant, Ben Blue, Rudy Vallee, George Burns & Gracie Allen, and many others.

This program will run each Sunday, 1:30-3:00 p.m. and feature titles to be used in the next few weeks are as follows:

1. "Tillie & Gus" with Baby Leroy.
2. "The Coconuts" with Harpo and Chico Marks.
3. "Go West Young Man" with Mae West and Randolph Scott.
4. "Horse Feathers" with Groucho, Harpo, Chico, and Zeppo Marks.
5. "Million-Dollar Legs" with Jack Oakie and Ben Turpin.

What is college about?

Maryville College is hosting a Going to College Seminar on Friday, March 3 for Blount and Knox County seniors who are interested in learning "what college is all about."

Registration will begin at 1:00 p.m. followed by a welcome address by President Joseph J. Copeland.

A variety of topics will be discussed, and visiting seniors will have an opportunity to talk with faculty members regarding their major field of interest.

Following student-led tours of the campus, the high school students will be guests of the college for the evening meal and the performance of "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum" at the College Theatre.

ECHO ends for term

This issue of the HIGHLAND ECHO is the last one for the winter term. No issue is published the last week of the term. The Echo will begin publicaton again on March 31, 1972, for the spring term.

Former MC student speaks at CIV

On Wednesday, March 8, Miss Mildred Doyle, Superintendent of Knox County Schools, will address the CIV audience. Born, raised, and educated in Knox County, Miss Doyle attended Maryville for one year and then started classroom teaching.

She continued her education at the University of Tennessee where she earned her B.S. and M.S. degrees. She served as a classroom teacher and as a principal before becoming Superintendent.

Miss Doyle has served on many educational committees. She is a member of the State Advisory Council on Vocational Education, a member of the State Commission on Teacher Education and Certification, and was a delegate to the President's 1970 White House Conference on Children.

Miss Doyle has been awarded an honorary Doctor's Degree from Maryville College.

Dr. Hafner pierces iron curtain conference

Dr. Arthur Hafner, Chairman of the Department of Education at Maryville College, is one of three Tennessee educators who will attend the Annual Comparative Education Seminar and Field Study in Russia, Bulgaria and France.

The theme, "Educational Contrasts in Eastern and Western Europe," will emphasize the problems and changes that are taking place in upper secondary and higher education.

Designed for leaders in education, it is sponsored by the Comparative International Education Society, Phi Delta Kappa, and the Research Center for the Study of Socialist Education at Kent State University.

Lectures will be given by outstanding educators, scholars and administrators, with visits to schools and institutions of higher learning.

Fine Arts students hear new sounds

By Kathy Meier

As part of the interdisciplinary course in fine arts, Gilbert Trythall, director of the Peabody Electronic Music Studio presented a lecture and program Tuesday.

In Trythall's lecture to the fine arts class, he traced the history of electronic music from the year 1898 with the carbon art lamp through the development of vacuum tubes, computers, and the analogue method to the Moog synthesizer. It seems that with each new breakthrough in technology a new sound had been discovered.

The most familiar work in this area is "Switched on Bach." Many types of music have been synthesized, however, from rock tunes to country western songs by Scruggs.

Trythall, who became interested in the new sounds in 1965, has produced films to go with his electronic pieces. The subject matter ranges from old T.V. commercials to intricate patterns flased on the screen, walls and audience. For the last number on the program, "Parallex", Mr. Trythall recruted various members of the band and the audience joined in by reciting a poem by Mr. Trythall.

Dr. Harter (left) and Mr. Phillip Steele (right) discuss Mr. Gilbert Trythall's (center) musical innovations.

Work-Study suggested

At the last ACC meeting, mention was made of a work-study program. This idea is one of the most exciting to come out of the meeting. The possibilities of such a program need exploring.

Colleges are often upbraided for their demi-eden, ivory-tower qualities. With the addition of a work-study program, students might enter the "real" world for a year or so. With exposure to both environments, they would be better able to evaluate both. With an intellectual background coupled with experience, students might find more relevancy in today's colleges.

A number of students follow such a program anyway. Unfortunately, they're categorized as drop-outs. A work-study program would legitimize what's already a worthwhile experience.

It's been suggested that college is where people used to come to find themselves. Today, the reverse seems true. Seizing upon this trend such a program could be beneficial to both individual students and the college.

With a number of work-study programs in operation at other colleges, we'd urge the evaluation of such a program and its adaptation to MC.

Letters to the Editor

Recitial praised

Dear Editor:

This was the week that was for culture at Maryville College and certainly those of you who were unfortunate enough to miss the Recitals of Tuesday and Saturday evenings are at a disadvantage for not seeing the Music Department at its best.

On Tuesday evening Mr. Lee Kull of our faculty was the featured artist with Mrs. Sallie Schoen, also of our faculty, as accompanist. Although in formal recital, Mr. Kull informally introduced the audience to his instruments of the evening, the Viola and Violin, and also to the individual selections of his program. Beginning the program with his 232 year old Viola and finishing with his "Texas born" Violin, Mr. Kull left no doubt in the audience about his ability to interpret and play for total effect. Almost inseparable from Mr. Kull's music was his piano accompaniment by Mrs. Schoen whose usually great performance as a soloist was no less deminished in her secondary role. The combination of these two fine artists reached the highlight of the evening in their performance of the Sonata No. 8 in C Major by Mozart. Their blend of precision and virtuosity rendered Mozart as only Mozart should be played.

And as if this were not enough, Saturday evening once again allowed an unsuspecting audience to climb the heights of the finest in musical attainment. This offering was a Junior Recital by Miss Dana Rule and Mrs. Delores Ziegler. Although they are only rated as Junior level music students this fact was not imparted by their performance. Both artists responded with clarity and breadth of tone, excellent interpretation, and a certain quality of stage presence that added a magical depth to what may have been just another routine recital. The highlights of the program were Miss Rule's Vissi d'arte by Puccini which practically brought the college level audience to its feet in sheer ecstasy; Mrs. Ziegler's Letzte Hoffrung by Schubert; and the final of the evening which was a Recitative and Duet by Delibes sung by both artists.

If by chance you missed either or both of these events then you are at a disadvantage my friend for it has been a long time since there has been even one program of this caliber—two may never happen again.

Off-campus living defended

Dear Editor:

We at Maryville College find ourselves striving to achieve an education. This education is not concerned with academics only, but also with the expression of life. To learn, to study, and then to create from what we have learned is a must. We must be able to create in our own way, to learn what we need to learn, to live our life according ot our own needs, values and in accordance with our nature.

The recent editorial expressed concern at the loss of community that might come about through any policies allowing off-campus living. Is it too much to ask that while studying and learning from each other that we cannot study or learn in the atmosphere we feel would allow us the most freedom? How can one call this a community when the students are treated like young children, unable to behave themselves without the supervision of baby-sitters. Are we so naive that we cannot live or rather exist without some one watching over us, peeking into our rooms, running our lives? Are we blind, that we would or could let a M.C. ghetto come about? We are partially a community, if only existing of students, allow such to happen as has happened in Knoxville? It is unlikely.

Living off campus is just another basic freedom that should be granted to the students. Our rooms now are our own private homes. We cannot be stifled in our attempt to live and create. Rebuilding Pearsons is a farce. It is another attempt to keep the students, a group of people, real human beings with real goals, and dreams, in one position, that of the downtrodden masses.

Why can't we be free to live the dreams we dream? We want to learn what is relevant to us, not someone else. We want to be treated like adults, like free people, not children who must be protected from the evils of society until we graduate and are then faced with them.

Dining hall exonerated

Dear Editor,

A good many of the student body have been complaining about the quality and quantity of the food in our present dining room situation. We realize that a lot of your complaints are valid, but it is neither the waitresses nor Miss Ware's fault. Could you please show consideration to both the waitresses and Miss Ware by

I. not complaining about
  1. late food,
  2. cold food,
  3. amount of food.

II. not speaking
  1. harshly,
  2. profanely,
  3. sarcastically.

III. not being so immature as to leave 5 plates piled on one chair nor food on the table and floor in retaliation.

Our job is hard enough and we would appreciate it if you would be more considerate and not make it any harder. Everyone is working under strain and limited conditions.

Dining Hall Personnel.

Poetry

Cornflakes On My Feet

Once walking on a rainy Monday dawn,
My mind began to wander
Through clouds of fluffy down,
With wings of golden silk.
In fall I flew and saw pretty colored leaves,
Falling in a glorious death.
In winter I witnessed naked trees,
Blanketed in a fresh cover of snow.
In spring, I felt the arising of a new life,
Leaping up with joy around me.
In summer I saw life renewed at a new height,
Singing praises all around me.
My mind came back to the dreary morn, and the fallen leaves of fall felt like cornflakes on my bare feet.

Sometimes a great picture

BY TOM COE
New Products Editor

Ken Kesey's epic novel of the Northwest, Sometimes a Great Notion, has been done up on film these days. With a lineup like Henry Fonda, Paul Newman ,Lee Remick and Michael Sorenson the story gets told well enough but it leaves you wanting to know more, feeling that this or that relationship might have been more fully explored. Leeland (Sorenson) and Hank (Newman) play off each other effectively but I'm told that the book is more centrally involved with the character of the returning son, Leeland, whereas in the film they come off rather even up.

The Stomper family of Washington is a perfect, almost classic statement of Consciousness I. These hard-nosed loggers have a motto of "Never give an inch!" The patriarch (Fonda) sums up the philosophy of the life by explaining to Lee Remick that all there is, is "to work and sleep, eat, screw and drink and keep going on."

The union has struck the Stomper logging company and the story centers around the Stomper's refusal to give into the demands of the Union. The old man, Henry, calls them "socialist S.O.B.'s." In the midst of this, Lee returns home. He's been gone since age 10, living with his mother, who is now dead. His long hair and ways don't exactly fit that Stomper mold, but he procedes to help in the cutting.

This is a movie that doesn't, thank heaven, ask a lot of questions. It's not a "message" picture, and that in itself is refreshing. It gets very tiresome these days to have every motion picture and phonograph record concealing a message. Sometimes a Great Notion is simply a good story, well-told. The acting is solid, and the camera work is clean. Very easily, the camera could have drifted to the magnificent scenery of the area, smothering us with the beauty and filtered shots, up-staging the story itself, but it refrained from the sensational in order to deal more fully and realistically with the mundane. This movie tells you no lies, except that it deals with a dead or dying breed of men who take life straight on with no excuses and no holds barred; perhaps it is therein that the sadness and significance of the story lies.

This is no great movie, although at times it approaches both greatness and brilliance; as a form it is more concerned with story-telling than art per se. There are some real empty spaces here, but like the men and women it tells about, the movie has a certain depth and concreteness to it, and that in these days of flimsy thrillers and arty statements is not only refreshing but well worth seeing.

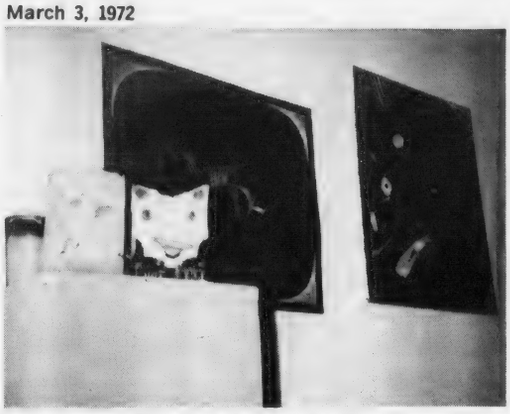
Pass-Fail tried at Iowa

Iowa City, Ia.- (I.P.)-Students at the University of Iowa say they take courses on a Pass-Fail (P-F) basis to ease their anxiety about grade or course difficulty and to conserve their energy for other courses and interests, according to a research report recently released here.

The report was written to provide factual information for the liberal arts educational policy committee, and it is not an evaluation study of the merits or dermerits of P-F, according to Douglas R. Whitney, examination service bureau director.

Less than one-third of the students polled said they took courses P-F so they could explore areas outside their majors. Only five per cent identified personal interest in a subject as the most important reason for choosing the P-F option, the report of the Evaluation and Examination Services concludes.

The report consists of six parts: (1) background information, (2) policies regulating P-F at the U of I, (3) who took courses P-F between 1968-70, (4) who took courses P-F in 1970-71, (5) reasons for choosing the P-F option and (6) a comparison of P-F grades with regular grades in the same courses.



Students here choose relieving anxiety and conserving energy by a wide margin over the other two most common positive reasons for choosing a P-F system of grading. The other two, exploring areas of knowledge of personal interest and studying for knowledge not grades, were both far down the line of preference, according to the poll.

The negative arguments for adopting a P-F system, namely that traditional grading is inaccurate, unstable, subject to sex bias, encourages conformity and is destructive of creativity, were not part of the present study.

Among the other results of the study are:

The use of the P-F option at the U of I is increasing, from six per cent in the Fall of 1968 to 13 per cent during the Spring, 1971. However, policy changes and special circumstances at the University accounted for some of the increase.

On the whole, better students take courses P-F more often than do poor students. Students with a grade point average (GPA) above 3.0 (a B or better) take twice as many courses P-F as do students between GPA 2.0 and

Fine Arts Projects displayed

Fine Arts projects display creativity in FAC

By Wiley Rutledge

The end of the term is approaching, and with the end of every term come the inevitable projects. These usually take the form of term papers, or in science courses, labs that the students have been working on for most of the term.

This is not true, however, in the Fine Arts 201 course. In this course, the term project means exactly that. Students choose what they want to do, with the only restriction being that they are not permitted to do a research paper.

The projects for this year's course have taken several forms. Many students have experimented in the visual arts, and many paintings and sketches can be found. Some students, following the same idea in a more inventive way, have made various kinds of candles, or sculpture. One student created sculptures from spaghetti, while another tried boutiquing and still another made a candle by melting wax into a carved out log.

Other arts are also widely represented. Several students wrote and performed music, and one even wrote some music on the computer. Still other students are writing poetry, and there is one group putting together a dance routine while others are working in film and theatre.

Many of these projects can be seen in the Fine Arts Center gallery. All of the projects are interesting, but perhaps the most interesting is one that is in the very front of the gallery. It is in the shape of a dragon, and it's made entirely from wreckage taken from Pearsons Hall. It's called "The Pearsons Fire Monster."

Planned parenthood plans in Tennessee

Tennessee has one of the most progressive family planning laws in the United States, and the task now is to see that its advantages are fully realized and used by those who need them, according to Dr. David F. Fardon, of the Planned Parenthood Association of Knox County.

The scope of the "Family Planning Act of 1971," passed at the last legislative session, is broad, establishing as a state policy that "All medically accepted contraceptive procedures, supplies, and information shall be readily and practically available to each and every person desirous of the same regardless of sex, race, age, income, number of children, marital status, citizenship or motive."

One of the difficulties, Dr. Fardon pointed out, is that knowledge of the information and services available is limited, particularly among those most in need of it. The Knox County Association is cooperating in a nation-wide campaign, sponsored by Planned Parenthood-World Population, a national Federation, to increase interest in family planning and make information about it available.

Interest in family planning ranges from the concern of population experts, who foresee overpopulation–the population explosion–to local communities concerned with the growth of welfare rolls and families and individuals where unwanted children cause financial and psychological worries.

On the broad scale, Planned Parenthood-World Population rejected any "dictation of the number of children any family may have" in favor of providing comprehensive voluntary control measures.

In Tennessee, the family planning act of 1971 came as a substitute for a bill which would have penalized certain mothers on welfare rolls by requiring sterilization as a condition of receiving further aid.

The harshness of the first bill promoted a deeper study of the problem, including the evidence of a number of surveys showing that welfare mothers and others in lower income groups were as interested as others in avoiding the birth of unwanted children and limiting the size of their families. The evidence showed that if family planning information were available, including birth control information and both male and female sterilization, the people would take advantage of it.

The result was the passage of the current Act. Specifically, the Act provides that, within the limits of funds available, "each public health agency of this state and each of its political subdivisions shall provide contraceptive procedures, supplies, and information, including voluntary sterilization measures for male or female persons eligible for free medical service."

Rehearsals for Oratorio underway

The Oratorio Chorus, consisting of students, faculty, and community singers, has begun rehearsals for the premiere of Richard Yardumian's oratorio, "The Story of Abraham." The chorus meets in room 101 of the Fine Arts Center on Monday evenings, from 7:15 to 8:30. The performance is scheduled for May 18, and will be held in the Chapel.

The Dallas Symphony Orchestra has been recontracted to participate in the performance. A strike involving this orchestra prevented the oratorio's premiere last fall. Of the original soloists, David Clatworthy and Lili Chookasian have also been recontracted. Phyllis Curtin will be replaced by Judith Raskin of the Metropolitan Opera. In addition, MC Affiliate Artist Phillip Steele will participate as a soloist.

Dr. Harter has announced that prior to the premiere, a segment of the oratorio will be performed in London and in Oxford during the first part of March.

Individual Major offered for spring

Does the departmental major not meet your particular needs? Have you ever wished you could design your own curriculum?

At Maryville College this option has been available to students for the past two years in the program known as the Individualized Major.

In order to maintain the high quality education for which the school has been noted, certain restrictions are placed on Individualized Majors. For example, core courses are presupposed, and all courses must be within the framework of existing courses. But the ten major courses (including the two in independent study) may be selected from two or more departments. Full information about this program may be obtained in the Registrar's Office.

Advisors of Individualized Majors should be reminded that the first comprehensive examination across departmental lines will be given during the spring term. Department heads and advisors are jointly responsible for arranging the two-day examination which will cover all the major courses taken by the student. Undergraduate Record Examinations in a particular field, of course, will not be taken by students who have elected the Individualized Major. Responsibilities of department heads and advisors are outlined in the Registrar's Office.

Dan Stallings and Cheryl Van Metre plan program for the shortened band tour.

Band tour is cancelled

The Maryville College Highlander Band has cancelled their annual tour that was to take place during spring break.

There are many reasons for this including lack of funds, lack of interest, and complications arising from the Pearson's fire.

Instead of a spring tour, the band will be playing concerts at local high schools instead. The first of these will be at Webb School in Knoxville. The band will accompany the Van Meter School of Dance.

Other ideas raised about tour include a longer extended tour every two years.

Judith Raskin, soloist, readies for Oratorio

Critics delve deep into their thesauri for appreciative adjectives to describe Judith Raskin, the young Metropolitan Opera star who will sing the soprano role in "The Story of Abraham," rescheduled for May 18 and 19. "The gleam of Miss Raskin's voice is a constant delight," according to a New York Times critic. The New York Herald Tribune described her as a "beautifully focussed soprano," while the New York Telegram praised her "gorgeous voice and gorgeous appearance."

These reviews are the more remarkable when one remembers that Judith Raskin is an artist who is entirely American-trained. Contrary to the opinions of many musical buffs, she has proved that a singer does not have to "make it in Europe first."

Asked the secret of her American success, she says simply, "My teacher. I studied with Anna Hamlin at Smith College and later, fortunately for me, she came to New York. I am still taking lessons from her. I have two and three per week."

Not only is Miss Raskin American-trained, but she has definite views on American singing. "I feel very strongly about opera in English. I have sung it in that language at Santa Fe and Central City, and you should hear the response of those audiences. Opera is theatre; it is drama and it should be understood on all levels."

Other soloists to be featured in the Yardumian oratorio are Lili Chookasian of the Metropolitan Opera; David Clatworthy of the New York City Opera; and Maryville's Affiliate Artist Philip Steele. Anshel Brusilow will conduct the Dallas Symphony Orchestra for the two performances.

A review

Recital receives enthusiastic response

By Wiley Rutledge

The faculty recital of Mr. Lee Kull last Thursday night was another outstanding musical event held on the MC campus.

Mr. Kull, who is conductor of the college-community orchestra, was featured on violin and viola and was accompanied by Mrs. Sallie Schoen at the piano. The program featured works by well known composers Mozart, Brahms, and Hindemith as well as music by lesser known masters Marais and Eccles.

The first half of the program featured viola music while the second put the emphasis on the violin. Mr. Kull himself made the program more interesting by commenting briefly on each work before it was performed and also explaining the differences between and histories of the violin and viola.

The program was an outstanding evening of music. The music was well chosen and beautifully performed. The piano and the violin and viola worked very well together to produce a very fulfilling performance. The evening was also unique. As Mr. Kull, a member of the Knoxville symphony, himself commented, a viola recital is rare and a recital featuring a combination of viola and violin is even rarer. A rarity like this recital is worth waiting for.

Baseballers start practice

Monday marked the opening of baseball practice for the Scots. Coach Baird is blessed with a letterman at all positions which brightens the picture from the start.

Returning for the Scots are Seniors Larry Stephens–SS, Joe Kozel-C, who are the co-captains, Dan McKinstry, CF, Dusty Miller-OF. Juniors are Mark Brookes, 2B, Rob Randall-P, Kent Smith-P, Leon Hart-B. Sophomores returning are Dave Clinton-OD, Earl McMahan-OF, P, Joe Bilella OF, and Glenn Doig-P.

Bill Cochran's status is still uncertain. He has another year of eligibility, but he has not decided whether or not to play. Bill plays third base for the team.

Newcomers to the squad are Brad Hauge who sat out last year due to a broken ankle. Brad gives the Scots depth in the infield. Freshmen joining the squad are first baseman Paul Viggiano, outfielders Mike Wenktern, Chris Lang, Jim McEarhern, and Jim Lester.

The Scots are short on pitching and thus Dave Clinton and Joe Kozel could be called on to twirl some innings during the season.

The schedule has such teams as Tennessee at Chattanooga, Tennessee at Knoxville, Cumberland, LMU, Emory and Henry, and others.

The season opens March 29th with Messiah College providing the opposition. March 30th, Capital College will play here, and then on March 31st, Messiah will return to play a game. All three games will begin at 2:45 p.m.

Intramurals glance back; look ahead

FEMALE ALLSTARS COMPETE

Wednesday February 23 the women's intramural basketball teams competed in a close and fast game. Chi Beta won in the final outcome by a score of 38-20 over Theta Epsilon. It was a seesaw game with each team showing good ball control and strategy.

Melinda Lucas, a freshman from Maryville, was the standout for Chi Beta along with Sujean Bradley, a junior from Abingdon, Va.

Both teams fought hard and fair and good sportsmanship was certainly evident.

SPRING INTRAMURALS PLANNED

Women's intramurals have been planned for the spring term. This spring looks very promising for all interested women. The season will open with the ever popular sport softball. There is always a large turnout for this sport and the games are exciting. Following softball will be tennis under the experienced leadership of Morna McEver and Coralie Usrey.

A new sport has been added to the agenda this year thanks to the expanded gymnasium facilities. Girls will be invading the handball courts this spring for a racquet ball tournament.

On May 4th the annual track meet is scheduled with such events as the 50 yard dash, softball throw, the 440 relay, and the standing and running broad jump.

A swim meet is also coming up. Participants are urged to sign-up with their society or independently.

COED INTRAMURALS

During third term coed badminton, water polo and softball tournaments are scheduled. Judy Penry and Brad Towne are managers for the badminton tournament. Sign up sheets will be in the Campus Center and on the bulletin board by the equipment room in the Physical Ed. Building from March 1 through the 8th. Matches will begin the first week of next term and will be played for the most part in the evening.

Sign up sheets for waterpolo and softball rosters will be put up at the beginning of the new term. Any questions contact Mrs. Davis or Mr. Semple.

Dribblers wrapped-up for season

The Maryville cagers ended their season last Thursday against Lee College of Cleveland, Tennessee.

From the start, it was apparent that Lee College would dominate the boards. The Scots were mustering only one shot and as a consequence found themselves down 44-37 at the half.

The second half saw the Scots make several bids at the Vikings but they were never able to catch up. At the end the Vikings pulled ahead by 13 and won 92-79.

For the Scots, Dan McKinstry had 28, Mike Butler 19, Randy Schaurer 15, Scott Ross 6, Bill Postler 5, Phil Graham 2 and Dale Morse 3.

The final record was 8-16, but considering the unfortunate occurances during the season, the Scots played very respectable ball.

Dan McKinstry led the Scots with a 26.9 average. Mike Butler averaged 14.2, Randy Schaurer 10.8, Bill Postler 10, and Scott Ross 6.5 Larry Brown averaged 22 points and 17 rebounds in 8 games.

Bill Postler had the Scots in rebounds, followed by Dan McKinstry and Mike Butler.

From the foul line, the Scots shot 71.2 per cent as a team. Randy Schaurer hit 88 per cent from the line, Dan McKinstry 79 per cent and Bill Postler 75 per cent.

Looking at next season the Scots should be improved. Three of the five starters will return to lead them. Gary Childress and Don Young will return from injuries. These, men plus recruits, will have the job of replacing Postler and McKinstry who were seniors.

In 1867, the first women students enrolled at Mayville College.

Choir tour plans completed

Next Friday, March 10, the Maryville College Concert Choir will leave for its 25th annual spring tour. The tour will last twelve days.

The tour will include stops in five states. After a concert in Chattanooga, Tennessee, the choir will move on to Florida, where concerts will be given in Lakeland, Cape Coral, Fort Meyers, Bradenton, and New Smyrna Beach. Two stops are planned in Georgia, one in Warner Robins, and one in Decatur. In North Carolina, the choir will be hosted in Graham, and at Pfeiffer College in Misenheimer. After giving a concert in Columbia, South Carolina, the tour will end with a concert in Huntsville, Alabama.

As usual, the choir's repertoire is quite varied. The first part of the three part program includes works from the 16th to 19th centuries. Included are "O Magnify the Lord With Me" from the Bay State Collection, "Ave Verum" by Mozart, and a setting of Psalm 150 by the 16th century composer Richard Whyte, "O Praise God in His Holiness."

Part two is made up of new choral works receiving first performances as well as light works based on folksongs. Included is "Clap Your Hands," a new setting by MC graduate and former choir member Allan Hoke. Also included are two chorales by Richard Yardumian, one from "The Story of Abraham," the oratorio to be performed here on May 18; and several folksongs and spirituals, including settings of "Amazing Grace" and "Two Wings," both by Dr. Harter.

The third part of the concert features a folk mass, "Mass of a Pilgrim People" by Sister Miriam Therese Winter, which is the special feature of the program.

Touring choir members can look forward to a busy schedule. A typical day begins with the choir members assembling at the church early in the morning, having spent the night in homes of church members, and boarding the bus to begin the day's journey. The time for departure can be as early as 6:00 a.m., depending on the number of miles to be covered that day. On all school days, one and sometimes two programs are presented at a high school, either late in the morning or early in the afternoon. From the high school, the choir completes the day's travels to the church sponsoring them for the evening. The members then set up for the concert, enjoy some free time, eat dinner at the church, and present the concert in the evening. Afterwards, each choir member meets his hosts for the night. Next morning, the cycle begins again.

Flag Petitioned For Trip

Within the next few days, petitions will be placed in dorms and other buildings around campus concerning a symbolic gesture.

Sponsored by the World Federalist Youth and the World Concerns Committee on Campus, these petitions read in part: "We, the undersigned citizens of this country request that the United Nations flag be also planted on the Moon at the time of the next manned lunar landing to represent all peoples of the earth."

Annual misses deadlines; will not appear on time

Spokesmen for Hunter Publishing Co. of Winston - Salem, N.C., say that due to missed deadlines, the Chilhowean, the yearbook of Maryville College, cannot appear as scheduled on May 20.

In repeated telephone conversations with Ms. Clyde Ussery, MC Director of Communications, Hunter spokesmen stated that Tim Hodge, Chilhowean editor, has missed deadlines on January 14, February 11, and March 14 and, in essence, has broken the contract.

"They can't get it on time now," says Ms. Ussery.

Hodge had previously stated that the deadline had been "postponed" and the yearbook would appear on May 20 as scheduled.

Tom Young, Hunter's local represenative, denied any postponement.

Hunter's files show that about 44 pages out of a scheduled 144 have been received. Proofs on these 44 have not been returned. "They were supposed to have been returned February 22," says Ms. Ussery. "That's about one-third of the book," she continued.

At a Monday, March 27, Communications Committee meeting, Hodge said all copy except senior pictures was mailed to the publisher last Wednesday. "The Post Office has it; I sent it registered mail," Hodge said.

Hodge plans to have the senior section in the mail by Monday, April 3. Senior portraits were rescheduled for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday after a filter broke last Monday. They were taken in the Chilhowean room.

Asked if the date for senior pictures will cause further delays, Hodge said, "The lay-out is done. It shouldn't take long at all."

Commenting on the contents of the Chilhowean, Hodge stated that there were no formal pictures of underclassmen included in the yearbook. "I looked into the possibility of putting in underclassmen, and decided not to since it would ruin the book's creativity, "Hodge said.

In addition, Hodge stated the yearbook includes pictures of about twenty-five organizations.

Fred Hope Fund chooses to aid Bangledesh

Everyone knows who Bob Hope is, but who's Fred? Not the Schoen's dog! Guess again! Back at the turn of the century, an unusual Maryville College student had a vision. It was a dream that went beyond the world most students knew. His was a hope for world peace and international understanding. He worked hard to raise $50 which supported a missionary in China for a whole year. The impact of his concern was so greatly felt, that a fund was established in his name that has continued since 1900. That was Fred Hope.

"The Fred Hope Story" will be presented at a CIV on Wednesday, April 12 at which time projects for 1972 will be further explained. A carnival will be held in the chapel colonade area on Saturday, April 15 to raise funds for these projects. Any organization or individual who would be interested in building and or manning a booth should contact Sue Sterling, Gordon Adler or the Chaplain' Office.

As a result of studying the various needs of the world, Bangladesh arose as the most critical this year. The coast of East Pakistan was torn by cyclone and flood, leaving a half million dead. In the wake of this, last March the West Pakistani army visciously lashed out at the populace, leaving 300 million dead and sending some 10 million people into refugee camps in India. Approximately 8 million Bengali refugees have returned to the new nation of Bangladesh.

Many agencies and non-profit organizations will be seeking to meet these emergency needs. The Fred Hope funds will be channeled through UNICEF Bengal Relief. This agency was chosen because of its long history of working with the needy children of the world (50 percent of the refugee children under 5 are severly malnourished). Several years ago it received the Nobel Peace Prize which is usually given to individuals who have made the greatest contribution toward world peace and international understanding.

The world Concerns Committee of the ACC has decided to add an American concern to the current Fred Hope emphasis. The Sunset Gap Community Center in Appalachia has been chosen.

Easter service follows tradition

This Sunday morning, the College amphitheatre will see its thirty-fifth annual Easter Sunrise Service. In an age when tradition after tradition has fallen by the wayside and when an ever-increasing demand for relevance has prevailed, the fact that the Easter Sunrise Service has retained its popularity.

When the service began in 1937 it was the first service of its kind in this area. Many residents of the area still join members of the College community in this celebration of Christ's Resurrection.

This year's service is scheduled to begin at 6:21. If it is a cloudless morning, the sun will come up through the trees of the Eastward-facing amphitheatre during the service.

The forty-five minute service is comprised largely of music, presented by both the band and the choir. Traditionally, the choir begins the service with an old Easter hymn, "Christ is Arisen." President Copeland will preside over the service.

Gymnastic program to be presented

The Tumbling Tumbliers and Westminster Choir of the First Presbyterian Church, Charleston, West Virginia, will present a combined program of acrobatic gymnastics and choral music at Maryville College Tuesday at 8:00 p.m.

The two groups of sixth youth members represent a portion of the church's overall ministry to its young people. A fulltime activities program, directed by Robert A. Francis, involved not only gymnastics but all types of sports and recreational activities.

Similarly, a ful-time ministry of music program is directed by Conrad Eaddy. The touring choir is composed of members chosen from a choir membership of 80 voices and is one of the eight choir groups in the church.

The groups have toured West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky, Alabama and Tennessee. They have performed before groups which range from small groups at orphanages and civic meetings to audiences of 10,000 at Farm Shows.

A spokesman for the church said, "These representative groups indicate the church's conviction that through a developed and coordinated program of activities, Christian education and worship it is fulfilling its mission of ministering to the physical and spiritual needs of its members and to the community."

The program will begin with choral selections of popular appeal by the choir. The choir will end its portion of the program in a gay carnival-like mood, thus setting the atmosphere for the clown and circus acts to follow.

The Tumbling Tumbliers will display their individual and combined skills which include trampoline, juggling, trapeze and high wire in the traditional style of the three-ring circus.

The public is invited to see these groups in the Health and Physical Education Building on the Maryville campus. There is no admission charge.

Editorial

A lack of responsibility

While it is difficult to criticize without the final product in hand, there is an air of incompetence surrounding the handling of this year's annual. The Chilhowean is in an almost irretrievable mess.

This year's annual was to be an entirely different creative concept. In a letter to the Highland Echo on Feb. 11 editor Tim Hodge said, "The yearbook hopes to present an artistic look at the 1972 college student." Somehow this creative idea was lost.

The failure of this year's Chilhowean seems to stem from a lack of personal responsibility. There must be freedom to create. Mr. Hodge had that. But without responsible use of freedom, creativity is lost. That seems to be the case with the Chilhowean.

This lack of personal responsibility has affected every member of Maryville College. Every student is out the several dollars that comes to the Chilhowean from activities fees. This fee appears to be abused if not squandered.

An annual, as we understand it, is a pictorial record. Without pictures of underclassmen, this record is no more. Without pictures of the people of MC, we'd best look elsewhere for such a record.

There's little point in further condemning Mr. Hodge for his incompetence. It would be comparable to locking the barn door after the horse is stolen. At this point, the best we'd hope for is that Mr. Hodge will begin to accept his responsibility to the College and get something published.

However, we'd hope that steps can be taken to prevent such irresponsibility from recurring in the future.
